HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JULY 26, 1956

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful and gracious God, Thou knowest that daily we are challenged by great issues and perplexing problems, but may we always meet them with courage and conviction and a splendor of faith that nothing can dim or eclipse.

Purge us from everything that dwarfs and dulls our capacity for noble service, and may our minds and hearts be impervious to all selfish desires.

Show us how we may build a more blessed social order and may we never be too callous to care, too blind to see, and too indifferent to heed the needs of humanity.

Help us to hasten the coming of that glorious day of prediction, when there shall be peace on earth and good will among men.

Hear us in the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

"SEC. 2. Chapter 17 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting at the end thereof, immediately following section 375, a new section reading as follows:

"'§ 376. Annuities to widows and surviving dependent children of judges.

"'(a) Any judge of the United States may by written election filed with the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts within six months after the date on which he takes office (or within six months after the enactment of this section) bring himself within the purview of this section.

"'(b) There shall be deducted and withheld from the salary of each judge electing to bring himself within the purview of this section a sum equal to 3 per centum of such judge's salary, including salary paid after retirement from regular active service under section 371 (b) or 372 (a) of this title or after retirement from office by resignation on salary under section 371 (a) of this title. The amounts so deducted and withheld from the salary of each such judge shall, in accordance with such procedure as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States, be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of a fund to be known as the "judicial survivors annuity fund" and said fund is appropriated for the payment of annuities, refunds and allowances as provided by this section. Every judge who elects to bring himself within the purview of this section shall be deemed thereby to consent and agree to the deductions from his salary as provided in this subsection, and payment less such deductions shall be a full and complete discharge and acquittance of all claims and demands whatsoever for all judicial services rendered by such judge during the period covered by such payment, except the right to the benefits to which he or his survivors shall be entitled under the provisions of this section.

"'(c) Each judge who has elected to bring himself within the purview of this section shall deposit, with interest at 4 per centum per annum to December 31, 1947, and 3 per centum per annum thereafter, compounded on December 31 of each year, to the credit of the judicial survivors annuity fund created by this section a sum equal to 3 per centum of his salary received for service as a judge of the United States (including salary received after retirement from regular active service under section 371 (b) or 372 (a) of this title and salary received after retirement from office by resignation on salary under section 371 (a) of this title), and of his basic salary, pay, or compensation for service as a Senator, Representative, Delegate or Resident Commissioner in Congress and for any other civilian service within the purview of section 707 of title 5. Such interest shall not be required for any period during which the judge was separated from all such service and was not receiving salary under section 371 (a) or 373 of this title. Each judge may elect to make such deposits in installments during the continuance of his judicial service in such amounts and under such conditions as may be determined in each instance by the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts. Notwithstanding the failure of a judge to make such deposit, credit shall be allowed for the service rendered, but the annuity of the widow of such judge shall be reduced by an amount equal to 10 per centum of the amount of such deposit, computed as of the date of the death of such judge, unless such widow shall elect to eliminate such service entirely from credit under subsection (o) of this section: Provided, That no deposit shall be required from a judge for any service rendered prior to August 1, 1920, or for any honorable service in the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States.

"'(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall invest from time to time, in interest-bearing securities of the United States or Federal farm loan bonds, such portions of the judicial survivors annuity fund as in his judgment may not be immediately required for the payment of annuities, refunds and allowances as provided in this section. The income derived from such investments shall constitute a part of said fund for the purpose of paying annuities and of carrying out the provisions of subsections (f), (g), (i), and (j) of this section.

"'(e) The amount deposited by or deducted and withheld from the salary of each judge electing to bring himself within the purview of this section for credit to the judicial survivors annuity fund created by this section covering service from and after August 1, 1920, shall be credited to an individual account of such judge.

"'(f) If any judge who has elected to bring himself within the purview of this section resigns from office otherwise than on salary under section 371 (a) of this title, the amount credited to his individual account, together with interest at 4 per centum per annum to December 31, 1947, and 3 per centum per annum, thereafter, compounded on December 31st of each year, to the date of his relinquishment of office, shall be returned to him.

"'(g) In case any judge who has elected to bring himself within the purview of this section shall die while in office (whether in regular active service or retired from such service under section 371 (b) or 372 (a) of this title), or after retirement from office by resignation on salary under section 371 (a) of this title, after having rendered at least five years of civilian service computed as prescribed in subsection (o) of this section, for the last five years of which the salary deductions provided for by subsection (b) of this section or the deposits required by subsection (c) of this section have actually been made—

"'(1) if such judge is survived by a widow but not by a dependent child, there shall be paid to such widow an annuity beginning with the day of the death of the judge or following the widow's attainment of the age of fifty years, whichever is the later, in an amount computed as provided in subsection (n) of this section; or

"'(2) if such judge is survived by a widow and a dependent child or children, there shall be paid to such widow an immediate annuity in an amount computed as provided in subsection (n) of this section, and there shall also be paid to or on behalf of each such child an immediate annuity equal to one-half the amount of the annuity of such widow, but not to exceed $900 per year, divided by the number of such children or $360 per year, whichever is lesser; or

"'(3) if such judge leaves no surviving widow or widower but leaves a surviving dependent child or children, there shall be paid to or on behalf of each such child an immediate annuity equal to the amount of the annuity to which such widow would have been entitled under paragraph (2) of this subsection had she survived, but not to exceed $480 per year.

"'The annuity payable to a widow under this subsection shall be terminable upon her death or remarriage. The annuity payable to a child under this subsection shall be terminable upon (A) his attaining the age of eighteen years, (B) his marriage, or (C) his death, whichever first occurs, except that if such child is incapable of self-support by reason of mental or physical disability his annuity shall be terminable only upon death, marriage, or recovery from such disability. In case of the death of a widow of a judge leaving a dependent child or children of the judge surviving her the annuity of such child or children shall be recomputed and paid as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection. In any case in which the annuity of a dependent child, under this subsection, is terminated, the annuities of any remaining dependent child or children, based upon the service of the same judge, shall be recomputed and paid as though the child whose annuity was so terminated had not survived such judge.

"'(h) As used in this section—

"'(1) The term "widow" means a surviving wife of an individual, who either (A) shall have been married to such individual for at least two years immediately preceding his death or (B) is the mother of issue by such marriage, and who has not remarried.

"'(2) The term "dependent child" means an unmarried child, including a dependent stepchild or an adopted child, who is under the age of eighteen years or who because of physical or mental disability is incapable of self-support.

"'Questions of dependency and disability arising under this section shall be determined by the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts subject to review only by the Judicial Conference of the United States the decision of which shall be final and conclusive. The Director may order or direct at any time such medical or other examinations as he shall deem necessary to determine the facts relative to the nature and degree of disability of any dependent child who is an annuitant or applicant for annuity under this section, and may suspend or deny any such annuity for failure to submit to any examination.

"'(i) In any case in which (1) a judge who has elected to bring himself within the purview of this section shall die while in office (whether in regular active service or retired from such service under section 371 (b) or 372 (a) of this title), or after retirement from office by resignation on salary under section 371 (a) of this title, before having rendered five years of civilian service computed as prescribed in subsection (o) of this section, or after having rendered five years of such civilian service but without a survivor or survivors entitled to annuity benefits provided by subsection (g) of this section, or (2) the right of all persons entitled to annuity under subsection (g) of this section based on the service of such judge shall terminate before a valid claim therefor shall have been established, the total amount credited to the individual account of such judge, with interest at 4 per centum per annum to December 31, 1947, and 3 per centum per annum, thereafter, compounded on December 31st of each year, to the date of the death of such judge, shall be paid, upon the establishment of a valid claim therefor, to the person or persons surviving at the date title to the payment arises, in the following order of precedence, and such payment shall be a bar to recovery by any other person:

"'First, to the beneficiary or beneficiaries whom the judge may have designated by a writing received by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts prior to his death;

"'Second, if there be no such beneficiary, to the widow of such judge;

"'Third, if none of the above, to the child or children of such judge and the descendants of any deceased children by representation;

"'Fourth, if none of the above, to the parents of such judge or the survivor of them;

"'Fifth, if none of the above, to the duly appointed executor or administrator of the estate of such judge;

"'Sixth, if none of the above, to such other next of kin of such judge as may be determined by the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts to be entitled under the laws of the domicile of such judge at the time of his death.

"'Determination as to the widow or child of a judge for the purposes of this subsection shall be made by the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts without regard to the definition of these terms stated in subsection (h) of this section.

"'(j) In any case in which the annuities of all persons entitled to annuity based upon the service of a judge shall terminate before the aggregate amount of annuity paid equals the total amount credited to the individual account of such judge, with interest at 4 per centum per annum to December 31, 1947, and 3 per centum per annum thereafter, compounded on December 31st of each year, to the date of the death of such judge, the difference shall be paid, upon establishment of a valid claim therefor, in the order of precedence prescribed in subsection (i) of this section.

"'(k) Any accrued annuity remaining unpaid upon the termination (other than by death) of the annuity of any person based upon the service of a judge shall be paid to such person. In the case of a judge of the United States as defined in section 451 of title 28, United States Code, who dies within 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act after having rendered at least 5 years of civilian service computed as prescribed in subsection (o) of section 376 of title 28, United States Code, as added by section 2 of this Act, but without having made an election as provided in such section 376 to bring himself within the purview of that section, an annuity shall be paid to his widow and surviving dependent children as provided in such section 376 as if such judge had elected on the day of his death to bring himself within the purview of such section 376 but had not made the deposit provided for by subsection (c) of the said section. STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11124) to amend title 28, United States Code, to provide for the payment of annuities to widows and dependent children of judges, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate passed the House bill but amended it by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting its own provision as a complete substitute. The House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate and insisted upon its version and requested a conference to which the Senate agreed.

The conference report recommends that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and to agree to the same with amendment, the amendment being to insert in lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment the matter agreed to by the conference, and the House agree thereto.

In substance the conference report contains the language of the bill as it passed the House except in a few instances. Both the House and Senate versions differed in only five points.

The first point in dispute was the rate of contribution which an eligible judge should make from his salary into the fund. The House version provided for a rate of 1½ percent of such judge's salary, while the Senate version fixed the rate at 3 percent. The conference accepted the Senate version and fixed the rate at 3 percent.

The second point at variance was the length of service required of a judge in order that his widow might qualify for an annuity. The House version provided that the judge should render at least 5 years of civilian service, which service would include service as a member of the legislative, executive, or judicial branch of the Federal Government. The Senate version required that a judge serve 5 years as a judge of the United States as defined in section 451 of title 28, United States Code. The conference adopted a 5-year service provision and further provided that it include civilian service as provided for in the House version. However, such service must be covered either by salary deductions or by deposits covering previous Federal civilian service.

The House version provided that in a case where a judge left no surviving widow or widower but did leave a surviving dependent child or children, the maximum amount that such child or children could receive was $480 per year per child, or a gross maximum of $1,200 per year, divided by the number of such children, whichever was the lesser. The Senate version provided for a maximum of $480 per year for each child. The conference adopted the language of the Senate and fixed the maximum for each child at $480 per year.

The House version provided that if a judge failed to make the required deposit to cover previous allowable Federal service, credit would be allowed for that service but the annuity of the widow of such judge would be reduced by an amount equal to 10 percent of the amount of such deposit, computed as the date of the death of such judge, unless such widow should elect to eliminate such service entirely from credit in calculating the amount of the annuity to be paid. The Senate version contained no such a provision to cover credit for previously rendered service, unless the required deposit was paid into the fund for all previously rendered service. The conference adopted the language of the House bill with regard to this particular provision.

The House version also provided for annuities for living widows of a judge who had died prior to the enactment of this act. The provision further provided that such widow would be eligible regardless of the length of service rendered by the deceased judge. The Senate version contained no such a provision to cover the case of living widows of deceased Federal judges. The conference adopted the language of the House bill and also provided that annuity should be payable regardless of the requirements that a judge either have rendered 5 years of allowable civilian service or to have served less than the 5 years as a judge but to have paid back into the fund the required deposits for previously rendered service. Thus the language adopted by the conference would cover all cases of living widows of Federal judges who died prior to the enactment of the act.

Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11124) to amend title 28, United States Code, to provide for the payment of annuities to widows and dependent children of judges, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman to explain what changes have been made in this bill.

Mr. CELLER. The House bill was practically accepted in its entirety, with one major exception, namely, that the contribution to be made by the judges to the annuity fund for their dependents was increased from the House provision of 1.5 to 3 percent.

Otherwise practically the entire bill was accepted.

Mr. GROSS. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that they are at least paying something toward annuities for their dependents.

Mr. CELLER. Yes; I will say to the gentleman that the 3 percent practically keeps the Government in the black on the matter of the payment of annuities to dependents of the deceased judges.

Mr. GROSS. I appreciate the gentleman's statement.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that the other body took expeditious action on this most meritorious measure. The beneficiary of this bill was a high-ranking official in the Soviet Union, and had an important task cut out for him in the international Communist conspiracy. Showing great courage and considerable sacrifice, he came over to our side and provided United States Government agencies with information of tremendous value in our fight against the mortal danger presented by international communism.

Mr. Khokhlov has well deserved asylum in this country. He has been very helpful to committees of the Congress and is continuing extensive activities in enlightening the American people to the danger they face, disclosing the ominous nature of international communism and the foul dealings of Soviet agents in this country and abroad.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COLIN STAM AND THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that this year is the 30th anniversary of the organization of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. That committee was organized under the Revenue Act of 1926. During all the years following its organization the staff of that committee has most ably assisted all Members of Congress, as well as the Committee on Ways and Means of the House and the Committee on Finance of the Senate with respect to legislative tax proposals. I am sure that there are many Members of Congress who can vouch for the fine service they have received from that staff. Since July 1, 1938, the committee staff has been headed by Mr. Colin F. Stam, who has at all times given us impartial and valuable technical advice and service on tax problems. Mr. Stam in his capacity as chief of staff of that committee has also assisted both the Ways and Means Committees of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate in the preparation of tax legislation. The joint committee staff has become an institution and has been recognized both here and abroad as a necessary adjunct of the legislative process. It is with a note of sadness that I have seen recently a tendency on the part of a very few to imply criticism of this great staff. The staff is now accepted by most of us as an inherent part of our legislative system.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that Members of the House who have received such splendid service from this able staff will resent any effort to belittle its work or to attack its integrity or impartiality. I wish to salute this staff for its fine work and to express the hope that it will continue to operate and perform the same service as it has in the past. Let us do nothing which may have a tendency to weaken the effectiveness of that staff.

T. MILLET HAND,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to state for the record that I have signed this conference report not because it meets with my personal views but because I believe it is the best conference report that apparently can be obtained under the circumstances.

I want to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY], the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FENTON], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD], have all signed this report as managers on the part of the House, specifically taking exception to the decision reached under Amendment No. 2.

Amendment No. 2 is the amendment which fixes the amount of military assistance to be made available to our military allies, and it fixes it at just about a billion dollars or 33⅓ percent below the amount originally requested by the President.

Mr. Speaker, Admiral Radford has stated that a cut of $1 billion would result in the reduction in the military program for Europe of $600 million; in the Korean military program of 23 percent; in the Formosa military program of 14 percent; in the Pakistan military program of 27 percent; in the Turkish military program of 24 percent; and in the Greek military program of 22 percent, as well as eliminating one-half of the sum requested for the advanced weapons program, considered vital at this time by the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to share in the responsibility for that action. I think we are taking an unwarranted gamble in the field of national security. I regret the decision that has been made.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, as pointed out by the gentleman from Massachusetts, there were 5 members of the conference committee from the House who did not agree to amendment No. 2. It should be pointed out, in addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts, that if this conference report is approved the President's original request for both economic and military aid will be cut approximately 20 percent. The reduction in the military figure itself will be approximately 33 percent. In my opinion, this reduction in the military aid portion of the program results in a very calculated risk, one which I think we are taking very unwisely. I wish to reemphasize my objection to the figure that was agreed to by the conferees. Every military leader who appeared before the mutual security subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations indicated that if a substantial reduction was made—and I repeat, a 33 percent cut was made—we would have to revise our own military plans and programs in all parts of the world.

It seems to me that we should reasonably abide by the recommendations of the military experts. In this case we are not. In my judgment, it is a very serious calculated risk. As I said, I wish to reemphasize my opposition to the amount which was agreed upon for military aid and assistance. In my judgment, the figure that was included in the Senate version was far more preferable to what we finally agreed to in conference.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GROSS].

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to ask the gentleman to tell us specifically the increase over the amount authorized in the bill when it left the House?

Mr. PASSMAN. I may say the gentleman from Iowa that the total increase over the House authorization bill amounts to $11,595,000. The conference report is $344,355,000 below the amounts appropriated by the other body.

Mr. GROSS. How much new money is contained in this bill?

Mr. PASSMAN. The total amount of new money is $3,766,570,000.

Mr. GROSS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this conference report and I am opposed to these continued increases in foreign aid spending. This Nation of ours has $768 billion of public and private debt. With the $6 billion to $7 billion already in the pipeline for foreign handouts there should not have been a single new dollar appropriated for this purpose.

In addition to the $768 billion of public and private debt in this country, we are in arrears, for instance, in our contribution to the Federal employees retirement fund to the extent of $13,800,000,000. To make the Federal employees retirement fund actuarially sound today would call for an appropriation of $6 billion.

This bill is one of the contributing factors to the inflation we have and if this Nation is forced into financial bankruptcy this kind of spending will be one of the reasons.

I am opposed to any further appropriations for foreign aid, this foreign WPA extravaganza, with the billions already in the pipeline.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I was going to extend my remarks at some length on this bill, but the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] stated my position clearly and adequately, and at this point I wish to embrace and concur in the remarks on this report made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PASSMAN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 8, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert ": Provided, That at least $50,000,000 on a grant basis shall be available for Spain, exclusive of interregional expenses: Provided further, That not less than $18,500,000 of the amount available for Spain shall be used for agricultural commodities."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

"SEC. 107. The Congress hereby reiterates its opposition to the seating in the United Nations of the Communist China regime as the representative of China, and it is hereby declared to be the continuing sense of the Congress that the Communist regime in China has not demonstrated its willingness to fulfill the obligations contained in the Charter of the United Nations and should not be recognized to represent China in the United Nations. In the event of the seating of representatives of the Chinese Communist regime in the Security Council or General Assembly of the United Nations, the President is requested to inform the Congress insofar as is compatible with the requirements of national security, of the implications of this action upon the foreign policy of the United States and our foreign relationships, including that created by membership in the United Nations, together with any recommendations which he may have with respect to the matter."

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the several motions was laid on the table.

SUSPEND THE APPLICATION OF CERTAIN FEDERAL LAWS WITH RESPECT TO PERSONNEL EMPLOYED BY THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution (H. J. Res. 695) to suspend the application of certain Federal laws with respect to personnel employed by the House Committee on Ways and Means in connection with the investigations ordered by House Resolution 331 and House Resolution 606, 84th Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That service or employment of any person as an attorney, accountant, expert, or professional staff member in assisting the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, in the investigations authorized by House Resolution 331 and House Resolution 606, 84th Congress, shall not be considered as service or employment bringing such person within the provisions of section 281, 283, or 284 of title 18 of the United States Code, or of any other Federal law imposing restrictions, requirements, or penalties in relation to the employment of persons, the performance of services, or the payment or receipt of compensation in connection with any claim, proceeding, or matter involving the United States.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RETURN OF ENROLLED HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Con. Res. 271) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman the grounds of his objection to the bill, to see if we cannot reach some agreement in regard to it? It has been passed over on the Consent Calendar on 4 or 5 successive calendar days.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. As far as the objectors are concerned, the basis of our request that it be passed over is the fact that there is an adverse report on the bill from the Civil Service Commission. Under those circumstances it certainly does not seem right that the bill be passed under unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

(6) the period during which the proposed withdrawal or reservation will continue in effect;

(7) whether, and if so to what extent, the proposed use will affect continuing full operation of the public land laws and Federal regulations relating to conservation, utilization, and development of mineral resources, timber and other material resources, grazing resources, fish and wildlife resources, water resources, and scenic, wilderness, and recreation and other values; and

(8) if effecting the purpose for which the area is proposed to be withdrawn or reserved will involve the use of water in any State lying wholly or in part west of the 98th meridian, whether, subject to existing rights under law, the intended using agency has acquired, or proposes to acquire, rights to the use thereof in conformity with State laws and procedures relating to the control, appropriations, use, and distribution of water.

SEC. 4. (a) The Secretary of each military department, under regulations prescribed by him, and approved by the Secretary of Defense, shall, with respect to each military installation or facility under the jurisdiction of his department—

(1) require that all hunting, trapping, and fishing at the installation or facility be in accordance with the fish and game laws of the State or Territory in which it is located;

(2) require that licenses for hunting, trapping, or fishing be obtained from the State or Territory in which such installation or facility is located. With respect to members of the Armed Forces, such license will be required if such State or Territory authorizes the issuance of a license to a member of the Armed Forces on bona fide military duty for not less than 30 days at any installation or facility therein, without regard to residence requirements, and upon terms no less favorable than those terms upon which such a license is issued to residence of such State or Territories; and

(3) develop, subject to any requirements of safety or military security, in cooperation with the Governor (or his designee) of the State or Territory in which the installation or facility is located, procedures under which designated fish and game or conservation officials of that State or Territory may, at such time and under such conditions as may be agreed upon, have full access to that installation or facility to effect measures for the management, conservation, and harvesting of fish and game resources.

(b) Whoever is guilty of an act or omission which violates a requirement prescribed by the Secretary of a military department under subsection (a) (1) or (2) of this section, which act or omission would be punishable if committed or omitted within the jurisdiction of the State or Territory in which the installation or facility is located by the laws thereof in force at the time of such act or omission, shall be guilty of a like offense and subject to a like punishment.

(c) This section does not modify any rights granted by treaty or otherwise to any Indian tribe or to the members thereof.

SEC. 5. The Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (63 Stat. 377), as amended, is hereby further amended by revising section 3 (d) to read as follows:

"(d) The term 'property' means any interest in property except (1) the public domain; lands reserved or dedicated for national forest or national park purposes; minerals in lands or portions of lands withdrawn or reserved from the public domain which the Secretary of the Interior determines are suitable for disposition under the public land mining and mineral leasing laws; and lands withdrawn or reserved from the public domain except lands or portions of lands so withdrawn or reserved which the Secretary of the Interior, with the concurrence of the Administrator, determines are not suitable for return to the public domain for disposition under the general public-land laws because such lands are substantially changed in character by improvements; (2) naval vessels of the following categories: Battleships, cruisers, aircraft carriers, destroyers, and submarines; and (3) records of the Federal Government."

SEC. 6. All withdrawals and reservations of public land for the use of any agency of the Department of Defense, heretofore or hereafter made by the United States, shall be deemed to be subject to the condition that all minerals in the lands so withdrawn or reserved are under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior and no disposition shall be made of minerals in such lands except under the applicable public-land mining and mineral leasing laws: Provided, That nothing in this section shall apply to lands withdrawn or reserved specifically as naval petroleum, naval oil shale, or naval coal reserves.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues from the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs in urging enactment of H. R. 12185, a bill having the identical purpose as my bill, H. R. 10394, which was considered concurrently with the reported measure.

Pennsylvania—through its fish and game commissions, and through numerous conservation organizations and private citizens—was in the forefront of the 39 States which officially endorsed this legislation through their official agencies.

So that the record will be complete, I wish to point out, through a section-by-section analysis, a detailed explanation of the bill's provisions.

SECTION 1—BASIC PURPOSE

Section 1 of the reported measure deals with the withdrawal and reservation for, restriction of, and utilization by, the Department of Defense for defense purposes of the public lands of the United States.

This section declares that, notwithstanding any other provisions of law—except in time of war or national emergency declared by the President or the Congress—the provisions of the act will take effect upon enactment. Lands and waters included within the scope of the bill include: public lands of the United States; public lands of the Territory of Alaska; Federal lands and waters of the outer Continental Shelf, as defined in section 2 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act—in 67th United States Statutes at Large, page 462—and Federal lands and waters off the coast of the Territory of Alaska.

The committee, in employing the term "public lands," intends it to apply in its technical or legal sense, as distinguished from "reserved public lands" or "withdrawn public lands," and "acquired public lands." It should be noted that section 1 makes clear the application of the provisions to all public lands—as defined therein, and in this report—but does not preclude application of some of the provisions of the bill to other real property owned or controlled by the United States.

It will presently be seen that all or parts of section 4, section 5, and section 6 apply not only to public lands, but to certain other Federal real property as well.

SECTION 2—ACREAGE LIMIT

Section 2 contains the basic provision of the bill, which establishes a requirement that withdrawals or reservations of more than 5,000 acres in the aggregate for defense purposes may hereafter be made only by act of Congress.

The section contains language which would preclude the making of a number of cumulative withdrawals, each for less than 5,000 acres, where all would be used for any one defense project or facility of the Department of Defense.

Testimony of witnesses for the Department of the Interior made it clear that the great majority of individual applications for any one project or facility in fact involve lands of less than 5,000 acres, and as may be noted below, the Department of Defense in its report does not object to this section of the act. In testimony given subsequent to the receipt of the Defense Department report, witnesses for the Department of Defense directly negatived a question as to whether the 5,000-acre breaking-point in the bill would unduly hamper or interfere with carrying out of the defense mission.

SECTION 3—APPLICATION

Section 3 would lay a more adequate base for fully determining at the local level and for congressional consideration the resource impact of proposed withdrawals.

Defense agencies would continue to file applications for withdrawal or reservation of public lands with the appropriate local land office of the Bureau of Land Management, or with the Department of the Interior, just as is done under present procedure. Continuance of this procedure would accomplish the same dual effect achieved by existing practices: First, the recordation of the application in the appropriate office has the effect of segregating, temporarily, the lands requested from all forms of entry under the lands laws, thus serves as a sound antispeculation measure; second, continuance of existing procedure would provide notice at the local and State level—through requisite Federal Register publication and/or press releases issued by Bureau of Land Management State supervisors—that the application had been made.

Thereafter, if the aggregate acreage of public lands included within the proposed withdrawal or reservation falls within the requirements of H. R. 12185 as evidenced by the public lands records maintained by the Department of the Interior, the Department of the Interior would then develop, for transmission to the Congress, proposed legislation having as its purpose effecting the withdrawal requested, and containing such provisions for continued operation of the public lands laws within the area proposed to be withdrawn as may be determined to be compatible with the intended military use.

To achieve these objectives, section 3 would require applications to specify, in addition to the name of the requesting agency, using agency location and description of boundaries of the area, and gross acreage involved: the purpose or purposes—unless classified for national security reasons—for which the area is proposed to be withdrawn; whether contamination will result, and if so, whether such contamination will be permanent or temporary; the extent, if any, to which the proposed use will affect full operation of the public land laws and Federal regulations relating to conservation, utilization, and development of mineral resources, timber, and other material resources, grazing resources, fish and wildlife resources, water resources, scenic, wilderness, recreational and other values; and, if the area to be withdrawn involves the use of water in any State lying in whole or in part west of the 98th meridian—that is, the reclamation States—the agency would be required to state whether, subject to existing rights under law, it has acquired or intends to acquire rights to the use of the water in conformity with State laws and procedures relating to the control, appropriation, use, and distribution of water.

Relating to these requirements in the proposed bill to the findings of the committee, as set out hereinbefore, should make abundantly clear the reasons why they are included, and the results the committee believes will be achieved.

One observation needs to be made: the record made by the committee suggests that applicant defense agencies have tended to turn to the clause "if the purpose or purposes are classified for national security reasons" as a device to relieve them of the burden of making known the general purpose for which such areas are to be withdrawn. It does not appear that such generalized terms as "gunnery range," "bombing range," "missiles range," and the like would seriously threaten the national security, particularly when the areas involved may range from 1,500 to 3,000 square miles in area, an area of such size that it simply cannot be subtly and deftly removed from the operation of the public lands laws without generating substantial local interest, and interest of the State or Territory affected.

SECTION 4—FISH AND GAME LAWS

Section 4 has as its objective substantially reducing the areas of present and continuing conflict between State and Territorial officials and the commanding officers of military installations and facilities involving the management, conservation, and harvesting of fish and game recourse, and the enforcement of fish and game laws of the State or Territory within military installations or facilities.

This section, as was noted in the comments on section 1, applies not only to reserved public land reservations, but to acquired lands as well; its broad purpose is to make State hunting, fishing, and trapping laws applicable as Federal laws on all military installations.

Section 4 (a) (1) would require that all hunting, trapping, and fishing on all military installations and facilities—including those falling presently within the "exclusive Federal jurisdiction" status—be in accordance with the fish and game laws of the State or Territory in which such lands are located. It would require that State or Territorial licenses be obtained for hunting, trapping, and fishing on such areas if local law (i. e., State or Territorial law) authorizes license issuance to Armed Forces members on bona fide military duty for not less than 30 days at any installation within the State or Territory involved, without regard to residence requirements, and upon terms no less favorable than those upon which such a license is issued to residents.

This subsection anticipates affirmative action being taken by some States before hunting, trapping, or fishing within such reservations must be licensed by State law; it does not anticipate that for such activities outside such reservations the same preferred treatment must be afforded military personnel. Since subparagraph (1) of section 4 (a) requires that all hunting, trapping, and fishing at the installation or facility be in accordance with the fish and game laws of the State or Territory in which it is located, the clear intent is that such activities can be conducted if at all, only in accordance with State law relating to season and bag limits, methods of taking, etc., even though the military personnel are not required to comply with State licensing requirements within the reservation because of the State's failure to establish preferential treatment with respect to residence.

In other words, hunting within all such reservations—with or without State provisions establishing preferred military treatment—can only be conducted after the effective date of the act, if in compliance with State fish and game laws, excepting licensing. The State may or may not provide for preferred treatment outside such reservations to be assured State licensing within such reservations, if the State has met the residence waiver requirements of this subparagraph.

Possible dual construction of the clause "for not less than 30 days" deserves clarifying comment: if an individual is actually assigned on bona fide military duty by orders providing for duty status at the installation involved, so that his orders require his presence at the installation for a minimum of 30 days, he would then be eligible for a license under the preferred status provisions when first physically present for duty on such orders.

Subsection 4 (a) (3) mandates the Secretary of Defense, in cooperation with the appropriate governor or his designee, and subject to safety and military security requirements, to develop procedures whereby State or Territorial fish and game or conservation officials may have full access thereto "to effect measures for the management, conservation, and harvesting of fish and game resources."

The quoted language anticipates not only that the obvious results will be achieved, but the possibility that—in areas where insufficient military personnel are present to adequately enforce fish and game laws, such as the case at Camp McCoy, Wis., referred to above—State game officials may be deputized as Federal marshals to assure adequate enforcement.

Subsection 4 (b) provides that violations of the State and Territorial fish and game laws made applicable to military installations and facilities are violations of Federal law, and subject to like punishment as though committed or omitted within the State or Territorial jurisdiction.

Lastly, subsection 4 (c) specifically recites that rights granted by treaty or otherwise to any Indian tribe or members thereof are not modified by the provisos dealing with fishing, trapping, and hunting.

SECTION 5—MINERAL LANDS, SURPLUS PROPERTY DISPOSITION

Section 5 would amend in two particulars the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (63 Stat. 377), as amended.

First, it would except from the real property-disposition provisions of the 1949 act, minerals in withdrawn or reserved public domain lands which the Secretary of the Interior determines are suitable for disposition under the public land mining and mineral leasing laws.

Second, it amends the 1949 act to provide that only those withdrawn or reserved public domain lands surplus to the needs of Federal agencies found by the Secretary of the Interior—with the concurrence of the Administrator of General Services—not suitable for restoration to public land status by virtue of their having been substantially changed in character by improvements, would hereafter be subject to the real property disposition provisions of the amended 1949 act.

Both of these amendments would clarify the operation of existing law; one would make it clear that only when determined by the Secretary to be not suitable for mining or mineral leasing purposes would the mineral estate pass with the title to the surface estate being disposed of under surplus property provisions; the other would reverse the roles of the Secretary and the Administrator so as to provide that the Secretary would make an initial judgment of the nature with which his Department is most familiar—suitability of lands for public land uses, a traditional Interior function—and if the Administrator concurs in a finding of nonsuitability, the lands would be disposed of as surplus.

SECTION 6—OIL, GAS, AND MINERALS DISPOSITION

Finally, the reported measure provides, in section 6, that all minerals in withdrawn or reserved public lands—except lands withdrawn or reserved specifically as naval petroleum, naval oil shale, or naval coal reserves—are under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, and that no disposition thereof shall be made except under the applicable public land mining and mineral leasing laws.

Enactment of this section into law actually constitutes a restatement of the law as it is today, in the view of the committee and the Department of the Interior. In short, as declared above, the provisions of section 6 of the reported bill will serve to remove whatever doubts may exist, if any, as to the laws which govern the disposal of any and all minerals, including oil and gas, in public lands of the United States heretofore or hereafter withdrawn or reserved by the United States for the use of defense agencies.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 12185, the reported measure, is a clean bill I introduced, after consideration by the committee of H. R. 10371, together with 12 other bills having an identical purpose. I believe reference to those bills and to their authors will suffice to indicate the widespread support for this legislation among Members of the House.

Bills having the same purpose as H. R. 12185, include H. R. 10362, by Rpresentative ASPINALL, of Colorado; H. R. 10366, by Delegate BARTLETT, of Alaska; H. R. 10367, by Representative BUDGE, of Idaho; H. R. 10372, by Representative FERNANDEZ, of New Mexico; H. R. 10377, by Representative METCALF, of Montana; H. R. 10380, by Representative PFOST, of Idaho; H. R. 10384, by Representative ROGERS of Texas; H. R. 10394, by Representative SAYLOR, of Pennsylvania; H. R. 10396, by Representative UDALL, of Arizona; H. R. 10548, by Representative YOUNG, of Nevada; H. R. 10725, by Represenative COON, of Oregon; and H. R. 11001, by Representative JOHNSON of Wisconsin.

PURPOSE OF H. R. 12185

Broadly stated, H. R. 12185 has as its purpose and objective returning to the Congress in one major respect—land use for defense purposes—the direct exercise of the responsibility fixed by the Federal Constitution in the legislative branch for effecting policies and procedures assuring maximum public benefit through multiple resource utilization of the public lands and other real property of the United States.

Specifically, the reported measure deals with the withdrawal and reservation for, restriction of, and utilization by, the Department of Defense for defense purposes of the public lands of the United States and Alaska, the outer Continental Shelf lands of the United States, and Federal lands and waters off the coast of Alaska. If the reported bill is enacted, such proposed uses by agencies of the Department of Defense involving more than 5,000 acres for any one project or facility could only be effectuated—notwithstanding any other provisions of law, except in time of war or national emergency declared by the President or the Congress—after compliance with its terms, and after approval of such proposals by specific act of Congress.

H. R. 12185, in addition, would set out clear-cut statutory requirements for the utilization and disposition of certain of the resources found within existing and future military installations and facilities so as to assure highest and best management, conservation, utilization, and development thereof on a continuing basis. To achieve these objectives, first, the bill would lay a more adequate base for fully determining at the local level and for congressional consideration the resource impact of proposed withdrawals; second, H. R. 12185, if enacted, would substantially reduce the areas of present and continuing conflict between State and Territorial officials and the commanding officers of military installations and facilities involving the management, conservation, and harvesting of fish and game resources, and the enforcement of fish and game laws within military installations and facilities; third, the bill would amend in two particulars the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (63 Stat. 377), as amended, so as to clarify operations thereunder involving the disposition of the mineral estate in withdrawn or reserved public domain lands, and to redefine the responsibility of the Secretary of the Interior with respect to disposition of public lands withdrawn or reserved and subsequently declared excess to the needs of Federal agencies; and, fourth, the bill's provisions would remove whatever doubts may exist, if any, as to the laws which govern the disposal of any and all minerals, including oil and gas, in public lands of the United States heretofor or hereafter withdrawn or reserved by the United States for the use of Defense agencies.

APPLICATION REQUIREMENTS

The first of these objectives would be accomplished by continuing in effect—but by redefining the requirements—the present procedure whereby the requesting defense agency files an application with the appropriate land office of the Bureau of Land Management, Department of the Interior, for withdrawal, restriction, or reservation of a specified area. Such applications for use of areas embraced within the terms of the bill will hereafter be required to specify: The name of the requesting and intended using agency; the location and gross and net acreage involved; purpose or purposes of the withdrawal, restriction, or reservation; whether contamination will result from the proposed use or uses; use period; effect of use on continuing full operation of the public land laws, and full resources utilization, management, and development; and the relationship of the proposed use to laws and procedures of the States of the reclamation west relating to the control, appropriation, use, and distribution of water.

HUNTING AND FISHING PROVISIONS

To accomplish the second objective, with respect to all military installations and facilities, the bill would require that hunting, trapping, and fishing thereon be in accordance with the fish and game laws of the State or Territory in which such areas are located; and that State or Territorial licenses be obtained for hunting, trapping, and fishing thereon if local law authorizes their issuance to Armed Forces members on bona fide military duty for not less than 30 days at any installation within the State or Territory involved, without regard to residence requirements, and upon terms no less favorable than those upon which such a license is issued to residents.

Further, the bill would mandate the Secretary of Defense, in cooperation with the appropriate governor or his designee and subject to safety and military-security requirements, to develop procedures whereby State or Territorial fish and game or conservation officials may have full access thereto to effect measures for the management, conservation, and harvesting of fish and game resources.

By the terms of the bill, violations of the State and Territorial fish and game laws made applicable to military installations and faciilties are made violations of Federal law, and subject to like punishment as though committed or omitted within the State or Territorial jurisdiction.

The bill specifically recites that rights granted by treaty or otherwise to any Indian tribe or members thereof are not modified by the provisions dealing with fishing, trapping, and hunting.

MINERAL LANDS AND SURPLUS REAL PROPERTY

The third objective would be accomplished by amending the amended Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 to: make it clear that minerals in withdrawn or reserved public domain lands which the Secretary of the Interior determines are suitable for disposition under the public land mining and mineral leasing laws are excepted from the real property disposition provisions of the amended 1949 act; similarly, only those withdrawn or reserved public domain lands excess to the needs of Federal agencies found by the Secretary—with the concurrence of the Administrator of General Services—not suitable for restoration to public-land status, by virtue of their having been substantially changed in character by improvements, would hereafter be subject to the real property disposition provisions of the amended 1949 act.

OIL, GAS, AND MINERALS DISPOSITION

Finally, the reported bill would accomplish the fourth objective by declaring that all minerals in withdrawn or reserved public lands except lands withdrawn or reserved specifically as naval petroleum, naval oil shale, or naval coal reserves—are under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, and that no disposition thereof shall be made except under "the applicable public land mining and mineral leasing laws."

Adoption of this provision, as indicated above, will set at rest any doubts as to congressional policy of long standing—as expressed in the mining laws of 1872, as amended, and the 1914 and 1920 Mineral Leasing Acts and related laws—with respect to orderly disposition of the mineral resources, including oil and gas, of the public lands.

COMMITTEE CONCLUSION, RECOMMENDATION

In recommending immediate favorable action on H. R. 12185, Mr. Speaker, I speak for the committee, for myself, and for thousands of our conservation-minded citizens when I reiterate what our committee has said before. The program for the defense of our Nation's human and natural resources should not—and must not—be so conducted as to destroy the very resources it is aimed at preserving.

H. R. 12185 is a bill for the recapture by the Congress of a degree of those powers which the executive branch of the Government has acquired over a long period of years with respect to utilization of this Nation's most valuable assets, the human and natural resources of the public lands.

Its early enactment will operate to return to the legislative branch the degree of control the committee believes necessary to assure that defense use of the public lands presently held will more nearly conform to long-established maximum public multiple resource use policy, and will make certain that future public lands acquisition by the military will be so conditioned as to assure conformance with the same policy.

The positions of the Departments of Defense and the Interior, as well as General Services Administration, as indicated on pages 42 and 43 of the committee report, House Report 2856, are generally without objection to the reported bill. With respect to the asserted objection of Defense to the committee amendment bringing outer Continental Shelf defense restrictions within the purview of the congressional review required by the bill, it should be noted that the Bureau of the Budget cleared a statement presented by Interior witnesses in support of that amendment; further, as we have observed in the report that any move to restrict petroleum exploration and development of shelf resources dictates a combined approach by the Congress and the executive branch, and not simply unilateral executive action.

This legislation is landmark legislation; it will have a far-reaching effect in the direction of wiser conservation, development, and utilization of invaluable resources belonging to the people of the United States.

The House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs unanimously recommends enactment of H. R. 12185. I support it as a Californian, and as a matter of vital interest to the citizens of my State; I urge the support of the entire Congress, since it is legislation of paramount importance to the entire Nation, to today's citizens, and tomorrow's citizens.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, during the past 6 months, conducted a series of exhaustive hearings into the policies and procedures affecting the withdrawal and utilization of the public lands of the United States. It became evident, very early, that the question of lands held and used by the Department of Defense alone would require all of the time we could devote to the subject during this Congress.

The reported legislation was developed and introduced at the midpoint in these proceedings, which consumed 18 days of hearings, hundreds of additional man-hours of committee member and staff research and work, and resulted in the 25,000-word report on H. R. 12185, House Report 2856.

I believe that the RECORD should contain a summary of the committee's findings with respect to matters so vital to the people of my own State of Colorado, and to the Nation.

SUMMARY OF COMMITTEE FINDINGS

On the record made, and on the testimony, statements, and departmental reports received, the following conclusions are indicated:

1. DEFENSE DEPARTMENT CONTROL PROCEDURES

That the matter of the Department of the Navy's requests in 1953 and 1955 for joint use with the Air Force of the 3.5-million acre Nellis-Tonopah range in southern Nevada, the Air Force turndown of that request on an asserted "Air Force saturation use" basis, the activities of the Navy in pumping funds into the Fallon Naval Auxiliary Air Station in northwest-central Nevada prior to reasonable assurance that public land range facilities would be available in proximity to Fallon NAAS, the Air Force decision to declare more than 2 million acres at Nellis-Tonopah range surplus to their needs when pressed by the committee to justify their further retention, and the Navy's immediate assertion that such Air Force action was "too late" if the $16 million Federal investment at Fallon was to be protected—all reflect what can only be labeled an inexcusable deficiency in the control procedures established by Defense to assure conformity with its directives relating to public-land acquisition and utilization.

The record strongly suggests that since post-World War II neither on an intra-military department basis, nor on a coordinated inter-Defense Department basis—at least insofar as public lands acquisition policy is involved—has there been sufficient long-range planning and detailed periodic review fundamental to any program aimed at economic real property utilization. The Defense Department directive of August 27, 1955, on paper, constitutes a salutary step in the direction bringing Defense utilization of public lands of the United States more nearly into line with the long-standing congressional policies involving public lands management and use.

Until reports from all military departments have been received by Defense purusant to the August 27, 1955, directive, fully evaluated, and related to present holdings, and to pending and proposed applications, the committee believes that no additional public land acquisitions for military purposes should be effected, except in cases of most urgent necessity, and then subject to findings thereafter made.

2. DEFENSE DEPARTMENT UTILIZATION REVIEW

The approval by the individual military departments, and subsequently by the Department of Defense, of applications now pending in the Department of the Interior for withdrawal of an additional 8 million acres of public lands—when neither the requesting agency nor the Defense Department had in hand any utilization records on more than 25 million acres of existing holdings necessary to approval or disapproval—is inexplicable, and cannot be viewed as justification of the need for additional lands.

The history of practices indulged in by the defense agencies with respect to public lands acquisition dictates early congressional action on legislation having as its purpose recapturing the power of Congress under the property clause.

3. REVIEW BY MILITARY DEPARTMENTS

The committee findings set out in the foregoing are, it appears, equally applicable to the Departments of the Army, Air Force, and Navy. In fact, no good reason presents itself for the Defense Department to consider a request for approval of proposed land acquisition in the absence of a showing that the requesting military department has instituted and enforced such control procedures as will fully justify continued retention of existing holdings, and thus relate existing holdings to proposed acquisitions.

4. DEFENSE HOLDINGS AND MULTIPLE-RESOURCE USE

The committee record makes it clear that the policy of defense agencies has been, almost without exception where public lands are involved, to insist on withdrawals of huge practice or training ranges from all forms of public use. Further, it is clear this is done notwithstanding the fact that in many instances substantial multiple-resource utilization and development would be entirely compatible with the proposed military use, with the result that vast mineral, grazing, timber and other materials, fish and wildlife, and water resources, together with wilderness, scenic, and recreation values, are locked up—with consequent local impact and attendant diminution or destruction of valuable public resource assets.

The tentative agreement of the Navy to permit very substantial multiple-resource activity within the proposed 2.8-million-acre Black Rock-Sahwave gunnery range Nevada withdrawal—if the withdrawal order which may be written incorporates with precision the conditions and limitations of use—reflects, in the view of the committee, an immense stride in the right direction. That the original Navy intent, and desire, was to close the area to all forms of public use, however, would seem to very adequately point up the problem facing the Congress. That the Navy's "agreement" was arrived at only after hundreds of hearing man-hours and staff work had been devoted to its particulars, also suggests that the legislative branch can have no assurance that executive agencies will employ a maximum multiple resource use approach unless Congress, by statute, establishes clear-cut and mandatory conditions precedent to finalizing of any major withdrawals of public lands for defense, or other purposes.

5. FISH, GAME, AND WILDLIFE RESOURCES

We have stated in our report accompanying H. R. 12185 that the record made by the committee conclusively establishes these points: That the existence of huge Federal military reservations containing extensive fish, game, and wildlife resources and the activities of military personnel thereon has given rise to violate objections on the part of local officials with respect to activities countenanced therein; that on too many such areas the State fish and game laws and implementing regulations fixing seasons, bag limits, methods and times of capture, and similar limitations, have been totally or largely ignored; that State fish and game conservation officials have routinely been denied access to millions of acres of public lands within military reservations for the purpose of effecting measures for the conservation and management of fish, game, and wildlife resources; that the public at large has similarly been denied access to millions of acres of military reservations during established hunting seasons, notwithstanding the fact that many such areas are only intermittently used and cannot be seriously labeled "closed for security reasons"; that interpretation of the State laws governing taking and possession of these resources has largely been left by the Defense Department, and the Departments of the Air Force, Army, and Navy, to local commanders, with the not unnatural result that there are almost as many interpretations as there are local military commanders; that in too many instances such areas have taken on all the aspects of exclusive military hunting preserves, closed to the public at large, closed to the Federal and State officials charged with responsibility for fish and game law enforcement, and therefore islands of highly irregular fish and game management within what Congress and the States and Territories would like to believe is a sea of uniform policy governing the wise and orderly use of these valuable public resources; finally, that directives, regulations, and orders of the Defense Department promulgated with the declared intent of harmonizing the military-local situation appear to be largely matters of form, and of only limited substance.

With respect to the general findings set out above on this subject, it is submitted that such findings speak for themselves. The history of military-local relations—and, indeed, the history of the relationship between Defense agencies and the United States Fish and Wildlife Service—makes it clear that the military cannot, or will not, yield in its insistence on immunity from State and Territorial fish and game laws, within exclusive Federal jurisdiction areas.

It is equally clear that local officials will not recede from their insistenee that if military personnel are going to fish and hunt, then either as a matter of law or a matter of sound Federal-local policy they must conform to season and bag limits, methods of taking, and so forth, as prescribed by State law.

In light of the abuses of sound conservation practices that have unquestionably been permitted to prevail at a number of military reservations, and the inability or unwillingness of the respective military departments and the Department of Defense to remedy the situation, action by Congress is a must.

DEFENSE POSITION ON PETROLEUM RESOURCES

Mr. Speaker, in its report accompanying H. R. 12185, there is set out in detail the House Interior Committee's reaction to the Defense position—as articulated through the Department of the Navy—with respect to the Navy-claimed authority to conduct petroleum exploratory operations outside of areas set aside specifically as naval petroleum reserves. Put succinctly, the committee position is that there is no such authority in the Navy—absent further congressional action—with respect to public land areas withdrawn "for naval purposes" or on the outer continental shelf.

On the other hand, if the Navy, with the concurrence of the Department of Defense, is convinced that there is a deficiency in petroleum reserves for defense purposes, it should proceed forthwith to: First, request establishment, by Presidential Executive order, of additional naval petroleum reserves; or, second, request congressional legislation for establishment of such additional reserves. Similarly, if the Navy believes that lands withdrawn "for naval purposes" should be classified as "naval petroleum reserves," it should move expeditiously to secure their reclassification. Finally, if the Navy believes that the Outer Continental Shelf Act of 1953 constitutes a direction or mandate for the initiation of exploratory drilling there by the Navy—it is suggested, in light of the views of this committee and the House Appropriations Committee on the San Nicholas Island matter—that the Department of the Navy consider requesting legislation by the Congress clearly establishing such authority.

The committee has no judgment as to the need for creation of additional naval petroleum reserves, nor does it have a judgment as to the desirability of the Navy—or any other Federal agency—to conduct exploratory petroleum drilling operations. Such matters involve basic legislative policy, and should be so treated, particularly in light of the very substantial contribution made in dollars and petroleum resources by the development of Continental Shelf areas to date, and as anticipated in the near future.

Finally, if the proposed Air Force-Navy withdrawal in peacetime of airspace areas embracing millions of acres over the Gulf of Mexico would have the effect of precluding leasing activity by the Secretary of the Interior of the soil and seabed of the shelf, then it is clear that this, too, calls into question resource policies of such import as to warrant a joint executive-legislative assault on the matter, not unilateral executive action.

I urge my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, to join in support of this legislation. I submit that the committee findings speak for themselves, and speak loudly for immediate action by the Congress to bring control of these resources back to the Congress. H. R. 12185, Mr. Speaker, is must legislation.

SALE OF CERTAIN WARBUILT VESSELS

The Clerk called the resolution (H. J. Res. 685) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to sell certain warbuilt vessels.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We have not reached that point yet.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask whether or not the opponents of this proposal were allowed to come before the committee and present their views on this matter.

Mr. BONNER. I beg your pardon, but I was unable to hear the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman in charge of the bill as to whether or not the opponents of this legislation were given an opportunity to come before the committee and present their views.

Mr. BONNER. There were public hearings on the bill. I know of nobody that appeared in oppositon.

Mr. BOLAND. I know of some objection to it on this side.

Mr. BONNER. They never appeared before the committee.

Mr. BOLAND. I do not know whether anybody was given the opportunity to appear before the committee.

Mr. BONNER. We sent out a notice of hearing, notified the trade and industry. That is the only way we have of doing it.

Mr. BOLAND. I notice this bill was filed July 13, and I was just wondering whether or not those segments of the industry that might be opposed to it, or individuals were given an opportunity to come before your committee and oppose the bill.

Mr. BONNER. I may say to the gentleman that there were witnesses before the committee from the Maritime Commission and various Government departments. There was no objection before the committee.

Mr. BOLAND. Does the Maritime Commission favor this legislation?

Mr. BONNER. They reported favorably on it; yes.

Mr. BOLAND. The report carries no indication of what the views of the Maritime Commission may be on this bill. The only view expressed is by the Comptroller General.

Mr. BONNER. Let me ask the gentleman from Washington, [Mr. TOLLEFSON] who is the ranking member of the comittee, and Mr. ALLEN of California, who were present at the hearing.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. What was the question?

Mr. BOLAND. Whether or not the Maritime Comission favors the legislation. I find no reference to the Maritime Commission's views on this proposal in the report.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. The Maritime Commission agreed to the sale of these ships.

Mr. BOLAND. Why was it not included in the report?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I could not answer that.

Mr. BOLAND. With the assurance of the chairman and the ranking minority member of the committee that the Maritime Commission favors this proposal, and with the further assurance that the possible opponents to this legislation had the opportunity of appearing before the committee and presenting their views, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

ESTABLISHMENT OF FISH HATCHERY IN WEST VIRGINIA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12303) to provide for the establishment of a fish hatchery in the State of West Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill (S. 3831) may be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to establish, construct, equip, operate, and maintain a new fish hatchery in the State of West Virginia.

SEC. 2. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider and a similar House bill (H. R. 12303) were laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY SHIP REPAIR ACT OF 1954

The Clerk called the resolution (S. J. Res. 187) to extend the operation of the Emergency Ship Repair Act of 1954.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ST. FRANCISVILLE BRIDGE COMMISSION

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11720) creating the city of St. Francisville Bridge Commission, defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission; and authorizing the commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Wabash River at or near St. Francisville, Ill., and Knox County, Ind., to purchase and operate a ferry at such location, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of St. Francisville Bridge Commission created by section 9 of this act (hereafter in this act referred to as the "commission"), and its successors and assigns, is authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto, across the Wabash River at or near the city of St. Francisville, Ill., and Knox County, Ind., in accordance with the General Bridge Act of 1946, at a point suitable to the interest of public navigation. The commission is also authorized to purchase from its owner, maintain and operate the existing ferry operating between St. Francisville, Ill., and Knox County, Ind., and in connection with the acquisition of such ferry, is authorized to purchase the vessels used in operating a ferry between St. Francisville, Ill., and Knox County, Ind., the franchise granted for operating such ferry, and all real estate, equipment, and other property reasonably necessary to operate such ferry, and owned on the date of enactment of this act by the owner of such ferry.

SEC. 2. The commission and its successors and assigns shall have the right and power to enter upon such lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use such real estate and other property in the State of Illinois and the State of Indiana, as may be needed for location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, and proceedings therefor shall be the same as proceedings for condemnation of private property for public purposes in such State. The commission, its successors and assigns, may enter into agreements with such States, and any political subdivisions thereof, for the acquisition, lease, or use of any real estate or other property owned by such State or political subdivision.

SEC. 3. The commission and its successors and assigns may fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge in accordance with this act, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Army under the General Bridge Act of 1946.

SEC. 4. The commission and its successors and assigns may provide for the payment of the cost of such bridge as may be constructed, and approaches (including any approach highways which, in the judgment of the commission, it is necessary or advisable to construct or cause to be constructed to provide suitable and adequate connection with existing and improved highways), and the necessary lands, easements, and appurtenances thereto, and the cost of the ferry and real estate, equipment, and other property reasonably necessary to operate such ferry, by an issue or issues of negotiable bonds of the commission, bearing interest at the rate of not more than 6 percent per annum. The principal and interest of such bonds, and any premium to be paid for retirement before maturity, shall be paid solely from the sinking fund provided in accordance with this act, and such payments may be further secured by a mortgage on the bridge or ferry or both. All such bonds may be registrable as to principal alone, or both principal and interest, shall be in such form not inconsistent with this act, shall mature at such time or times not exceeding 30 years from their respective dates, shall be in such denominations, shall be executed in such manner, and shall be payable in such medium and at such place or places, as the commission may determine. The commission may repurchase and reserve the right to redeem all or any of such bonds before maturity in such manner and at such prices, not exceeding 105 percent of the principal amount thereof and accrued interest, as may be fixed by the commission before issuance of the bonds. The commission, when it deems it to be to the best interest of the commission may issue refunding bonds to repurchase and redeem any outstanding bonds before their maturity. Such refunding bonds shall mature at such time or times, not exceeding 40 years from the date of enactment of this act, as the commission may determine. The commission may enter into an agreement with any bank or trust company in the United States as trustee having the power to make such agreement, setting forth the duties of the commission with respect to the purchase, construction, maintenance, operation, repair, and insurance of the bridge or ferry, or both, the conservation and application of all funds, the security for payment of the bonds, the safeguarding of money on hand or on deposit, and the rights and remedies of the trustee and the holders of the bonds, restricting the individual right of action of the bondholders as is customary in trust agreements respecting bonds of corporation. Such trust agreement may contain such provisions for protecting, and enforcing the rights and remedies of the trustees and the bondholders, as may be reasonable and proper and not inconsistent with law.

Such bonds shall be sold in such manner and at such time or times and at such price as the commission may determine, but no such sale shall be made at a price so low as to require the payment of interest at the rate of more than 6 percent per annum on the money received therefor, computed with relation to the absolute maturity of the bonds in accordance with standard tables of bond values. The face amount of the bonds shall be so calculated as to produce, at the price of their sale, amounts which, when added to any other funds available to the commission for the same purposes, will be not less than the cost of the bridge and approaches, and the lands, easements, and appurtenances, used in connection therewith and the cost of the ferry, franchise, and real estate, equipment, and other property reasonably necessary to operate such ferry. The cost of the bridge and approaches and approach highways shall be considered to include interest during the construction of the bridge and for 12 months after construction has been completed, and to include all engineering, legal, architectural, traffic surveying, and other expenses incident to the construction of the bridge and the acquisition of the necessary real estate and other property, and incident to the financing thereof. If the proceeds of the bonds issued, when added to any other funds available to the commission for the same purpose, exceed the cost as finally determined under this section of the bridge and approaches, and the lands, easements, and appurtenances, used in connection therewith and the cost of ferry, franchise, and real estate, equipment, and other property reasonably necessary to operate such ferry, the excess shall be placed in the sinking fund provided for in this act. Before the preparation of definite bonds, the commission may, subject to the provisions of this act, issue temporary bonds or interim certificates, with or without coupons, of any denomination whatsoever, exchangeable for definite bonds when such bonds as have been executed are available for delivery.

SEC. 5. The rates of toll to be charged for the use of the bridge shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and approaches under economical management, to provide a sinking fund sufficient to pay the principal and interest of such bonds as they fall due, and to pay for redemption or repurchase of all or any of such bonds redeemed or repurchased before maturity as provided in section 4. All tolls and other revenues from the bridge are hereby pledged to such use and to their application as required by this section. After payment or provision for payment from such tolls of all such cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and approaches, and the reservation of an amount of money estimated by the commission to be sufficient for such purposes during an ensuing period of not more than 6 months, the remainder of the tolls collected shall be placed in the sinking fund, at intervals to be determined by the commission before the issuance of the bonds. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and approaches, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested. The commission shall classify in a reasonable way all traffic over the bridge so that the tolls shall be so fixed and adjusted by it as to be uniform in their application to all traffic falling within reasonable classes, regardless of the status or character of any person, firm, or corporation participating in such traffic, and shall prevent all use of such bridge except upon payment of tolls so fixed and adjusted. No toll shall be charged for officials or employees of the commission or the Government of the United States in discharge of their duties.

Within a reasonable time after the construction of the bridge has been completed, the commission shall file with the Secretary of Commerce a sworn itemized statement, showing the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the cost of acquiring any interest in real estate or other property necessary therefor, and the amount of bonds, debentures, or other evidence of indebtedness issued in connection with the construction of the bridge and approaches, and acquisition of the ferry and other property associated therewith.

SEC. 6. (a) After payment of the bonds and interest, or after a sinking fund sufficient for such payment has been provided and is being held for such payments, the commission shall transfer by deeds or other suitable instruments of conveyance, an undivided one-half interest in the physical structure of the bridge and its approaches to the State of Illinois or any municipality or agency of such State authorized by or pursuant to law to accept such undivided one-half interest (hereafter in this act referred to as the "Illinois interest") and an undivided one-half interest in the physical structure of the bridge and its approaches to the State of Indiana or any municipality or agency of such State authorized by or pursuant to law to accept such undivided one-half interest (hereafter in this act referred to as the "Indiana interest"), under the conditions that the bridge shall thereafter be free of tolls and be properly maintained, operated, and repaired by the Illinois interest and the Indiana interest as may be agreed on. If no Illinois interest or Indiana interest is authorized to accept, or does accept, such one-half interest in the bridge and approaches under such conditions, then the bridge shall continue to be owned, maintained, operated, and repaired by the commission, and the rates of tolls shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and approaches under economical management, until such time as an Illinois interest and the Indiana interest is authorized to accept, and does accept, such bridge and approaches under such conditions. Whenever the bridge and approaches are transferred under this section, the commission, its successors or assigns shall (if the ferry and other property have not already been disposed of) sell the ferry and franchise, and the real estate, equipment, and other property associated with the ferry, as soon as practicable at such price and upon such terms as the commission, its successors or assigns, may determine.

(b) The Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency may make advances to the commission under the terms and subject to the conditions of section 702 of the Housing Act of 1954, and may purchase the securities and obligations of, or make loans to, the commission under the terms and subject to the conditions of title 11 of the Housing Amendments of 1955.

(c) If the State Highway Department of the State of Indiana consents, amounts apportioned to that State out of sums appropriated under the Federal-Aid Road Act of July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, may be allocated for the construction of such bridge and approaches, in the same manner and subject to the same terms and conditions as apply in the case on the Federal-aid primary highway system. If the Department of Public Works and Buildings of the State of Illinois consents, amounts apportioned to that State out of sums appropriated under the Federal-Aid Road Act of July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, may be allocated for the construction of such bridge and approaches, in the same manner and subject to the same terms and conditions as apply in the case of projects on the Federal-aid primary system.

SEC. 7. The commission and its successors and assigns are authorized to provide for the payment of the cost of the bridge and approaches (including the approach highways which, in the judgment of the commission, it is necessary or advisable to construct or cause to be constructed to provide suitable and adequate connection with existing improved highways) and the necessary lands, easements, and appurtenances thereto by negotiating and entering into a contract or contracts with the State Highway Department of Indiana, the Department of Public Works and Buildings of Illinois, Lawrence County, Ill., Knox County, Ind., the city of Vincennes, Ind., or any other county or municipality in the States of Illinois and Indiana, whereby the commission may receive financial aid in financing the construction of the bridge and approaches. The commission, in its discretion, may avail itself of all the facilities of the State Highway Department of Indiana, the Department of Public Works and Buildings of the State of Illinois, or any county or municipality in the State of Indiana or the State of Illinois, with regard to construction of said bridge, and the commission may make and enter into any contract or contracts which it deems expedient and proper with the State Highway Department of the State of Indiana, or the Department of Public Works and Buildings of the State of Illinois, or any county or municipality in the State of Indiana and the State of Illinois, whereby said highway departments, municipalities, or counties, or either of them may construct, operate, and maintain, or participate with the commission in the construction, operation, and maintenance of the bridge and its approaches.

It is hereby declared to be the purpose of Congress to facilitate the construction of a bridge and proper approaches across the Wabash River at or near the city of Saint Francisville, Ill., and to authorize the commission to promote said object and purpose, with full power to contract with either State Highway Department of Indiana, the Department of Public Works and Buildings of Illinois, or any municipality, or county, or cities in the States of Indiana and Illinois, or all of them, in relation to the construction, operation, and maintenance of said bridge and approaches.

SEC. 8. Nothing in this act shall require the commission to maintain or operate the ferry if it is purchased under this act, but in the discretion of the commission, its successors and assigns, the ferry, franchise, and all or any real estate, equipment, and other property acquired in connection with the ferry may be sold or otherwise disposed of, or may be abandoned or dismantled, or both, whenever in the judgment of the commission, its successors and assigns, it may seem expedient to do so. The commission, its successors and assigns, may fix such rates of toll for use of the ferry as it may deem proper, subject to the conditions prescribed in section 5 with respect to rates of toll for the use of the bridge. All tolls collected for the use of the ferry and the proceeds of any sale or disposition of the ferry or any other property connected therewith shall be used, so far as may be necessary, to pay the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating such ferry and property, and any amounts not so used shall be paid into the sinking fund provided for bonds.

Within a reasonable time after the ferry has been acquired under this act, the commission shall file with the Secretary of Commerce a sworn itemized statement, showing the cost of acquisition of such ferry and the cost, if any, of acquisition of the franchise, and real estate, equipment, and other property associated with the ferry.

An accurate record of the cost of the ferry, franchise, real estate, equipment, and other property; the expenditures for maintaining and repairing them; and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 9. (a) For the purpose of carrying into effect the objects stated in this act, there is hereby created the city of St. Francisville Bridge Commission, and by that name, style, and title said body shall have perpetual succession, may contract, and be contracted with, sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, complain and defend in all courts of law an equity; may make and have a common seal; may purchase or otherwise acquire and hold or dispose of real estate and other property; may accept and receive donations or gifts of money or property and apply same to the purpose of this act; and shall have and possess all powers necessary, convenient, or proper for carrying into effect the objects stated in this act.

(b) The commission shall consist of Roy Rucker, of Bridgeport, Ill.; Lawrence L. Bell, Dr. Carl McCammon, Clyde Leathers, and Virgal Deckard, of St. Francisville, Ill.; Oscar Laue, Oris Wright, Gilbert Shake, and William Steele, of Vincennes, Ind.; the mayor of the city of St. Francisville, Ill., shall serve as a member of the commission ex officio, without compensation; such commission shall be a public body corporate and politic. Each member of the commission shall qualify within 30 days of the date of enactment of this act by filing with the Commissioner of Public Roads of the United States an oath that he will faithfully perform the duties imposed upon him by this act. Each person appointed to fill a vacancy shall qualify in the same manner within 30 days after his appointment. Any vacancy occurring in the commission by reason of failure to qualify, death, or resignation shall be filled by appointment by the Commissioner of Public Roads.

(c) Before any bonds may be issued under this act each of the members of the commission must give bond as may be fixed by the Commissioner of Public Roads, conditioned upon his faithful performance of all duties required by this act. The cost of such surety before and during the construction of the bridge shall be paid, or reimbursement made, out of the proceeds from the sale of bonds; thereafter such cost shall be an operating expense of the commission, to be paid from tolls.

(d) The commission may establish rules and regulations for the government of its business not inconsistent with this act. The commission shall from time to time select a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members. A majority of the members of the commission shall constitute a quorum.

SEC. 10. The commission shall have no capital stock or shares of interest or participation, and all revenue and receipts thereof shall be applied to the purposes specified in this act. The members of the commission shall be entitled to a per diem compensation for their services of $10 for each day actually spent in the business of the commission but the maximum compensation of the chairman in any year shall not exceed $1,200 and of each other member shall not exceed $600 in any one year. The members of the commission shall be entitled to receive expense allowance of 10 cents a mile for each mile actually traveled on the business of the commission. The commission may employ a secretary, treasurer, engineers, attorneys, and such other experts, assistants, and employees as it may deem necessary, who shall be entitled to receive such compensation as the commission may determine. All salaries and expenses shall be paid solely from funds provided under authority of this act. After all bonds and interest thereon have been paid and all other obligations of the commission paid or discharged, or provision for all such payments shall have been made, and after the bridge has been conveyed to the Indiana interest and the Illinois interest, or otherwise disposed of as provided in this act, the commission shall be dissolved and shall cease to have further existence by an order of the Commissioner of Public Roads made upon his own initiative or upon application of the commission or any member or members thereof, but only after a pubic hearing in the city of St. Francisville, Ill., notice of the time and place of which hearing and the purpose thereof shall have been published once at least 30 days before the date thereof, in a newspaper published in Knox County, Ind., and in a newspaper published in Lawrence County, Ill. At the time of such dissolution all moneys in the hands of or to the credit of the commission shall be divided and distribution made between the "Indiana interest" and the "Illinois interest," as may be determined by the Commissioner of Public Roads of the United States.

SEC. 11. Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize or permit the commission or any member thereof to create any obligation or incur any liability other than such obligations and liabilities as are dischargeable solely from funds provided under this act. No obligation created or liability incurred pursuant to this act shall be a personal obligation or liability of any member or members of the commission, nor shall any indebtedness created pursuant to this act be an indebtedness of the United States.

SEC. 12. The design and construction of any bridge which may be built pursuant to this act shall be in accordance with the standard specifications for highway bridges adopted by the American Association of State Highway Officials.

SEC. 13. The commission, and its income, property, and franchises shall be exempt from all Federal taxation.

SEC. 14. All provisions of this act may be enforced or the violation thereof prevented by mandamus, injunction, or other appropriate remedy brought by the Attorney General of the United States in any United States district court having competent jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the parties.

SEC. 15. (a) The financial transactions of the commission shall be audited annually by the General Accounting Office in accordance with the principles and procedures applicable to commercial corporate transactions and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States. The audit shall be conducted at the places where the accounts of the commission are normally kept. The representatives of the General Accounting Office shall have access to all books, accounts, financial records, reports, files, and all other papers, things, or property belonging to or in use by the commission and necessary to facilitate the audit, and they shall be afforded full facilities for verifying transactions with the balances or securities held by depositaries, fiscal agents, and custodians.

(b) A report of each such audit shall be made by the Comptroller General to the Congress not later than January following the close of the fiscal year for which such audit is made. The report shall set forth the scope of the audit and shall include a statement of assets and liabilities, capital, and surplus or deficit; a statement of surplus or deficit analysis; a statement of income and expense; a statement of sources and application of funds; and such comments and information as may be deemed necessary to keep the Congress informed of the operation and financial condition of the commission, together with such recommendations with respect thereto as the Comptroller General may deem advisable. The report shall also show specifically any program, expenditures, or other financial transaction or undertaking observed in the course of the audit, which, in the opinion of the Comptroller General, has been carried on or made without authority of law. A copy of each report shall be furnished to the commission at the time submitted to the Congress.

SALE OF ONE WAR-BUILT CARGO VESSEL

The Clerk called the resolution (H. J. Res. 666) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to sell one war-built cargo vessel, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

CONVEYANCE OF MARITIME ADMINISTRATION RESERVE SHIPYARD AT WILMINGTON, N. C.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12116) to provide for the conveyance of the Maritime Administration reserve shipyard at Wilmington, N. C., in exchange for certain lands to be conveyed by the North Carolina State Ports Authority to the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

AMENDING MERCHANT SHIP SALES ACT OF 1946

The Clerk called the bill (S. 3113) to amend section 9 (c) (2) of the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Ohio a question? In reference to 4 or 5 of these bills he has objected. In some cases I agree with him. May I ask whether or not he is going to maintain that position? Because the official objectors committee in several instances would have requested that the bill be put over. We want to be protected so that if the gentleman withdraws his objection it will not indicate that we have agreed that the bill should be approved. I am just asking the question.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. The gentleman from Ohio is going to object to any bills from the other body and all bills.

Mr. FORD. In other words, the gentleman's position is firm, so that we can be assured that these bills will not come up subsequently, though we may have our own views on them?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AUTHORIZING DEMOLITION AND REMOVAL OF CERTAIN GREENHOUSES AND OTHER STRUCTURES ON SQUARE 576 WEST IN WASHINGTON, D. C., AND THE CONSTRUCTION OF OTHER FACILITIES IN PLACE THEREOF, AT THE BOTANIC GARDEN NURSERY

The Clerk called the bill (S. 3881) authorizing the demolition and removal of certain greenhouses and other structures on square 576 west in Washington, D. C., and the construction of other facilities in place thereof, at the Botanic Garden Nursery, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDING SECTION 2011 (C) OF THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 10622) to amend section 2011 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the author of the bill or some member of the committee make a brief statement as to what this bill does?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to prevent undue enrichment for the Federal Government.

Mr. McCORMACK. Undue enrichment by the Federal Government?

Mr. KEAN. No, for the Federal Government. Under the estate tax laws, an estate is allowed to deduct 80 percent of the tax that is paid to a State. Sometimes the amount cannot be determined.

Mr. McCORMACK. I know about that.

Mr. KEAN. This bill extends it a little longer than the original period.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2011 (c) (relating to the period of limitations on the credit for State death taxes) is hereby amended by adding a new paragraph (3) as follows:

"(3) If a claim for refund or credit of an overpayment of tax imposed by this chapter has been filed within the time prescribed in section 6511 of this title or section 322 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939, then within such 4-year period, or before the expiration of 60 days after the final disposition by the Secretary or his delegate of the said claim for refund, or before the expiration of 60 days after a decision by any court of competent jurisdiction becomes final with respect to a timely suit instituted upon such claim."

and by adding after "section 6018" and before "except that" the following: "of this title, or of sections 821 or 864 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1949 in those cases where a timely claim for refund or credit for overpayment of taxes imposed by the said sections has not been finally disposed of at the date of enactment of this act;"

SEC. 2. That section 7851 (a) (2) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(C) TAXES IMPOSED UNDER THE 1939 CODE: Notwithstanding any contrary provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 or the provisions of subparagraph (A), section 2011 (c) of this title, as amended, shall apply with respect to estates of decedents dying on or before the date of enactment of this title."

SEC. 3. This act shall be effective in all circumstances in which it would have been effective if it had been enacted as part of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That section 2011 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the period of limitations on credit for State death taxes) is hereby amended by adding at the end of paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"'(3) If a claim for refund or credit of an overpayment of tax imposed by this chapter has been filed within the time prescribed in section 6511, then within such 4-year period or before the expiration of 60 days from the date of mailing by registered mail by the Secretary or his delegate to the taxpayer of a notice of the disallowance of any part of such claim, or before the expiration of 60 days after a decision by any court of competent jurisdiction becomes final with respect to a timely suit instituted upon such claim, whichever is later.'

"SEC. 2. Section 813 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 (relating to the period of limitations on the credit for State death taxes) is hereby amended by adding at the end of paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"'(3) If a claim for refund or credit of an overpayment of tax imposed by this chapter has been filed within the time prescribed in section 910, then within such 4-year period or before the expiration of 60 days from the date of mailing by registered mail by the Secretary or his delegate to the taxpayer of a notice of the disallowance of any part of such claim, or before the expiration of 60 days after a decision by any court of competent jurisdiction becomes final with respect to a timely suit instituted upon such claim, whichever is later.'

"SEC. 3. (a) The amendment made by section 1 to section 2011 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall be effective as if it were a part of such section on the date of enactment of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(b) The amendment made by section 2 to section 813 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 shall be effective as if it were a part of such section on the date of enactment of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to amend section 2011 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and section 813 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OAHE, GAVINS POINT, AND FORT RANDALL DAMS AND RESERVOIR PROJECTS, MISSOURI RIVER

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2093) to authorize the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Corps of Engineers, to undertake certain public works and grant compensation for certain property damages as a result of the construction of the Oahe, Gavins Point, and Fort Randall Dams and Reservoir projects, Missouri River.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LOVRE. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman will reserve his objection to the bill?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. LOVRE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is of vital importance. It so happens that the Corps of Engineers is destroying certain property in the development of the Missouri River program.

One portion of this bill authorizes the Corps of Engineers to reimburse property owners of property on tidal lands on which they have not the right now. There is no objection to this particular bill and I know of none.

The second portion of the bill is to authorize the Corps of Engineers to replace a schoolhouse that has been flooded out. If this bill does not go through it means there will be no school facilities for the schoolchildren in a certain town and this bill attempts to provide that facility.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of people who were not concerned about other schoolchildren. So I object.

SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION ACT, 1957

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 12350) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. CANNON, THOMAS, KIRWAN, WHITTEN, ROONEY, FOGARTY, TABER, PHILLIPS, HAND, and BOW.

DAM ON THE NORTH BRANCH OF THE POTOMAC RIVER

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return for immediate consideration to Consent Calendar No. 794, the bill (S. 4099) granting the consent of Congress to the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. for the construction of a dam on the North Branch of the Potomac River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HYDE. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment so that I may ask a question?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I reserve it.

Mr. HYDE. I would like to point out to the gentleman from Ohio that the consent asked for in this bill is simply to build a dam, at no expense to the Government, by the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., which means employment in a distressed employment area for nearly 1,000 people. Now, I do not think the gentleman wants to arbitrarily take it upon himself to do away with jobs for 1,000 people in a distressed area.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. If that dam is to employ 1,000 people, it will not be put on the North Branch, because I am familiar with it. I object, Mr. Speaker.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2226) to authorize the Attorney General to dispose of the remaining assets seized under the Trading With the Enemy Act prior to December 18, 1941.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I object, Mr. Speaker.

CANNELTON BRIDGE COMMISSION

Mr. DENTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10662) creating the City of Cannelton Bridge Commission, defining the authority, power, and duties of said Commission; and authorizing the Commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cannelton, Ohio, and Hawesville, Ky., to purchase and operate a ferry at such location, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman a question or two? This simply authorizes the construction of an interstate bridge across a river.

Mr. DENTON. Across the Ohio River. It has been approved by the leadership of both sides. There was an objection, but amendments have been proposed to do away with the objection by the interested agencies.

Mr. GROSS. I wonder if the gentleman is getting the preferential treatment that the States of Maryland and Virginia are getting in the building of a bridge across the Potomac River at Alexandria, Va. Are the taxpayers of the entire country going to build the bridge, as in the case of the Potomac bridge, or are the States of Indiana and Ohio going to build it?

Mr. DENTON. It will be done by a bond issue.

Mr. GROSS. I want to commend the people of Indiana for building their own bridge with private money and through private enterprise.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I notice this bill was placed on the calendar yesterday sometime, possibly late in the afternoon.

Mr. DENTON. That is right.

Mr. HESELTON. I would like to inquire of the author of the bill or the gentleman who reported it whether the facts were known sufficiently early so this bill could have been brought to the floor under the normal procedure and handled with an understanding on the part of the entire membership rather than under this consent procedure in the next to last or third from last day of this session.

Mr. DENTON. They were not, because the report was shunted back and forth between the departments and we had a great deal of difficulty and trouble locating it, and they found it just the day before.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, this bill would have been out a long time ago except for the delay of the Army engineers in getting the report. We could not get the Army report over, but finally got a clear slate for the bill. Presently the people have to go several miles to get over from Indiana to Fort Knox. This sets up a bridge commission, which does not cost anything, and it is highly desired by the Governors of Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky.

Mr. HESELTON. Further reserving the right to object, and I am deeply sympathetic with the gentleman, but I want to inquire whether there has been any public hearing, any notice to anybody, any action by the committee.

Mr. DENTON. There have been public hearings.

Mr. HESELTON. When?

Mr. DENTON. This week, just as soon as we got the report.

Mr. HESELTON. What day?

Mr. DENTON. I think it was Monday or Tuesday. All departments were notified.

Mr. HESELTON. Are there any printed hearings?

Mr. DENTON. I do not know whether the hearings were printed, but there are transcripts of the hearing.

Mr. HESELTON. Is the committee report available?

Mr. DENTON. It is available.

Mr. HESELTON. Printed?

Mr. DENTON. Yes.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the City of Cannelton Bridge Commission created by section 9 of this act (hereafter in this act referred to as the "Commission"), and its successors and assigns, is authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto, across the Ohio River at or near the cities of Cannelton, Ind., and Hawesville, Ky., in accordance with the General Bridge Act of 1946, at a point suitable to the interest of public navigation.

The Commission is also authorized to purchase from its owner, maintain and operate the existing ferry operating between Cannelton, Ind., and Hawesville, Ky., and in connection with the acquisition of such ferry, is authorized to purchase the vessels used in operating a ferry between Cannelton, Ind., and Hawesville, Ky., the franchise granted for operating such ferry, and all real estate, equipment, and other property reasonably necessary to operate such ferry, and owned on the date of enactment of this act by the owner of such ferry.

SEC. 2. The Commission and its successors and assigns shall have the right and power to enter upon such lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use such real estate and other property in the State of Indiana and the State of Kentucky, as may be needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, and proceedings therefor shall be the same as proceedings for condemnation of private property for public purposes in such State. The Commission, its successors and assigns, may enter into agreements with such States, and any political subdivisions thereof, for the acquisition, lease, or use of any real estate or other property owned by such State or political subdivision.

SEC. 3. The Commission and its successors and assigns may fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge and ferry in accordance with this act, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Army under the General Bridge Act of 1946.

SEC. 4. The Commission and its successors and assigns may provide for the payment of the cost of such bridge as may be constructed, and approaches (including any approach highways which, in the judgment of the Commission, it is necessary or advisable to construct or cause to be constructed to provide suitable and adequate connection with existing and improved highways), and the necessary lands, easements, and appurtenances thereto, and the cost of the ferry, franchise, and real estate, equipment, and other property reasonably necessary to operate such ferry, by an issue or issues of negotiable bonds of the Commission, bearing interest at the rate or rates of not more than 6 percent per annum. The principal and interest of such bonds, and any premium to be paid for retirement thereof before maturity, shall be paid solely from the sinking fund provided in accordance with this act, and such payments may be further secured by a mortgage on the bridge or ferry, or both. All such bonds may be registrable as to principal alone, or both principal and interest, shall be in such form not inconsistent with this act, shall mature at such time or times not exceeding 30 years from the date of enactment of this act, shall be in such denominations, shall be executed in such manner, and shall be payable in such medium and at such place or places, as the Commission may determine. The Commission may repurchase and reserve the right to redeem all or any of such bonds before maturity in such manner and at such price or prices, not exceeding 105 percent of the principal amount thereof and accrued interest, as may be fixed by the Commission before issuance of the bonds. The Commission, when it deems it to be to the best interest of the Commission may issue refunding bonds to repurchase and redeem any outstanding bonds before their maturity. Such refunding bonds shall mature at such time or times, not exceeding 30 years from the date the construction of the bridge has been completed, as the Commission may determine. The Commission may enter into an agreement with any bank or trust company in the United States as trustee having the power to make such agreement, setting forth the duties of the Commission with respect to the purchase, construction, maintenance, operation, repair, and insurance of the bridge or ferry, or both, the conservation and application of all funds, the security for payment of the bonds, the safeguarding of money on hand or on deposit, and the rights and remedies of the trustee and the holders of the bonds, restricting the individual right of action of the bondholders as is customary in trust agreements respecting bonds of corporation. Such trust agreement may contain such provisions for protecting, and enforcing the rights and remedies of the trustee and the bondholders, as may be reasonable and proper and not inconsistent with law.

Such bonds shall be sold in such manner and at such time or times and at such price as the Commission may determine, but no such sale shall be made at a price so low as to require the payment of interest at the rate of more than 6 percent per annum on the money received therefor, computed with relation to the absolute maturity of the bonds in accordance with standard tables of bond values. The face amount of the bonds shall be so calculated as to produce, at the price of their sale, amounts which, when added to any other funds available to the Commission for the same purposes, will be not less than the cost of the bridge and approaches, and the lands, easements, and appurtenances, used in connection therewith and the cost of the ferry, franchise, and real estate, equipment, and other property reasonably necessary to operate such ferry. The cost of the bridge and approaches and approach highways shall be considered to include interest during the construction of the bridge and for 12 months after construction has been completed, and to include all engineering, legal, architectural, traffic surveying, and other expenses incident to the construction of the bridge and the acquisition of the necessary real estate and other property, and incident to the financing thereof. If the proceeds of the bonds issued, when added to any other funds available to the Commission for the same purpose, exceed the cost as finally determined under this section of the bridge and approaches, and the lands, easements, and appurtenances, used in connection therewith, and the cost of the ferry, franchise, and real estate, equipment, and other property reasonably necessary to operate such ferry, the excess shall be placed in the sinking fund provided for in this act. Before the preparation of definite bonds, the Commission may, subject to the provisions of this act, issue temporary bonds or interim certificates, with or without coupons, of any denomination whatsoever, exchangeable for definite bonds when such bonds as have been executed are available for delivery.

SEC. 5. The rates of toll to be charged for the use of the bridge shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and approaches under economical management, to provide a sinking fund sufficient to pay the principal and interest of such bonds as they fall due, and to pay for redemption or repurchase of all or any of such bonds redeemed or repurchased before maturity as provided in section 4. All tolls and other revenues from the bridge are hereby pledged to such use and to their application as required by this section. After payment or provision for payment from such tolls of all such cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and approaches, and the reservation of an amount of money estimated by the Commission to be sufficient for such purposes during an ensuing period of not more than 6 months, the remainder of the tolls collected shall be placed in the sinking fund, at intervals to be determined by the Commission before the issuance of the bonds. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and approaches, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested. The Commission shall classify in a reasonable way all traffic over the bridge so that the tolls shall be so fixed and adjusted by it as to be uniform in their application to all traffic falling within reasonable classes, regardless of the status or character of any person, firm, or corporation participating in such traffic, and shall prevent all use of such bridge except upon payment of tolls so fixed and adjusted. No toll shall be charged officials or employees of the Commission or the Government of the United States or any State, county, or municipality in the United States while in the discharge of their duties, or municipal police or fire departments when engaged in the proper work of any such department.

Within a reasonable time after the construction of the bridge has been completed, the Commission shall file with the Secretary of Commerce a sworn itemized statement, showing the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the cost of acquiring any interest in real estate or other property necessary therefor, and the amount of bonds, debentures, or other evidence of indebtedness issued in connection with the construction of the bridge and approaches and acquisition of the ferry and other property associated therewith.

SEC. 6. Nothing in this act shall require the Commission to maintain or operate the ferry if it is purchased under this act, but in the discretion of the Commission, its successors and assigns, the ferry, franchise, and all or any of the real estate, equipment, and other property acquired in connection with the ferry may be sold or otherwise disposed of, or may be abandoned or dismantled, or both, whenever in the judgment of the Commission, its successors and assigns, it may seem expedient to do so. The Commission, its successors and assigns, may fix such rates of toll for the use of the ferry as it may deem proper, subject to the conditions prescribed in section 5 with respect to rates of toll for the use of the bridge. All tolls collected for the use of the ferry and the proceeds of any sale or disposition of the ferry or any other property connected therewith shall be used, so far as may be necessary, to pay the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating such ferry and property, and any amounts not so used shall be paid into the sinking fund provided for bonds.

Within a reasonable time after the ferry has been acquired under this act, the Commission shall file with the Secretary of Commerce a sworn itemized statement, showing the cost of acquisition of such ferry and the cost, if any, of acquisition of the franchise, and real estate, equipment, and other property associated with the ferry.

An accurate record of the cost of the ferry, franchise, real estate, equipment, and other property; the expenditures for maintaining and repairing them; and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 7. (a) (1) After payment of the bonds and interest, or after a sinking fund sufficient for such payment has been provided and is being held for such payment, the Commission shall transfer by deeds or other suitable instruments of conveyance, an undivided one-half interest in the physical structure of the bridge and its approaches to the State of Indiana or any municipality or agency of such State authorized by or pursuant to law to accept such undivided one-half interest (hereafter in this act referred to as the "Indiana interest") and an undivided one-half interest in the physical structure of the bridge and its approaches to the State of Kentucky or any municipality or agency of such State authorized by or pursuant to law to accept such undivided one-half interest (hereafter in this act referred to as the "Kentucky interest"), under the condition that the bridge shall thereafter be free of tolls and be properly maintained, operated, and repaired by the Indiana interest and the Kentucky interest as may be agreed on. If no Indiana interest or Kentucky interest is authorized to accept, or does accept, such one-half interest in the bridge and approaches under such conditions, then the bridge shall continue to be owned, maintained, operated, and repaired by the Commission, and the rates of tolls shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and approaches under economical management, until such time as an Indiana interest and a Kentucky interest is authorized to accept, and does accept, such bridge and approaches under such conditions.

(2) The Commission is authorized to transfer, by deeds or other suitable instruments of conveyance, the bridge and its approaches and all other assets and property of the Commission to the Indiana Toll Bridge Commission, or to any similar agency of the State of Kentucky, or to both of them jointly, if the grantee agrees to assume the liabilities and obligations of the Commission with respect to such bridge and property. Tolls collected by the grantee shall be used only to pay (A) the bonds outstanding at the time of the transfer, plus accrued interest, (B) the reasonable cost of maintenance and operation of the bridge and approaches until such bonds and interest have been paid, and (C) the assumed liabilities and obligations. After a fund has been accumulated which the United States Commissioner of Public Roads determines is adequate to carry out the preceding sentence, such bridge shall thereafter be free of tolls, and shall be properly maintained, operated, and repaired by the grantee. The bridge and its approaches may not be transferred under this paragraph after payment of the bonds and interest, or after a sinking fund sufficient for such payment has been provided.

(3) Whenever the bridge and approaches are transferred under this subsection, the Commission, its successors or assigns, shall (if the ferry and other property have not already been disposed of) sell the ferry and franchise, and the real estate, equipment, and other property associated with the ferry, as soon as practicable at such price and upon such terms as the Commission, its successors or assigns, may determine.

(b) (1) The Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency may make advances to the Commission under the terms and subject to the conditions of section 702 of the Housing Act of 1954, and may purchase the securities and obligations of, or make loans to, the Commission under the terms and subject to the conditions of title II of the Housing Amendments of 1955.

(2) If the State Highway Department of the State of Indiana consents, amounts apportioned to that State out of sums appropriated under the Federal-Aid Road Act of July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, may be allocated for the construction of such bridge and approaches, in the same manner and subject to the same terms and conditions as apply in the case of projects on the Federal-aid primary highway system. If the Department of Highways of the State of Kentucky consents, amounts apportioned to that State out of sums appropriated under the Federal-Aid Road Act of July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, may be allocated for the construction of such bridge and approaches, in the same manner and subject to the same terms and conditions as apply in the case of projects on the Federal-aid primary highway system.

SEC. 8. The Commission and its successors and assigns are authorized to provide for the payment of the cost of the bridge and approaches (including the approach highways which, in the judgment of the Commission, it is necessary or advisable to construct or cause to be constructed to provide suitable and adequate connection with existing improved highways) and the necessary lands, easements, and appurtenances thereto by negotiating and entering into a contract or contracts with the State Highway Department of Indiana, the Department of Highways of Kentucky, Perry County, Ind., Hancock County, Ky., the city of Hawesville, Ky., the city of Cannelton, Ind., or any other county or municipality in the States of Indiana and Kentucky, whereby the Commission may receive financial aid in financing the construction of the bridge and approaches. The Commission, in its discretion, may avail itself of all the facilities of the State Highway Department of Indiana, the Department of Highways of the State of Kentucky, or any county or municipality in the State of Indiana or the State of Kentucky, with regard to construction of said birdge, and the Commission may make and enter into any contract or contracts which it deems expedient and proper with the State Highway Department of the State of Indiana, or the Department of Highways of the State of Kentucky, or any county or municipality in the State of Indiana and the State of Kentucky, whereby said highway departments, municipalities, or counties, or either of them may construct, operate, and maintain, or participate with the Commission in the construction, operation, and maintenance of the bridge and its approaches. It is hereby declared to be the purpose of Congress to facilitate the construction of a bridge and proper approaches across the Ohio River at or near Cannelton, Ind., and to authorize the Commission to promote said object and purpose, with full power to contract with either the State Highway Department of Indiana, the Department of Highways of Kentucky, or any municipality, or county, or cities in the States of Indiana and Kentucky, or all of them, in relation to the construction, operation, and maintenance of said bridge and approaches .

SEC. 9. (a) For the purpose of carrying into effect the objects stated in this act, there is hereby created the city of Cannelton Bridge Commission, and by that name, style, and title said body shall have perpetual succession, may contract, and be contracted with, sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, complain and defend in all courts of law and equity; may make and have a common seal; may purchase or otherwise acquire and hold or dispose of real estate and other property; may accept and receive donations or gifts of money or property and apply the same to the purposes of this act; and shall have and possess all powers necessary, convenient, or proper for carrying into effect the objects stated in this act.

(b) The Commission shall consist of Edward F. Clemens, John Conway, and Robert Cummings, of Cannelton, Ind.; and Arnold Mulzer, of Tell City, Ind.; and C. D. Mayfield, of Hawesville, Ky.; such Commission shall be a public body corporate and politic. Each member of the Commission shall qualify within 30 days of the date of enactment of this act by filing with the Commissioner of Public Roads of the United States an oath that he will faithfully perform the duties imposed upon him by this act. Each person appointed to fill a vacancy shall qualify in the same manner within 30 days after his appointment. Any vacancy occurring in the Commission by reason of failure to qualify, death, or resignation, shall be filled by appointment by the Commissioner of Public Roads.

(c) The first five members of the Commission shall hold office for 4 years. At the end of that time, the members of the Commission shall be divided into three classes by drawing lots so that two members shall be in the first class, two in the second class, and one in the third class. The members of the Commission of the first class shall hold office for an additional 2 years, the members of the second class shall hold office for an additional 4 years, and the member of the third class shall hold office for an additional 6 years, after the first 4 years has expired. Upon the expiration of the term of any member of the Commission, his place on the Commission shall be filled by appointment for 6 years made by the Commissioner of Public Roads, who may reappoint the member whose term is expiring.

(d) Before any bonds may be issued under this act, each of the first five members of the Commission must give such bond as may be fixed by the Commissioner of Public Roads, conditioned upon his faithful performance of all duties required by this act. The cost of such surety before and during the construction of the bridge shall be paid, or reimbursement made, out of the proceeds from the sale of bonds; thereafter such cost shall be an operating expense of the Commission to be paid from tolls.

(e) The Commission may establish rules and regulations for the government of its business not inconsistent with this act. The Commission shall from time to time select a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members. Three members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum.

SEC. 10. The Commission shall have no capital stock or shares of interest or participation, and all revenues and receipts thereof shall be applied to the purposes specified in this act. The members of the Commission shall be entitled to a per diem compensation for their services of $10 for each day actually spent in the business of the Commission but the maximum compensation of the chairman in any year shall not exceed $1,200, and of each other member shall not exceed $600 in any 1 year. The members of the Commission shall be entitled to receive a traveling-expense allowance of 10 cents a mile for each mile actually traveled on the business of the Commission. The Commission may employ a secretary, treasurer, engineers, attorneys, and such other experts, assistants, and employees as it may deem necessary, who shall be entitled to receive such compensation as the Commission may determine. All salaries and expenses shall be paid solely from the funds provided under the authority of this act. After all bonds and interest thereon have been paid and all other obligations of the Commission paid or discharged, or provision for all such payments shall have been made, and after the bridge has been conveyed to the Indiana interest and the Kentucky interest, or otherwise disposed of as provided in this act, the Commission shall be dissolved and shall cease to have further existence by an order of the Commissioner of Public Roads made upon his own initiative or upon application of the Commission or any member or members thereof, but only after a public hearing in the city of Cannelton, Ind., notice of the time and place of which hearing and the purpose thereof shall have been published once at least 30 days before the date thereof, in a newspaper published in Perry County, Ind. At the time of such dissolution all moneys in the hands of or to the credit of the Commission shall be divided and distribution made between the Indiana interest, and the Kentucky interest, as may be determined by the Commissioner of Public Roads of the United States.

SEC. 11. Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize or permit the Commission or any member thereof to create any obligation or incur any liability other than such obligations and liabilities as are dischargeable solely from funds provided under this act. No obligation created or liability incurred pursuant to this act shall be a personal obligation or liability of any member or members of the Commission, nor shall any indebtedness created pursuant to this act be an indebtedness of the United States.

SEC. 12. The design and construction of any bridge which may be built pursuant to this act shall be in accordance with the standard specifications for highway bridges adopted by the American Association of State Highway Officials.

SEC. 13. The Commission, and its income, property, and franchises shall be exempt from all Federal taxation.

SEC. 14. All provisions of this act may be enforced or the violation thereof prevented by mandamus, injunction, or other appropriate remedy brought by the Attorney General of the United States in any United States district court having competent jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the parties.

SEC. 15. (a) The financial transactions of the Commission shall be audited annually by the General Accounting Office in accordance with the principles and procedures applicable to commercial corporate transactions and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States. The audit shall be conducted at the places where the accounts of the Commission are normally kept. The representatives of the General Accounting Office shall have access to all books, accounts, financial records, reports, files, and all other papers, things, or property belonging to or in use by the Commission and necessary to facilitate the audit, and they shall be afforded full facilities for verifying transactions with the balances or securities held by depositaries, fiscal agents, and custodians.

(b) A report of each such audit shall be made by the Comptroller General to the Congress not later than January 15 following the close of the fiscal year for which such audit is made. The report shall set forth the scope of the audit and shall include a statement of assets and liabilities, capital, and surplus or deficit; a statement of surplus or deficit analysis; a statement of income and expense; a statement of sources and application of funds; and such comments and information as may be deemed necessary to keep Congress informed of the operations and financial condition of the Commission, together with such recommendations with respect thereto as the Comptroller General may deem advisable. The report shall also show specifically any program, expenditures, or other financial transaction or undertaking observed in the course of the audit, which, in the opinion of the Comptroller General, has been carried on or made without authority of law. A copy of each report shall be furnished to the Commission at the time submitted to the Congress.

CITY OF LAWRENCEBURG BRIDGE COMMISSION

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10468) creating the City of Lawrenceburg Bridge Commission, defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission; and authorizing the commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Lawrenceburg, Ind., and Boone County, Ky., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this bridge to be built with Federal taxpayers' money or by a bond issue?

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. It will be built by private funds, through the sale of bonds.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentleman and the people he represents for shouldering their own financial responsibilities. Recently I opposed a bill that ladled out $15 million for the building of a bridge across the Potomac River, between the States of Virginia and Maryland, with the taxpayers of the entire country paying the bill. That is why I want to commend the gentleman and his people.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Lawrenceburg Bridge Commission created by section 8 of this act (hereinafter in this act referred to as the "Commission"), and its successors and assigns, is authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto, across the Ohio River at or near the city of Lawrenceburg, Ind., and Boone County, Ky, in accordance with the General Bridge Act of 1946, at a point suitable to the interest of public navigation.

SEC. 2. The Commission and its successors and assigns shall have the right and power to enter upon such lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use such real estate and other property in the State of Indiana and the State of Kentucky, as may be needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, and proceedings therefor shall be the same as proceedings for condemnation of private property for public purposes in such State. The Commission, its successors and assigns, may enter into agreements with such States, and any political subdivisions thereof, for the acquisition, lease, or use of any real estate or other property owned by such State or political subdivision.

SEC. 3. The Commission and its successors and assigns may fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge in accordance with this act, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Army under the General Bridge Act of 1946.

SEC. 4. The Commission and its successors and assigns may provide for the payment of the cost of such bridge as may be constructed, and approaches (including any approach highways which, in the judgment of the Commission, it is necessary or advisable to construct or cause to be constructed to provide suitable and adequate connection with existing and improved highways), and the necessary lands, easements, and appurtenances thereto, by an issue or issues of negotiable bonds of the Commission, bearing interest at the rate or rates of not more than 6 percent per annum. The principal and interest of such bonds, and any premium to be paid for retirement thereof before maturity, shall be paid solely from the sinking fund provided in accordance with this act, and such payments may be further secured by a mortgage on the bridge. All such bonds may be registrable as to principal alone, or both principal and interest, shall be in such form not inconsistent with this act, shall mature at such time or times not exceeding 30 years from their respective dates, shall be in such denominations, shall be executed in such manner, and shall be payable in such medium and at such place or places, as the Commission may determine. The Commission may repurchase and reserve the right to redeem all or any of such bonds before maturity in such manner and at such price or prices, not exceeding 105 percent of the principal amount thereof and accrued interest, as may be fixed by the Commission before issuance of the bonds. The Commission, when it deems it to be to the best interest of the Commission may issue refunding bonds to repurchase and redeem any outstanding bonds before their maturity. Such refunding bonds shall mature at such time or times, not exceeding 40 years from the date of enactment of this act, as the Commission may determine. The Commission may enter into an agreement with any bank or trust company in the United States as trustee having the power to make such agreement, setting forth the duties of the Commission with respect to the purchase, construction, maintenance, operation, repair, and insurance of the bridge, the conservation and application of all funds, the security for payment of the bonds, the safeguarding of money on hand or on deposit, and the rights and remedies of the trustee and the holders of the bonds, restricting the individual right of action of the bondholders as is customary in trust agreements respecting bonds of corporation. Such trust agreement may contain such provisions for protecting, and enforcing the rights and remedies of the trustee and the bondholders, as may be reasonable and proper and not inconsistent with law.

Such bonds shall be sold in such manner and at such time or times and at such price as the Commission may determine, but no such sale shall be made at a price so low as to require the payment of interest at the rate of more than 6 percent per annum on the money received therefor, computed with relation to the absolute maturity of the bonds in accordance with standard tables of bond values. The face amount of the bonds shall be so calculated as to produce, at the price of their sale, amounts which, when added to any other funds available to the Commission for the same purposes, will be not less than the cost of the bridge and approaches, and the lands, easements, and appurtenances, used in connection therewith. The cost of the bridge and approaches and approach highways shall be considered to include interest during the construction of the bridge and for 12 months after construction has been completed, and to include all engineering, legal, architectural, traffic surveying, and other expenses incident to the construction of the bridge and the acquisition of the necessary real estate and other property, and incident to the financing thereof. If the proceeds of the bonds issued, when added to any other funds available to the Commission for the same purpose, exceed the cost as finally determined under this section of the bridge and approaches, and the lands, easements, and appurtenances, used in connection therewith, the excess shall be placed in the sinking fund provided for in this act. Before the preparation of definite bonds, the Commission may, subject to the provisions of this act, issue temporary bonds or interim certificates, with or without coupons, of any denomination whatsoever, exchangeable for definite bonds when such bonds as have been executed are available for delivery.

SEC. 5. The rates of toll to be charged for the use of the bridge shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and approaches under economical management, to provide a sinking fund sufficient to pay the principal and interest of such bonds as they fall due, and to pay for redemption or repurchase of all or any of such bonds redeemed or repurchased before maturity as provided in section 4. All tolls and other revenues from the bridge are hereby pledged to such use and to their application as required by this section. After payment or provision for payment from such tolls of all such cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and approaches, and the reservation of an amount of money estimated by the Commission to be sufficient for such purposes during an ensuing period of not more than 6 months, the remainder of the tolls collected shall be placed in the sinking fund, at intervals to be determined by the Commission before the issuance of the bonds. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and approaches, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested. The Commission shall classify in a reasonable way all traffic over the bridge so that the tolls shall be so fixed and adjusted by it as to be uniform in the application to all traffic within reasonable classes, regardless of the status or character of any person, firm, or corporation participating in such traffic, and shall event all use of such bridge except upon payment of tolls so fixed and adjusted.

Within a reasonable time after the construction of the bridge has been completed, the Commission shall file with the Secretary of Commerce a sworn itemized statement, showing the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the cost of acquiring any interest in real estate or other property necessary therefor, and the amount of bonds, debentures, or other evidence of indebtedness issued in connection with the construction of the bridge and approaches.

SEC. 6. (a) After payment of the bonds and interest, or after a sinking fund sufficient for such payment has been provided and is being held for such payment, the Commission shall transfer by deeds or other suitable instruments of conveyance, an undivided one-half interest in the physical structure of the bridge and its approaches to the State of Indiana or any municipality or agency of such State authorized by or pursuant to law to accept such undivided one-half interest (hereafter in this act referred to as the "Indiana interest") and an undivided one-half interest in the physical structure of the bridge and its approaches to the State of Kentucky or any municipality or agency of such State authorized by or pursuant to law to accept such undivided one-half interest (hereafter in this act referred to as the "Kentucky interest"), under the condition that the bridge shall thereafter be free of tolls and be properly maintained, operated, and repaired by the Indiana interest and the Kentucky interest as may be agreed on. If no Indiana interest or Kentucky interest is authorized to accept, or does accept, such one-half interest in the bridge and approaches under such conditions, then the bridge shall continue to be owned, maintained, operated, and repaired by the Commission, and the rates of tolls shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and approaches under economical management, until such time as an Indiana interest and a Kentucky interest is authorized to accept, and does accept, such bridge and approaches under such conditions.

(b) (1) The Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency may make advances to the Commission under the terms and subject to the conditions of section 702 of the Housing Act of 1954, and may purchase the securities and obligations of, or make loans to, the Commission under the terms and subject to the conditions of title II of the Housing Amendments of 1955.

(2) If the State Highway Department of the State of Indiana consents, amounts apportioned to that State out of sums appropriated under the Federal-Aid Road Act of July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, may be allocated for the construction of such bridge and approaches, in the same manner and subject to the same terms and conditions as apply in the case of projects on the Federal-aid primary highway system. If the department of highways of the State of Kentucky consents, amounts apportioned to that State out of sums appropriated under the Federal-Aid Road Act of July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, may be allocated for the construction of such bridge and approaches, in the same manner and subject to the same terms and conditions as apply in the case of projects on the Federal-aid primary highway system.

SEC. 7. The Commission and its successors and assigns are authorized to provide for the payment of the cost of the bridge and approaches (including the approach highways which, in the judgment of the Commission, it is necessary or advisable to construct or cause to be constructed to provide suitable and adequate connection with existing improved highways) and the necessary lands, easements, and appurtenances thereto by negotiating and entering into a contract or contracts with the State Highway Department of Indiana, the Department of Highways of Kentucky, Dearborn County, Ind., Boone County, Ky., the city of Lawrenceburg, Ind., or any other county or municipality in the States of Indiana and Kentucky, whereby the Commission may receive financial aid in financing the construction of the bridge and approaches. The Commission, in its discretion, may avail itself of all the facilities of the State Highway Department of Indiana, the Department of Highways of the State of Kentucky, or any county or municipality in the State of Indiana or the State of Kentucky, with regard to construction of said bridge, and the Commission may make and enter into any contract or contracts which it deems expedient and proper with the State Highway Department of the States of Indiana, or the Department of Highways of the State of Kentucky, or any county or municipality in the State of Indiana and the State of Kentucky, whereby said highway departments, municipalities, or counties, or either of them may construct, operate, and maintain, or participate with the Commission in the construction, operation, and maintenance of the bridge and its approaches. It is hereby declared to be the purpose of Congress to facilitate the construction of a bridge and proper approaches across the Ohio River at or near the city of Lawrenceburg, Ind., and to authorize the Commission to promote said object and purpose, with full power to contract with either the State Highway Department of Indiana, the Department of Highways of Kentucky, or any municipality, or county, or cities in the States of Indiana and Kentucky, of all of them, in relation to the construction, operation, and maintenance of said bridge and approaches.

SEC. 8. (a) For the purpose of carrying into effect the objects stated in this act, there is hereby created the City of Lawrenceburg Bridge Commission, and by that name, style, and title said body shall have perpetual succession, may contract, and be contracted with, sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, complain and defend in all courts of law and equity; may make and have a common seal; may purchase or otherwise acquire and hold or dispose of real estate and other property; may accept and receive donations or gifts of money or property and apply the same to the purposes of this act; and shall have and possess all powers necessary, convenient, or proper for carrying into effect the objects stated in this act.

(b) The Commission shall consist of O. M. Keller, Robert H. Nanz, Victor O'Shaughnessy, Walter G. Decker, Eugene M. Stallings, E. G. Harry, F. D. Dobar, E. P. Henderson, and Frank Hutchinson of Lawrenceburg, Ind., and Walter Ferguson of Union, Ky.; the mayor of the city of Lawrenceburg, Ind., shall serve as a member of the Commission ex officio, without compensation; such Commission shall be a public body corporate and politic. Each member of the Commission shall qualify within 30 days of the date of enactment of this act by filing with the Commissioner of Public Roads of the United States an oath that he will faithfully perform the duties imposed upon him by this act. Each person appointed to fill a vacancy shall qualify in the same manner within 30 days after his appointment. Any vacancy occurring in the Commission by reason of failure to qualify, death, or resignation, shall be filled by appointment by the Commissioner of Public Roads.

(c) Before any bonds may be issued under this act, each of the members of the Commission must give such bond as may be fixed by the Commissioner of Public Roads, conditioned upon his faithful performance of all duties required by this act. The cost of such surety before and during the construction of the bridge shall be paid, or reimbursement made, out of the proceeds from the sale of bonds; thereafter such cost shall be an operating expense of the Commission, to be paid from tolls.

(d) The Commission may establish rules and regulations for the government of its business not inconsistent with this act. The Commission shall from time to time select a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members. A majority of the members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum.

SEC. 9. The Commission shall have no capital stock or shares of interest or participation, and all revenues and receipts thereof shall be applied to the purposes specified in this act. The members of the Commission shall be entitled to a per diem compensation for their services of $10 for each day actually spent in the business of the Commission but the maximum compensation of the chairman in any year shall not exceed $1,200, and of each other member shall not exceed $600 in any 1 year. The members of the Commission shall be entitled to receive a traveling expense allowance of 10 cents a mile for each mile actually traveled on the business of the Commission. The Commission may employ a secretary, treasurer, engineers, attorneys, and such other experts, assistants, and employees as it may deem necessary, who shall be entitled to receive such compensation as the Commission may determine. All salaries and expenses shall be paid solely from the funds provided under the authority of this act. After all bonds and interest thereon have been paid and all other obligations of the Commission paid or discharged, or provision for all such payments shall have been made, and after the bridge has been conveyed to the Indiana interest and the Kentucky interest, or otherwise disposed of as provided in this act, the Commission shall be dissolved and shall cease to have further existence by an order of the Commissioner of Public Roads made upon his own initiative or upon application of the Commission or any member or members thereof, but only after a public hearing in the city of Lawrenceburg, Ind., notice of the time and place of which hearing and the purpose thereof shall have been published once at least 30 days before the date thereof, in a newspaper published in Boone County, Ky., and in a newspaper published in Dearborn County, Ind. At the time of such dissolution all moneys in the hands of or to the credit of the Commission shall be divided and distribution made between the Indiana interest and the Kentucky interest, as may be determined by the Commissioner of Public Roads of the United States.

SEC. 10. Nothing in this act may be construed to authorize or permit the Commission or any member thereof to create any obligation or incur any liability other than such obligations and liabilities as are dischargeable solely from funds provided under this act. No obligation created or liability incurred pursuant to this act shall be a personal obligation or liability of any member or members of the Commission, nor shall any indebtedness created pursuant to this act be an indebtedness of the United States.

SEC. 11. The design and construction of any bridge which may be built pursuant to this act shall be in accordance with the standard specifications for highway bridges adopted by the American Association of State Highway Officials.

SEC. 12. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONFORMANCE WITH FISH AND GAME LAWS ON FEDERAL LANDS

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 734, the bill (H. R. 8250) to require conformance with State and Territorial fish and game laws and licensing requirements on Federal lands not subject to such laws.

I do this with the purpose of asking the objectors why objection was made since every State in the Union is interested in this bill. The bill merely provides that uniform hunting regulations be required on all Government property, that the hunter comply with the State law. That is all the bill does.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield to me, the reason the request was made is that the sponsor of the bill wished the right to make such a request.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I talked to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], and I understand that the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] is now agreeable to permitting the bill to pass, and under the amendment it could be corrected in the next session of Congress if it were found that it did not work.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, with the amendment, I would not care for the bill.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

DEMOLITION AND REMOVAL OF CERTAIN STRUCTURES IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 803, the bill S. 3881.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment? May I say this? I am not a member of the Committee on Public Works. My only interest in this proposed legislation is that it is a part of beautifying the capital of the United States. Everyone knows about these temporaries near the Botanical Gardens. They are a sore spot. I do not see any reason why we could not proceed with beautifying the city of Washington, especially the removal of these temporary structures. I do hope the gentleman will permit this bill to be considered.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the gentleman's very fine argument, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

FRYINGPAN-ARKANSAS PROJECT, COLORADO

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 641 and ask for its present consideration. May I say that up to a few minutes ago the printed copies had not arrived.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution, it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 412) to authorize the construction, operation, and maintenance by the Secretary of the Interior of the Fryingpan-Arkansas project, Colorado. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES], and ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time to call to the attention of the House the report of a special committee appointed by the Governor and cabinet of the State of Florida to recommend legislative action relating to public-school education and other internal affairs of our State deemed expedient after consideration of recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The committee which has drafted this report is a very distinguished committee, headed by a very able former circuit judge of my district, the Honorable L. L. Fabisinski. Among its members are a former chief justice of the Florida supreme court, the Honorable Rivers Buford, a former president of the American Bar Association, Mr. Cody Fowler, and other outstanding Floridians.

I call this report to the attention of the House because of its sound findings and because of the high plane on which it is couched. I consider it a monumental work; one of the best I have seen on this subject.

I expect under permission to revise and extend my remarks to include the language of the report in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I respectfully recommend its careful reading.

The report follows:

A REPORT OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE APPOINTED BY THE GOVERNOR AND CABINET OF THE STATE OF FLORIDA TO RECOMMEND LEGISLATIVE ACTION RELATING TO PUBLIC SCHOOL EDUCATION AND OTHER INTERNAL AFFAIRS OF SUCH STATE DEEMED EXPEDIENT AFTER CONSIDERATION OF RECENT DECISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, JULY 16, 1956

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., July 16, 1956.

HIS EXCELLENCY, THE HONORABLE LEROY COLLINS, GOVERNOR, AND MEMBERS OF THE CABINET OF THE STATE OF FLORIDA.

HONORED SIRS: Your committee which was appointed to study the laws of the State of Florida and to recommend any changes, amendments, or additions thereto deemed expedient after consideration of certain recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, respectfully submits herewith its report.

In order that interested persons may know and understand the reasons for the creation of the committee and the purposes for which it was formed, we submit a declaration adopted by the committee as follows:

It is the considered opinion of this committee that at the outset of its deliberations and in order that its members and other interested persons may better understand the reasons for its creation, a formal declaration of purpose should be made.

These are admittedly difficult times, when many ideas and suggestions are being expressed hurriedly and without due study. The carrying out of many of these ideas and suggestions would be harmful to our constitution, would increase tension and feeling between the various groups of our citizenry, and would seek to challenge the authority of the United States of America. After careful consideration and deliberation this committee has determined that its purposes and obligations are:

First: To maintain the public school system of the State of Florida.

Second: To endeavor to determine the best interests, from an educational standpoint, of all of the children of our State, to further such interests in every manner and to do all that is possible to achieve and maintain the highest possible intellectual, moral, and cultural standards of our school system.

Third: To eliminate or to mitigate as much as possible any hostile feeling which might arise between any class or group of our citizens.

Fourth: To comply at all times and under all conditions with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States of America and the constitution of the State of Florida.

Fifth: To determine, as thoughful and responsible citizens of the State of Florida and the United States, legislative measures to be considered by the Legislature of the State of Florida in keeping with the above-avowed purposes of this committee; to recommend such action to the representatives of our State and its various subdivisions and to the people of the State as a whole; and to call upon all of the citizens of our State to keep these purposes in mind and to strive in their own conduct to effectuate these goals.

In accordance with our understanding of the purposes of the committee as above set forth we respectfully recommend:

1. Enactment of a law vesting in County boards of public instruction full power to assign pupils to public schools on the basis of individual needs and abilities, providing for appeals from such assignments to the State board of education and for judicial review of such assignments, copy of such proposed law being filed herewith.

2. Enactment of a law regulating assignment of teachers, copy of such proposed law being filed herewith.

3. Enactment of a law vesting power in the governor to promulgate and enforce rules and regulations relating to the use of any State, county, or municipal park, building, or facility that may be necessary or expedient to preserve the peace and tranquility of the State and prevent domestic violence, copy of such proposed law being filed herewith.

4. Enactment of an act clarifying and codifying the law relating to the powers of the Governor by proclamation to declare the existence of an emergency in the State or any portion thereof and to use all law enforcement officers and departments, including the military forces of the State, to prevent or suppress disorder, copy of such proposed law being filed herewith.

In the performance of our assigned duty we were and are confronted with recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which violate accepted standards of judicial power, disrupt previous concepts of the relation between the Federal Government and the several States, disregard former decisions of the Court as to the rights of the States and the people, and destroy constitutional government as conceived by our forefathers.

These recent decisions of the Supreme Court transgress upon the rights of the people, encroach upon the powers of the executive department of the Federal Government, infringe upon the vested powers of Congress, ignore the rights of the States, violate the intent of those who wrote, proposed, and adopted our Constitution and the amendments thereto and in the aggregate constitute a usurpation of authority and a threat to constitutional government unparalleled in American history.

We, as members of your committee recommend, most emphatically, that the invasion by the Supreme Court of the rights of the States, of the legislative and executive departments of the United States and of the people be denounced in clear and unmistakable language and every lawful means be adopted to restore these rights, and curb this threat to our liberties.

The rights of a free people to protest against usurpation of power, to petition for redress of grievances, to demand that their public officers act within their assigned jurisdiction, are inalienable and inherent rights, which, as yet, have not been taken from us and we respectfully recommend that in the exercise of these rights that the legislature, in the name and in behalf of the State of Florida and its people, denounce the usurpation of power by the Supreme Court and demand, as is the right of a free people, that their just and inherent powers be held inviolate.

Candor demands the immediate statement that the preparation of the following statement was begun with a view of demonstrating the gravity of the tragic impact of the "desegregation decisions" of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the institutions and peoples of the several States and the complete lack of constitutional justification of the decisions reached in those cases. However, a study of many other recent decisions of the Court obviously stemming from the same concepts of constitutional government that, in the minds of the members of the Court, justified the desegregation decisions leads unavoidably to the conclusion that the problem under consideration is not one which concerns the State of Florida alone, but every State and every citizen of the United States.

Nor does the problem arise out of a mere mistake in the pronouncement of the law upon one isolated subject, important as that may be. The entire American system of government is at stake.

In view of the gravity of the situation, the question of segregation or desegregation in public schools, the seriousness of which cannot be overemphasized, actually becomes one of secondary importance.

The candid reader is requested to ask himself whether the opinions herein referred to, when properly analyzed, do not impel the conclusion that the Supreme Court of the United States has assumed the power, by judicial decree, to change the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, and thus to amend the fundamental law of the land by the act of nine men, or a majority of them, rather than by the orderly processes set forth in the Constitution.

No matter how strongly the people of Florida may feel on the question of segregation, they recognize that citizens of other States have the right to entertain a different view. If the views of others attain that unanimity of popular support that is required to amend the Constitution of the United States, and such amendment be adopted, it is the duty of every American ctizen to yield gracefully to the will of the people of the country as a whole. On the other hand, every thinking American knows that surrender to the Supreme Court of power to change the Constitution in order to effect reforms which members of the Court may deem beneficient, will vest in that Court power to make changes inimicable to the public welfare, and will eventually lead to a complete loss of control of the Government by the people.

It is not the purpose of the present statement to attack or defend any of the decisions herein discussed insofar as the conclusions reached may or may not be sound or wise as abstract statements of what the law should be, or what the Constitution should, by amendment, be made to mean. Its sole purpose is to demonstrate the extent to which the Supreme Court has exceeded its jurisdiction, has attempted to change the Constitution and has usurped powers belonging to other Departments of the Federal Government, the States, and the people.

Before going further we ask the reader to reflect upon, and to read this statement in the light of, the following words of George Washington taken from his Farewell Address:

"If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed."

As we have candidly stated above, the preparation of the following declaration was begun as a protest against the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the year 1954, abrogating the powers of the States to control their systems of education, but as we have studied the pronouncements of the Court in the recent past few months, we have come to the inevitable conclusion that the present membership of the Supreme Court of the United States has embarked upon a course of action designed to destroy the system of dual sovereignty, which is the unique feature and fundamental basis of our Union, to destroy the system of division of the powers of Government between the executive, legislative, and judicial departments, which is the greatest safeguard of the people against tyranny, and in complete disregard of the Constitution of the United States and the inherent rights of the sovereign States determined to arrogate to themselves final, complete, supreme, and exclusive power over the States, the Federal Government, and the people.

Your committee has set forth the basis of this conclusion in the following statement and respectfully recommends that the substance thereof be embodied in a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Florida as a protest of the people of this State against this threat to our rights, as a demand for return to constitutional government, and as a call to our fellow Americans to join with us in preserving our inherent rights as a free people for all future time.

A DENOUNCEMENT OF USURPATION OF POWER AND DEMAND FOR PRESERVATION OF OUR INHERENT RIGHTS

In the life of a democratic nation when it becomes necessary for the people to take notice of and enter a solemn protest against any usurpation of power by those who have been entrusted with high public office, and to demand, as of right, that public officers remain subservient to the people and that they desist from assuming powers which have not, by the people, been placed in their hands, the opinions of their fellow men require that the people set forth in clear and unmistakable language the causes which impel them to such action.

To the end that the declarations now about to be made may be thoroughly understood, and the motives which impel them may be fully appreciated, we first pronounce the following principles, each of which we hold to be an integral part of our American system of government:

1. All political power is inherent in the people and all government derives all its powers from the consent of the governed.

2. When the people form a government by the adoption of a written constitution the words of that constitution are but the instrumentalities by which ideas, principles, and plans present in the minds of those who adopt the constitution are recorded for accuracy and for preservation to posterity.

3. Those who are temporarily invested with power over their fellow countrymen, by being chosen to occupy public offices provided for in a constitution, are charged with a solemn responsibility to exercise only such powers as, under such constitution, have been entrusted to them.

4. A division of the powers of Government into three departments, executive, legislative, and judicial is expressed or implied in every constitution of the American Union, including the Constitution of the United States.

5. The Constitution of the United States is a grant of powers to the central Federal Government, and all powers not delegated to the Federal Government by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, or to the people.

6. The judicial powers delegated to the Federal Government are vested by the Constitution in the Federal judiciary and include the power to interpret, construe and apply the Constitution of the United States.

7. The power to interpret, construe, and apply the Constitution is limited to an ascertainment of the ideas, principles, and thoughts that were in the minds of those who drafted and adopted the Constitution, including amendments thereto, and the application of those ideas, principles, and thoughts to particular factual situations from time to time presented to the courts. The application of constitutional principles may differ with changing conditions, but the principles themselves are unchanging and unchangeable except by the people and then only by the method provided in the Constitution.

8. A judicial construction of the Constitution enunciated by the Supreme Court of the United States and understood and acquiesced in by the executive department, the Congress, and the people over a long period of time becomes as much a part of the fundamental law of the land as that which has been written in the Constitution itself, and is binding equally upon the people, the States of the Union, and the Supreme Court of the United States.

9. The Constitution of the United States may be amended only in the manner provided in that Constitution. In the course of history since the adoption of the Constitution the people have 21 times found it expedient to amend the Constitution, and when that unanimity of public opinion which justifies a change in the Constitution has developed among the people they have found no difficulty in effecting the changes they found desirable.

10. The assumption by any public official, or group of public officials, of power to change the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, other than by the method provided by article V of the Constitution, is an abuse of public trust and a tyrannical usurpation of power.

Under the Constitution of the United States when evidences of the assumption of tyrannical powers appear in the Executive or in the Congress the people may, by means of the ballot, protect and preserve their liberties by the repudiation of those in office. But when the Federal judiciary, which is insulated from the heat of political differences by the life tenure of its membership, enters upon a course of action inimicable to the rights of the people, this method of reform is unavailable. Under such circumstances those restraints which characterize men capable of self-government require that by orderly and peaceable means the inherent and unalienable rights and powers of the people shall be utilized to restore those rights of which they have unjustly and unlawfully been deprived.

We call to the attention of all thinking Americans the following unwarranted and unauthorized acts of invasion of the powers reserved to the States and to the people:

By decisions rendered May 17, 1954, in Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka; Harry Briggs, Jr., et al., v. R. W. Elliott, et al.; Dorothy E. Davis, et al., v. County School Board of Prince Edward County, Va.; Frances B. Gebhart, et al., v. Ethel Louise Belton, et al. (347 U. S. 483, 98 L. Ed. 873) the Supreme Court of the United States denied to the sovereign States of the American Union the power to regulate public education by the use of practices first declared constitutional by the State of Massachusetts, adopted by the Congress, approved by the Executive, affirmed and reaffirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States and practiced by States for more than a century.

It has based these decisions upon matters of fact as to which the parties affected were not given an opportunity to offer evidence or cross examine the witnesses against them.

It has cited as authority for the assumed and asserted facts the unsworn writings of men, one of whom was the hireling of an active participant in the litigation. Others were affiliated with organizations declared by the Attorney General of the United States to be subversive, and one of whom, in the same writing which the Court cited as authority for its decision stated that the Constitution of the United States is "impractical and unsuited to modern conditions."

In reaching its conclusion the Supreme Court has disregarded its former pronouncements and attempted to justify such actions by the expedient of imputing ignorance of psychology to men whose knowledge of the law and understanding of the Constitution could not be impugned, and has expressly predicated its determination of the rights of the people of the several sovereign States of the American Union upon the psychological conclusions of Kotinsky, Brameld, and Myrdal, and their ilk, rather than the legal conclusions of Taft, Holmes, Van Devanter, Brandeis, and their contemporaries upon the bench.

In reaching its conclusion the Court, professing itself to be unable to ascertain the intent of those who adopted the 14th amendment to the Constitution, arbitrarily chose to repudiate the solemn declaration of its meaning rendered under the sanctity of their oath of office by the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States at a time when all of its members were contemporaries of those who proposed, discussed, debated, submitted and adopted the amendment.

However much as citizens of other States may approve and applaud these decisions, they dare not embrace the theory upon which they are based nor the fallacies therein contained lest they themselves by the application of the same theory and fallacies bring destruction to their institutions and to their liberties.

In a decision rendered May 21, 1956, in Railway Employees Department, American Federation of Labor, International Association of Machinists, et al., v. Robert L. Hanson, et al., (— U. S. —, 100 L. Ed. (advance), p. 633), the Supreme Court of the United States held that a union shop agreement negotiated between certain railroads and certain organizations of employees of such railroads which had been authorized by an act of the Congress superseded the right-to-work provisions of the Constitution of the State of Nebraska and the State statutes enacted pursuant thereto.

The effect of this decision, made in a case instituted by free American citizens to enforce their rights under the Constitution of the United States, was to deny these American citizens the right to work at their chosen trade unless they became members of and contributed to the funds of organizations to which they did not wish to belong and to which they did not wish to contribute of their substance.

The effect of this decision was to advise these free American citizens that their right to be immune from any deprivation of liberty or property without due process of law, supposedly guaranteed to them by their Federal Constitution, did not extend to their right to work, supposedly guaranteed by the constitution of their State, as against the demands of a nonofficial labor organization that they pay to it money to be expended in the negotiation of labor contracts, the terms of which these citizens might or might not seek or desire.

The effect of this decision is to vest in the Congress the power to prohibit, permit, or require, closed shops, union shops or open shops or to outlaw unions in each and every industry in America whose activities come within the present expanded concept of interstate commerce.

The effect of this decision is to abrogate, with respect to all employment in interstate business, the constitutions and laws of those 17 sovereign American States which have sought to protect the rights of their citizens to a free and open labor market, making union membership optional with each worker, protecting him on the one hand from an employer who might desire the destruction of the union, and on the other hand from the union which might desire to exploit him or advocate policies which he did not endorse.

By a decision rendered January 16, 1956, Dantan George Rea v. United States of America (— U. S. —, 100 L. Ed. (advance), p. 213), the Supreme Court of the United States held that it was within the power of the Federal courts to enjoin an officer of the executive department of the Federal Government from testifying in the courts of the State of New Mexico in a criminal prosecution of one charged with a violation of a statute of that State prohibiting the possession of marihuana.

In so doing the Court assumed power to direct the activities of executive officers of the Federal Government to the extent of forbidding them from testifying voluntarily, or under the process of a State court, as to matters within their knowledge in a case in which no question of privilege or national security was involved.

In so doing the Court assumed power to control the administration of local justice in State courts by the indirect method of forbidding witnesses to testify in such State courts while giving lipservice to the letter of the rule which denies to the Federal courts any power to control the acts or proceedings of State courts.

In so doing the Court assumed power to fix the rules of evidence which should control the administration of justice in State courts.

In so doing the Supreme Court refused to follow the law as established by former decisions of that Court, which were followed and adhered to for many years.

By a decision rendered April 2, 1956, in Commonwealth of Pennsylvania v. Steve Nelson (— U. S. —, 100 L. Ed. (advance), p. 415), the Supreme Court of the United States has declared that, so long as the present Federal law providing punishment for sedition exists, the sovereign State of Pennsylvania and those 41 of her sister States who have enacted laws against sedition, are without power to enforce their statutes enacted for the purpose of preserving the lives and safety of their citizens from those who would by force and violence overthrow the Government of the United States, the States themselves, or any of their political subdivisions.

This decision was rendered in the case of an acknowledged member of the Communist Party who had been duly convicted in the constitutional trial courts of Pennsylvania of violating the sedition laws of that Commonwealth.

In reaching the conclusion announced, the Supreme Court refused to follow the previously accepted construction and interpretation of the Constitution of the United States as stated in unmistakable language in prior decisions of that Court.

In reaching the announced conclusion, the Court decried, and seemed to find obnoxious the fact that under the Pennsylvania law a private citizen could set in motion the legal processes by which those charged with conspiracy against the Government of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania could be brought to trial and, if found guilty, be punished by due course of Pennsylvania law.

In reaching the announced conclusion the Court dismissed with a casual comment in a footnote to its decision the solemn declaration of the Congress that "Nothing in this title shall be held to take away or impair the jurisdiction of the courts of the several States under the laws thereof."

In reaching the announced conclusion the Court did not limit the impact of its judgment to statutes involving sedition against the Government of the United States, but expressly pointed out that a State has no power to enact laws for its own protection, but must rely upon the Federal authorities for the suppression of sedition against the State itself or its political subdivisions.

In a decision rendered April 23, 1956, in Judson Griffin, et al. v. People of the State of Illinois (— U. S. —, 100 L. Ed. (advance), p. 483), the Supreme Court of the United States held that the due process and equal protection clauses of the Constitution of the United States rendered illegal the imprisonment of one charged with armed robbery and duly convicted in the trial court of Illinois, unless the State of Illinois provided the defendant, free of charge, with a transcript of the proceedings to be used in an appeal of his conviction.

The basis of this decision was that, since the law of Illinois authorized appeals in criminal cases, and the particular defendant in question was insolvent, the 14th amendment required the State to pay the costs of his appeal.

The effect of this decision is to place upon each of the States the duty of guaranteeing the financial ability of every citizen to exercise constitutional rights.

By a decision rendered April 9, 1956, in Harry Slochower v. Board of Higher Education of the City of New York (— U. S. —, 100 L. Ed. (advance), p. 449), the Supreme Court of the United States held that the city of New York had violated the Constitution of the United States by the summary discharge of a public employee who had refused to answer questions relative to his communistic activities and claimed the benefit of the fifth amendment to the Constitution in so doing.

In so holding the Court held invalid a charter provision of the city of New York designed to provide for the removal, as quickly as possible, of those public employees who were deemed by the people of that great city to be unfit to be entrusted with any part in the administration of the public affairs of the city.

In so holding the Court revoked the prompt removal from a State school of a teacher whose influence was deemed by the school authorities to be inimicable to the best interests of the students in such school.

In so holding the Court construed the due process clause of the Constitution to give to the Federal courts the power to examine into minute details of all administrative State action and to apply arbitrarily to such State action the personal concepts of the Justices of the Supreme Court rather than fixed principles of constitutional law.

These, and other decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, can lead the student of law, of government, or of history to but one unavoidable conclusion:

As presently constituted, the Supreme Court of the United States has embraced the philosophy that the Constitution of the United States is not a declaration of fixed or definite principles, unchanging in their meaning, although varying in their application to different factual situations. On the contrary, recent decisions are obviously the result of a theory that changing conditions and variations in social and economic practices justify the Court in changing, by judicial fiat, the meaning of the Constitution in order that it may serve what the members of the Court deem to be the best interests of the people.

Unless the application of this concept of the powers of the Supreme Court of the United States in regard to the rights of the people, the powers of the different departments of government, and the separate and distinct powers of the States and of the Federal Government be stopped, the inevitable result will be to end the American system of constitutional government, and to substitute therefor government by a judicial oligarchy under which the States, and the executive and legislative departments of the Federal Government may exercise only such powers as the Federal judiciary deems fit to permit them to exercise.

Now, therefore, we the people of the State of Florida, speaking by and through our duly elected representatives in the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Florida, do hereby solemnly declare:

That the Supreme Court of the United States of America as presently constituted knowingly, willfully, and over the most respectful protest of litigants before the Court, including many of the sovereign States of the Union, has determined to, and has entered upon a policy of substituting the personal and individual ideas of the members of the Court as to what the Constitution of the United States should be for the letter of the Constitution as it was written by our forefathers, the meaning of the Constitution as it was understood by those who drafted it and voted for its adoption, and the intent of the Constitution as it has been declared by the Highest Court of the Nation over many years and in many able decisions.

That the personal, social, economic, and political ideas of the members of the Supreme Court of the United States do not constitute the proper criterion for the admeasurement of States rights or the powers of the several departments of the Federal Government or the rights of individual citizens.

That acts of the Federal judiciary in willfully asserting a meaning of the Constitution unsupported by the written document, the history of the times in which it was adopted, the construction placed upon it by contemporary courts and the meaning ascribed to it by the people for generations constitutes usurpation of power which, if condoned by the people and allowed to continue, will destroy the American system of Government.

If wise and beneficient men may make changes in the Constitution that are beneficial in the light of changing conditions, others may, with equal propriety make changes which will destroy the rights of the people. It was to guard against conferring the power upon public officials to make mistakes that the people reserved unto themselves the power to amend the Constitution when changing conditions demand a change in the basic law.

That while disobedience to constituted authority is the mother of anarchy, it is the history of free men that they will not supinely permit Government to become the master of the people, and will never yield unrestrained authority to any group of public officers.

That is the duty of every public official sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, and of every citizen who would maintain the principles of Government under which this Nation has grown to its present greatness, regardless of their views as to the abstract justice of the result of any of the acts of usurpation herein enumerated to insist, and we do hereby insist and demand that the Supreme Court of the United States recede from its arbitrary assertion of power to change the fundamental law of the land to meet the personal views of its members as to the present needs of the people, leaving to the people themselves the responsibility of determining when, and to what extent, their Constitution should be amended.

And to this end we respectfully and earnestly urge the executive officers of the Nation, the Congress of the United States, the governor and the attorney general of each of our sister States, and the bar of America, the traditional defender of constitutional government, and all who love and revere the Constitution of the United States, to join us in this declaration, and to do everything within the scope of their personal and official authority to initiate and effect an amendment to Article X of the Constitution of the United States defining the powers reserved to the respective sovereign States, enumerating and defining the powers so reserved to include, among others, the power to regulate the fields of activity mentioned in this report.

We attach to this report an appendix of notes on decisions referred to in the above proposed resolution.

We hope that our labors have provided some suggestions for the legislative and executive departments of our State that will be helpful in preserving the rights of our State and of our people.

Respectfully submitted,

APPENDIX—A DENOUNCEMENT OF USURPATION OF POWER

Notes

Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka (347 U. S. 483, 98 L. Ed. 873): In this case the Supreme Court of the United States held that the maintenance of separate but equal educational facilities for white and colored citizens was, as to the colored citizens, a violation of the 14th amendment to the Constitution of the United States because it denied to such citizens the equal protection of the law.

An analysis of the opinion of the Court discloses the following elementary fallacies:

(a) The Court first asserts its inability to determine the meaning ascribed to the amendment by those who drafted it and those who voted for its adoption. This conclusion is wholly unjustified. Before, contemporaneously with, and for nearly a century since the adoption of the amendment segregated schools were maintained, and the constitutional legality of the practice was affirmed by every court in which it was questioned.

The Supreme Court of the United States in Plessy v. Ferguson (163 U. S. 537, 41 L. Ed. 256), firmly established the rule that State action providing "separate but equal" facilities to citizens of different races complied with the amendment. This decision, while dealing with transportation, referred specifically to schools. This decision was rendered by a Court composed of men, all of whom were adult contemporaries of those who proposed, discussed, debated and adopted the amendment. One was a member of the Supreme Court during that time. One was a justice of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts. One had been a member of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Illinois, one the Attorney General of his State, one an officer in the Union Army, one a District Attorney in his State, and others were active practitioners of law, at or before the time of the ratification of the 14th amendment. If doubt existed as to the meaning of the amendment, the solemn pronouncement of these men rendered under the sanctity of their oaths of office as to matters necessarily within their knowledge—the intent of the people in amending the Constitution—should, by all legal precedent, be conclusive.

If doubt still persisted, the answer to the specific question is made apparent by the application of elementary rules of constitutional construction. It is never presumed that the Constitution is redundant, or that any part of it was inserted idly or that any amendment to it does not in some respect change its meaning. Applying this rule and considering the 14th amendment in connection with the 15th amendment and assuming that the 15th amendment has and serves a purpose we have a guide to the construction, intent, and purpose of the 14th amendment. The 15th amendment guarantees the right to vote. It does nothing more. If the 14th amendment guarantees the right to vote, the 15th amendment adds nothing to, takes nothing from, and does not alter the meaning of the Constitution. The 15th amendment was not proposed until after the 14th amendment had been declared to be a part of the Constitution. It was obviously the thinking of the Congress which proposed, and of the legislatures of States which adopted it, that the 14th amendment did not guarantee the right to vote or they would not have proposed and adopted the 15th amendment. This is also demonstrated by the fact that the 14th amendment, in section 2, provides for the reduction of a State's representation in the House of Representatives in proportion to the number of adult male citizens disfranchised by State law, except for crime.

If the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment did not guarantee the intangible right of a citizen to vote, it was not the intent, the thinking, or the purpose of those who adopted the 14th amendment that it should extend to and guarantee the equally intangible and less fundamental right to identify, as distinguished from equality, of educational opportunities.

If all these things were not convincing to open, legal minds, the reconsideration of the problem by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Gong Lum v. Rice (275 U. S. 78, 72 L. Ed. 172), wherein the Court said:

"The case then reduces itself to the question whether a State can be said to afford to a child of Chinese ancestry born in this country, and a citizen of the United States, the equal protection of the laws by giving her the opportunity for a common school education in a school which receives only colored children of the brown, yellow, or black races. The right and power of the State to regulate the method of providing for the education of its youth at public expense is clear.

"The question here is whether a Chinese citizen of the United States is denied equal protection of the laws when he is classed among the colored races and furnished facilities for education equal to that offered to all, whether white, brown, yellow, or black. Were this a new question, it would call for very full argument and consideration, but we think that it is the same question which has been many times decided to be within the constitutional power of the State legislature to settle without intervention of the Federal courts under the Federal Constitution."

This reaffirmance of the State's right to maintain segregated schools in an opinion by Mr. Justice Taft, speaking for a unanimous court, should be conclusive.

(b) The Court says in the Brown case:

"Whatever may have been the extent of psychological knowledge at the time of Plessy v. Ferguson this (a contrary) finding is amply supported by modern authority. Any language in Plessy v. Ferguson contrary to this finding is rejected."

The socialistic, communistic, un-American writings, associations and activities of the "modern authority" cited by the Court have been so often detailed they will not be recited here. One of these "authorities," however, demands further consideration. Dr. Gunnar Myrdal, a self-styled social engineer, wrote a book entitled "The American Dilemma" which is cited by the Supreme Court as one of the modern authorities whose psychological knowledge justifies the substitution by the Supreme Court of his conclusions for the solemn legal judgment of William Howard Taft, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Louis Dembritz Brandeis, Willis Van Devanter, James Clark McReynolds, George Sutherland, Pierce Butler, Edward Terry Sanford, and Harlan Fiske Stone. It is Dr. Myrdal's writing that the Supreme Court accepts as sound and conclusive on legal questions. It is his thinking that the Supreme Court adopts as their thinking. It is his assertions that the Supreme Court accepts as verity. Rejecting the opinions and decisions of their great predecessors on the bench, it is to him the Supreme Court goes for guidance in deciding cases. What else does Dr. Myrdal say? He says that the Constitution of the United States is "impractical and unsuited to modern conditions."

Reluctantly, sadly, we reach the conclusion that the Supreme Court has determined that Dr. Myrdal is correct in this assertion and has resolved to correct the situation by a process of judicial amendment of the Constitution that will entirely change our form and system of government.

(c) In the Brown case, the Court says:

"Segregation of white and colored children in public schools has a detrimental effect upon the colored children. The impact is greater when it has the sanction of law; for the policy of separating the races is usually interpreted as denoting the inferiority of the Negro group. A sense of inferiority affects the motivation of a child to learn. Segregation with the sanction of law, therefore, has a tendency to [retard] the education and mental development of the Negro children."

If this be accepted as true there is a corollary that must inevitably follow. If white children, particularly in those areas where the colored population exceeds the white, are required by compulsory school attendance laws to attend nonsegregated schools and are thus required by law to come into close daily contact with a group which (the Supreme Court says) is regarded as being inferior, there will be an effect upon the development of the white children at least equal to the assumed effect of segregation upon the colored children. This effect will be particularly acute in those areas, the existence of which cannot be denied, in which parents financially able to do so will send their children to private segregated schools, leaving in the integrated schools only those white children who cannot afford private schools. The equal protection of the law is guaranteed to the white race as well as to the colored. Equal protection is not attained, and cannot be attained, by substituting one undesirable situation for another. The premise stated by the Court does not, therefore, justify or logically support the conclusion drawn.

In its decision the Court lays stress upon what it terms the "intangible considerations," which from the Brown case, the Sweatt case and the McLaurin case, may be said to include the following: "those qualities which are incapable of objective measurement but which make for greatness in a law school," "to engage in discussions and exchange of views with other students," "the intellectual commingling of students," "position and influence of the alumni," "traditions and prestige (of the school)." The court blithely ignores the fact that these "intangibles," and truly they are intangible, represent the culture, learning, industry, intellectual attainments, personalities and characters of the individuals who make up the student bodies and alumni of the educational institutions to which they appertain. These intangibles are not, have never been, and cannot be made the property of the State to sell, barter, or give to others.

The 14th amendment does not mention race or creed or color. It relates to the rights of individual citizens, and, as to matters within its scope, guarantees to each citizen of the United States the equal protection of laws. If identity of educational opportunity, as distinguished from equality of opportunity, is guaranteed to each individual by the amendment a student, or the parents of a student, assigned to a particular classroom presided over by a particular teacher who fully meets the requirements fixed by the State as to moral, cultural, and educational requirements, prefers another classroom presided over by another teacher because such other teacher has a more desirable family background, or some of the students assigned to the other classroom move in a more desirable social circle, or because the students assigned to the other classroom have a superior average intellectual quotient and the existence of such intangibles gives such student, or his parents the right to demand that the student be taught in the classroom and by the teacher of his, or his parents' choice, our entire educational system might well be disrupted. Under the 14th amendment there can be found no legal distinction between the hypotheses here stated and the statement of constitutional (?) law pronounced in Brown versus Topeka.

(d) Many of our citizens prefer that, at certain levels, male and female students be taught in separate institutions. The 14th amendment does not permit that either male or female citizens be denied the equal protection of the laws. The rationale of Brown v. Topeka makes it a violation of the Constitution for a State to maintain segregation of the sexes at any level in public education because the intangibles of separate institutions of learning cannot possibly be made to be identical.

(e) Perhaps the most remarkable pronouncement found in the opinion of the Court in Brown v. Topeka is the statement that:

"Whatever may have been the extent of psychological knowledge at the time of Plessy v. Ferguson, this finding (that that decision was wrong) is amply supported by modern authority. Any language in Plessy v. Ferguson contrary to this finding is rejected."

This statement can only mean that the Supreme Court of the United States, as presently constituted, now declares that the subconscious genius of the American people of the 1860's was such that they wrote into the Constitution principles which were beyond the educational attainments of even the members of the Highest Court in the land to perceive, understand, and appreciate until the present personnel came to the bench.

Railway Employers Department, American Federation of Labor, International Association of Machinists, et al. v. Robert L. Hanson, et al. (— U. S. —, 100 L. Ed. (advance)

p. 633): To those who may regard this decision as a victory for organized labor, we would point out the reason stated by the Court as the foundation upon which its conclusion is based:

"Industrial peace along the arteries of commerce is a legitimate objective; and Congress has great latitude in choosing the methods by which it is to be obtained. The choice by the Congress of the union shop as a stabilizing force seems to us to be an allowable one."

Industrial peace becomes more important under this decision, than the rights of American citizens to join or refuse to join a union and supersedes the guaranty of liberty contained in the 5th and 14th amendments in this respect. To the ardent unionist who sincerely believes that strong unions are essential to the welfare of labor, this may seem a wise and beneficent conclusion. But the Congress is not always composed of men sympathetic to the labor movement. It is by no means inconceivable that a Congress might be elected which would actually be hostile to labor. Should such a Congress enact a statute forbidding the employment by the railroads of any person who did not relinquish his union membership because the Congress believed that industrial peace along the arteries of commerce would be best served thereby, the decision in this case would, if followed, require that such a statute be upheld by the courts. If it is allowable under the Constitution for Congress to require union membership of any class of persons engaged in interstate commerce, it is equally allowable for Congress to forbid such membership.

The acceptance of this decision by trade unions is to surrender constitutional guaranties and grant to Congress the power of life and death over the labor movement in America. The temporary benefits to be attained by this holding represent a dear price for the freedom of American labor that will be surrendered.

Judson Griffin v. People of the State of Illinois (— U. S. —, 100 L. Ed. (advance), p. 483); Florida and many other States provide free transcripts of record for insolvent defendants in criminal cases, but it is the voluntary act of such States in the exercise of their inherent powers of Government.

The most significant feature of this decision is the shockingly frank admission by one of the Justices who writes into the records of the Court the following: "Candor compels acknowledgment that the decision rendered today is a new ruling. * * * The judicial choice is not limited to a new ruling necessarily retrospective, or to rejection of what the requirements of equal protection of the laws, as now perceived, require. For sound reasons law generally speaks prospectively.* * * We should not indulge in the fiction that the law now announced has always been the law. * * * it is much more conducive to law's self-respect to recognize candidly the considerations that give prospective content to a new pronouncement."

This is a bald assertion of power in the judiciary to amend the Constitution. To give to language having a clear and definite meaning to those who wrote it a new and different meaning is just as clearly an amendment to the Constitution as changing the language of the document itself. To assert that meaning can be "perceived" in the Constitution today which was not perceived by those who adopted it, and which could not be found by Taft, Holmes, McReynolds, Van Devanter, and their contemporaries, is to ascribe to those who now view it the powers of supermen. If the Constitution requires each State to furnish transcripts of record to each insolvent defendant in criminal cases, then such requirement was a part of such constitutional provision from the time of its adoption. If, on the other hand, such requirement was not a part of such constitutional provision at the time of its adoption, then it can lawfully be made a part thereof only by the constitutional processes of amendment. To substitute the "perception" of the members of the Supreme Court as to the meaning of the Constitution for the intent of the people in adopting it is to completely destroy the power of the people to fix in the Constitution the principles of the government under which they are to live.

States plan the government of their citizens, businessmen arrange their industrial and economic affairs, and individuals chart the course of their lives in reliance upon the stability of the Constitution, the correctness of its repeated construction and the integrity of the courts to protect them in their constitutional rights as those rights have been fixed, understood, and applied over long periods of history. If this may no longer be done the stability of our political, economic, industrial, and social orders has passed away and that which we know as the American way of life has been replaced by a system in which the rights of men are measured only by the vicissitudes of the sociological thinking of nine men.

Without attempting in any way to be facetious, we ask this question: Under this decision does not a citizen, who has the constitutional right to exercise his franchise, but who is unable to pay his transportation to the polls, have the right to demand that the State provide such transportation? If the State does not do so, his constitutional right to vote has been placed beyond his reach by the act of the State in locating the voting place in his precinct at a place not immediately adjacent to his home.

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania v. Steve Nelson (— U. S. —, 100 L. Ed. (advance), p. 415): The rationale of this decision is that Congress has power to "provide for the common defense, to preserve the sovereignty of the United States as an independent nation and to guarantee to each State a republican form of government," and, consequently, when Congress enacted a statute against sedition the States are rendered impotent to enforce any State law on this subject because the Congress has occupied the field. It is perfectly proper for the State to punish the possessor of a 6-gallon still for illegally manufacturing moonshine whiskey, and for the Federal authorities to punish the same man for the same act, because each sovereignty has forbidden the same act. It is also proper of the State to prosecute a man for operating a numbers racket and for the Federal authorities to prosecute the same man for a violation of the Federal statutes licensing gambling, when the operation in each case was the same, but such same act constituted a violation of the criminal laws of different sovereigns. But under this decision the same rule does not apply to an act designed to effect the destruction of each and both these sovereigns.

Obviously when the Congress has exercised its powers of regulation of legitimate activities within the scope of Federal regulation, and has adopted a comprehensive scheme designed to cover the subject, further State regulation may necessarily be an infringement upon the powers of the Congress. But that does not mean that an act forbidden by Federal statute may not also be forbidden by State law. Nor does the power given to the Congress to protect the Nation, however exercised, render a sovereign State of the Union impotent to protect itself from those who would plot and conspire to overthrow its government and enslave its people.

Harry Slochower v. Board of Higher Education of the City of New York (— U. S. —, 100 L. Ed. (Advance), p. 449): The significance of this decision is two-fold:

First: The Court either disregards the reasons assigned for the decision in Brown v. Topeka, or it regards the dangers of communistic influences upon students as being of insufficient importance to justify the removal of instructors.

In the Brown case great emphasis is laid upon the so-called "intangibles" connected with education in public schools. Most Americans consider an atmosphere of patriotism, of love of American institutions, of democracy and of respect for those leaders of the past who have contributed to the building of the Nation as the most universal and valuable intangibe in the atmosphere of American schools. Certainly a Communist or ex-Communist, or one who is unwilling to answer questions as to his communistic affiliations is incapable of contributing to the maintenance of that atmosphere in his classroom.

The New York statute held invalid by this decision was designed to remove such persons from a position of trust in the New York school system at the earliest possible moment. The return of Professor Slochower to his classroom denies to the students, who are assigned to his classes, the most valuable intangible of the traditionally American institution of learning.

Second: But more important: This decision disregards the fact that a State, in its relationship with individuals, occupies two capacities—it is a sovereign and, as such, acts in the capacity of a sovereign, but it is also an employer of the services of men and women, and in this phase of its activities it is governed by the same rules of law that govern other employers of labor and services. It was never the intention of those who proposed and adopted the 14th amendment to regulate the acts of the States except in their sovereign capacity. Under the 14th amendment the State, in the making, construction and execution of laws, in the administration of justice, may not deny any person the equal protection of the laws or due process of law. The effect of the present decision is to hold that in its relationship with its employee, in performing its obligations arising out of its contract with that employee, the State has denied the employee due process of law. As a matter of fact, if there was any wrong committed by New York, it was in the breach of a private contract, a simple contract of employment. By the precedent of this ruling, any State employee who has been discharged for dishonesty, immorality, neglect of duty, or any other cause, has the right to appeal to the Federal courts for a determination of the propriety of grounds for such discharge, or the methods used by the State in determining the existence of such grounds. The basic misconception of the Court in the application of the 14th amendment to contractual and proprietary acts of the State as distinguished from governmental acts, or acts of sovereignty.

To demonstrate that this is not a fanciful criticism, it is only necessary to turn to the decision of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Black v. Cutter Laboratories (100 L. Ed. (advance), p. 681). In that case a majority of the Court sustained a decision of the highest court of California which affirmed the right of a private employer to discharge an employee because such employee was a member of the Communist Party. Three members of the Court, however, dissented, declaring that it was a violation of the Constitution for the State to recognize the right of contract under which the employer acted. The fact that the Court even entertained a case in which the question presented was whether the State violated the Federal Constitution in declining to require the employer to reinstate the employee is indicative of an entirely new approach to the scope of the Federal Constitution and the power of Federal courts.

Danlan George Rea v. United States of America (— U. S. —) 100 L. Ed. (advance), p. 213): In this case the facts were: A Federal officer had served an invalid search warrant issued out of a Federal court and found evidence of the illegal possession of marihuana. The evidence so obtained was suppressed in the Federal court. The officer, then, acting as a private citizen, swore out a warrant in the State court charging a violation of the statute of the State. The Supreme Court held that this officer should be enjoined from testifying in the State court to facts within his knowledge.

It is settled law that the Federal courts will not receive evidence illegally obtained by Federal officers. It is equally well settled that Federal courts will, and do, receive evidence illegally obtained by State officers, even when such evidence has been rejected by the State courts.

It is also settled law that States have the right to receive, and a majority of them do receive, evidence illegally obtained by State officers.

It is debatable question, with which we are not here concerned, whether the best interests of society will be served by receiving evidence obtained by an illegal search and thus bring the guilty to justice, and use other means to punish the officer who violates the rights of citizens, or, on the other hand, rejecting this evidence, freeing the guilty offender, and by this means discouraging illegal searches by public officers. But this is a matter clearly within the right of each of the sovereign States to decide. The Federal Government and each State may fit its decisions to its own determination of public policy.

The effect of the decision cited is to vest in the Federal courts the power of fixing the rules of evidence in the State court. When the Federal officer testifies in the State court he does so as a private citizen. If the Supreme Court may properly arrest the proceedings in the State court and determine—in advance of the trial—what evidence the State court may properly receive at the trial, every attribute of State sovereignty in the administration of State law has been destroyed.

It is significant also that the Court here assumes supervisory powers over executive officers of the United States, thus invading the functioning of another department of the Federal Government.

CONCLUSION

This history of mankind, and particularly the history of the 20th century, clearly indicates that those who would assume dictatorial powers over nations of men find it expedient to begin by offering the people transitory benefits in consideration for the surrender of the powers of government.

The destruction of the local powers of government, the centralization of the administration of measures designed to maintain national security into one or a few individuals, and the control of labor are three of the most potent tools of the dictator. Couple these with an acknowledgment of the authorty of any agancy of government to abrogate or modify constitutional safeguards, and the foundation of a dictatorship has been laid.

Constitutions are prepared in an atmosphere of calm deliberation and are designed to insure the liberties of the people not only in times of social, economic, and political quietude, but during periods of stress and crisis as well, when men may be tempted to meet temporary exigencies by following the leadership of anyone who promises relief from immediate and pressing problems.

The United States is currently experiencing an era of unprecedented prosperity, but we should not forget the panics and depressions of the past, or blindly assume that they will not reoccur.

Only by a return to, and a strict observance of, the fundamental principles of government, now being destroyed by the Supreme Court can we provide the most reliable assurance that under such conditions government of the people, by the people, and for the people will not perish.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, this rule would authorize 2 hours of debate on the well-known Fryingpan-Arkansas project which affects the State of Colorado. I am not a member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, but I have been familiar with this project. For a number of years I lived in the southern part of the State that will be affected by this project. I hope you will give proper consideration to the merits of this legislation. I want to point out that the Arkansas River has its beginning on the continental divide near the well-known town of Leadville which was made famous by silver production. Most of you know that the Arkansas River from that high point down until it joins the Mississippi River in lower Arkansas is a river that means much to the people of the State of Colorado. This project intends to utilize and develop the water and apply it at a place where it can be used by the people of the State. The project is estimated to cost approximately $160 million and contemplates the construction of reservoirs and a dam and, in turn, the water will be used for municipal flood control, irrigation, and other valuable uses to which water can be put in this area. It has been studied by the Bureau of Reclamation for a number of years and it is upon the recommendation of the Bureau and the recommendation of the administration that this bill comes to you for consideration.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. ASPINALL. Would the gentleman state the official position of the chief executive of the State of Colorado and the agencies handling this matter and also the agencies in western Colorado that are affected by this bill and this project? As I remember, at the beginning of the gentleman's remarks, the gentleman said that it affected only the southeastern part of the State. The gentleman knows this bill is important to the western part of Colorado.

Mr. ROGERS of Colorado. That is true. We have a policy committee headed by the Governor of the State of Colorado. This committee has thoroughly examined this project and recommends the enactment of this legislation. I might point out that this will help us in the State of Colorado as it relates to our interstate agreement and will bring about a development that has long been needed throughout the years. Most of you recognize that the reclamation project has to do with the taking of water and storing it and using it for multiple purposes. The main use in this instance is for city and irrigation purposes. I hope, when you have fully evaluated what it means as it relates to conservation of water and its proper use, that you will vote for and adopt this rule. The details of the plan, as I have indicated before, have been thoroughly examined by the Bureau of Reclamation and they have recommended it as being feasible and all of the money will be repaid except that part which is allocated to flood control, which is the usual arrangement. It is a project which authorizes and directs repayment under the reclamation laws of the United States.

I trust you will grant the rule in this case so that we can go into the merits of this matter and provide for the proper development of water in this area.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, this is a very interesting piece of legislation. You might say that this is probably one of the finest types and kinds of transmountain water projects that we can fully support. I think I should remind you of some history. The reason I mention history is that in my district we have a typical example of what we mean by transcontinental water. Transcontinental water from one side of a mountain range to the other. It is not a difficult task with the amount of information and experience we have developed from the standpoint of engineering. Only a few miles from home, the backbone of the Continental Divide extends from the boundary of Canada to Mexico. Running through the center of Colorado is the top of that Continental Divide.

In working out the Colorado-Big Thompson project, the engineers drilled a tunnel over 13 miles long, through the heart of the Rocky Mountains, a very interesting project. They began on each side, on the east side and the west side. The engineers worked out the tunnel starting from opposite sides, and when they met somewhere in the center of the backbone of the Rocky Mountains, they were less than a quarter of an inch off on their calculations. So we have a tunnel of 13 miles through the Rocky Mountains that brings water from a watershed on the west side of the Rocky Mountains over to the east side. This was the very first project that brought water into an area and did not extend the project to more acres of land. It is strictly 100 percent supplemental supply of water. I hope you understand those words "supplemental water". The water comes through a tunnel in the Rocky Mountains and runs to the east side where the irrigation section is already in existence; the irrigation ditches and the watergates are there, all organized carefully, and owned locally for about 50 or 60 years of farming. The area will receive this supplementary water.

Now to the Fryingpan project, and it is exactly the same proposition. We bring this water from a watershed on the west side of the mountains through a tunnel for use on the east side. Actually what we will do is to bring a new river into the southeast section of Colorado that will be distributed to the farmlands, already parched by many seasons of drought. This will also supply extra water to municipalities.

Let me say the greatest natural resource in the United States today and the most precious of all is not gold or silver or uranium. It is water. Our water is our most precious resource. You cannot put a dollars-and-cents value on it; you cannot say it is worth so much. It is invaluable and cannot be measured by any measuring stick, as far as dollars and cents are concerned.

I now yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CHENOWETH].

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment my colleague on his fine statement. I am glad he is stressing the fact that no new land is to be brought under cultivation in this process. This is merely to provide supplemental water for land that is already under irrigation.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GROSS] for a consent request.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made prior to the conference report on the foreign giveaway bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the rule before us is one which makes the Fryingpan-Arkansas project in order. Let me say just a few words about the project. I am not going into the technical details. The bill making the project possible was introduced in the 82d, 83d, and 84th Congresses. It has been approved by former administrations and former Budget Directors and former officials of the Department of the Interior. It is approved this year by the President of the United States. The President in his message on the state of the Union again reiterated his support of the Fryingpan-Arkansas project.

Money has been provided in the budget for the start of this project recommended by the administration and the Bureau of the Budget. We have had long hearings before our committee on this subject.

I recognize that there are some Members of the House who are not happy about irrigation projects of any kind, but I just hope you will adopt this rule and permit the membership of the House to hear in detail what the Fryingpan-Arkansas project really does. They ought to listen to the arguments pro and con and not hastily kill the rule so that the merits of the bill cannot be discussed. I seldom vote against the rule even though I may be against the proposal in the bill. Even on foreign aid I have voted for the rules but I have never voted for foreign aid. But I take this position, and I think the membership of the House should take this position, and the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH], chairman of the Committee on Rules, is a magnanimous gentleman and I hope he will take the same position, that the House ought to have the opportunity to listen to the arguments and then come to a decison. Some of us have already prejudged it and our decisions are already made. I know there are some of us, and I am included, who maybe like to believe what we want to believe and that is as far as we go; but there are arguments pro and con on this bill. The Fryingpan-Arkansas project has been under study since 1936 by the Interior Department. In 1951 legislation was brought before the Congress for this project. So it is nothing new.

Remember, this provides supplemental water for a project that is already established, a going irrigation project. This project will supply only 6 or 7 inches of additional water on land already irrigated, but it does supply a large lot of electrical energy and it supplies water for municipal purposes which is needed badly in this area. The committee's conclusion on that is this:

> The committee concludes that the Fryingpan-Arkansas project is sound from an engineering, economic, and financial standpoint, and that the project is urgently needed to supplement the water supply for existing acreage now under cultivation and for municipal use in the Arkansas Valley.

I urge my colleagues that you keep an open mind, that you adopt the rule, even though you intend to vote against the bill. Let us have the opportunity of having the bill discussed and if you are able to go along with the decision of the administration, it would please many Members of this House.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. ASPINALL. The gentleman has made a long study of this matter. It has been before the committee for 4 years. The gentleman understands the amendments that were placed in the bill by the House committee. Is he satisfied after his diligent study that the users in western Colorado where there will be a small amount of water transported to the eastern part of the State are protected thoroughly in their present use and in their potential use necessary to that economy?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. It is my considered judgment that they are thoroughly protected. I urge a favorable vote on this rule and then the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SAYLOR].

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, the bill upon which a rule has been presented, and which we are now considering, is with minor exceptions the identical bill which the House of Representatives in the 84th Congress refused to consider. The House refused to consider the bill at that time because that rule asked you to consider a bill that was economically unsound and unfeasible. The bill that you are now being asked to consider is economically unsound and unfeasible.

Mr. Speaker, let me tell you just what we are being asked to do. A few years ago some of the bright schemers in the Bureau of Reclamation dreamed up a project called the Gunnison-Arkansas project. When they finally published the book calling for the Gunnison-Arkansas project they found out that trans-mountain diversions of that project were so preposterous and so impossible that even the Bureau of Reclamation would not attempt to come before the Congress and ask to have it passed.

I call your attention to the fact that the Bureau of Reclamation has tried to get their hands on every copy of this report.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-one Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

FRYINGPAN - ARKANSAS PROJECT, COLORADO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SAYLOR] has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out the salient features of this bill to which I think the Members should pay particular attention at this late hour of the session.

This bill calls for the expenditure of approximately $155 million—$55 million of this will be used for the redevelopment and reregulation of the Arkansas River. You have heard that this will provide supplemental water, and that is true. There will be no new land brought under irrigation under this bill, but if this bill is passed it will provide only 6 inches of water for the land now under cultivation. If the Arkansas River were reregulated, it would provide approximately 5 of the 6 inches of water that is called for in this bill.

Where do you get this tremendous figure then of $155 million? Therein lies the secret of this entire project, because this is the opening gun for the Gunnison-Arkansas project. This bill calls for the transmountain diversion of 60,000 acre-feet of water at an expenditure of $100 million. Maybe $100 million in this day and age, in the manner in which we throw money around here, does not mean much to the Members, but to the folks back home in my district that is a lot of money. If we spend that amount of money we want to know what we are going to get with it.

Let me show you some of the things that will be involved. You are going to put in a dam over on the west side of the Rocky Mountains at an elevation of approximately 9,000 feet. Then you are going to run water in an open ditch to a tunnel which will be driven through the Rocky Mountains, and then dropped down in a series of dams on the east side until that water gets into the Arkansas River.

In the first place, if you would read the testimony that was heard before our committee, you would be astounded, because you would find that the people who came up from the Bureau of Reclamation testified first that they were going to run this water in an open ditch and that they did not expect they would be able to get the full flow of water because it might freeze. I asked the Bureau witnesses, "How much would it cost if you had to cover this ditch or put it in a pipe?" And they said, "It would increase the cost by $75 million."

Then the second time they came up they rechecked, and they decided they could now operate this project with the ice frozen over. It would not freeze so much that they could not operate their project during the winter.

Then the third time they came up—and I hope you will listen to this, and I hope that sometime you will go to the Rocky Mountains in the dead of winter, because there you will find that even the fastrunning mountain streams are all frozen over. But the men from the Bureau of Reclamation had the effrontery to come up and tell our committee that they had suddenly made a discovery that the water which would be put in the reservoir would pick up enough heat in the summertime that as they ran it into this open ditch it would not freeze in the winter.

If there was ever anything more preposterous than that advanced by supposedly reputable engineers I would like to know what it is.

Let us look at what happens when you drive this tunnel through the mountain and put the water over on the other side.

The first attempt they are going to make, they tell you, will be to put the water into what is called the Twin Lakes development. The Twin Lakes Development Co. was a corporation which was started during the depression by a group of people who then lived in Colorado. They made a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of several million dollars. The project was so bad they could not pay their interest; they fell behind in their loan, and it became necessary for the Twin Lakes Development Co. to go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and ask for more money and the renegotiation of that loan.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAYLOR. No; I will not yield.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I want to correct the gentleman.

Mr. SAYLOR. I will not yield.

When they went to the RFC they had to have the Reconstruction Finance Corporation write off a half million dollars and then to give security for the increased loan which they got they put up 35,000 shares of stock, and the loan was to be repaid on the basis of 4 percent interest. When that loan, as one of the assets of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, had to be liquidated, the RFC advertised bids, and among other places where they advertised was the city of Denver. The people in Denver, the people in Colorado who are before Congress and begging you to pass this bill, did not have enough faith in the investment paying 4 percent interest that they would even pay the amount of money the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had in it. The best offer they would make was this: That if they would throw in the 35,000 shares of stock for nothing and knock off $100,000 of the loan then they would buy it.

The 35,000 shares of stock have disappeared, and there has not been one person who appeared before any committee of the House or the Senate in behalf of the Twin Lakes Development Co. who says they are willing to sell to the United States or to the Bureau of Reclamation this dam. The fact of the matter is I have in my files letters from officers telling me they do not want to sell, but want to keep it. I understand the stock is now owned somewhere in the East.

The next dam they propose to take over is one belonging to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., which has a dam on the west slope. They have some water rights, but there has not been any official before any committee or any member representing the board of directors of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. saying that they will sell this property to the United States for any price agreed on.

They next propose to drop the water down farther.

For $100 million you are going to be asked to put an inch of water over on some of this farmland.

Now, in the name of good business, in the name of commonsense, and in the name of trying to keep this Government somewhere near being economically sound, I urge this House that when the vote is taken on this rule the Members stand up to their convictions which they had 2 years ago.

Just this morning word came to me that certain groups downtown—they asked that notice be sent out that certain people in the executive branch are very much in favor of this project.

Let me tell you that this particular project was also presented when our President belonged to another political party, and I opposed it then not because of the political affiliation of the President but because I thought he was wrong then. The political affiliation of the President has not changed my position. The House of Representatives refused to go along with it then and I urge you to refuse to go along with it now. This bill is the most fantastic thing I have ever seen. The Colorado River project which this House has voted upon by comparison is an excellent project and there was a great deal of discussion on that matter.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAYLOR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DONOVAN. I have before me the committee report presented at the time the rule on this bill was considered and defeated 2 years ago. I notice in that old report there was a wishy-washy letter from the Director of the Budget.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. DONOVAN. I notice the report that was submitted at the time the rule was defeated in the last Congress contained a communication from the Budget Director which withheld the Budget Director's approval of this bill.

Mr. SAYLOR. That is correct.

Mr. DONOVAN. I notice in this report there is nothing from the Budget Director whatsoever.

Mr. SAYLOR. That is correct and as near as I can understand, the Bureau of the Budget has not approved this project.

Mr. DONOVAN. Would the gentleman care to speculate for the benefit of Members of the House as to why there is no mention of the Budget Bureau's recommendation in this report?

Mr. SAYLOR. My own speculation is, and it is purely speculation, as to why there is no report is that the thing is so financially infeasible that even the Bureau of the Budget cannot go along with it.

Mr. DONOVAN. Has the gentleman been able to identify the ownership of the stock of the Twin Lakes Corp.?

Mr. SAYLOR. I have not been able to, nor has anybody been able to come before our committee and tell us who owns that 35,000 shares of stock.

Mr. DONOVAN. If this bill passes, will the Twin Lakes Corp.'s financial embarrassment be straightened out?

Mr. SAYLOR. It will be to the advantage of certain people, yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLE].

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to argue the merits of a bill on the question whether or not a rule should be adopted. Unless the project is so bad or the legislation so out of order that it should not conceivably be considered by the House, or unless it does not rise to importance or significance in the legislative program to warrant its consideration, then in the normal course of events the rule should be adopted and the merits of the project, whatever they are, decided under the terms of debate established in the rule.

Let me give you a little history of this project in order to indicate to you whether or not it does rise to sufficient importance to be considered by this body on its merits. The Fryingpan-Arkansas project was first taken up in 1936 by a Democratic administration and those studies went forward until 1951 when the project was favorably reported by a Democratic administration and approved by a Democratic Secretary of the Interior. That is not unusual. The same thing happened with the upper Colorado Basin project. Democrats have engineered and planned these projects; then the Republicans come along and take them over as they have in this instance. I am glad this administration recognizes worthwhile projects.

This program has been scheduled as one of the key items of the present administration's legislative program. This bill has been before the Senate of the United States twice and on both occasions passed the United States Senate without any opposition whatever. Now, if it is such a sour project and so wholly infeasible, why on earth can its sponsors get the United States Senate to pass it on what amounts to unanimous consent? The Senate passed it in the 83d Congress and just recently passed it again without a single dissenting vote.

In his budget message for fiscal 1956, the President recommended enactment of legislation authorizing the construction of this project, and in addition to that, the budget message which he sent up contained money to initiate the project even prior to the time that it was authorized. The President's state of the Union message urged that the project be authorized in order that the money could be spent.

Now, I say to you, does that kind of history lay the basis for refusing to grant a rule upon this project where we can get into a clear discussion of what is involved in it and what is not involved in it?

It seems to me plain, with the legislative history of this bill, having twice passed the United States Senate without any opposition, having been engineered by a Democratic administration and approved by a Democratic Secretary of the Interior; approved, by all of the executive agencies of both administrations that have ever looked at it, and then to say that this project does not even warrant the dignity of a rule and consideration on this floor seems to me to be an argument that should not carry very much weight. For that reason I want to express the hope that the House will adopt the rule and hear the bill on its merits.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CHENOWETH].

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I realize that a very heavy obligation rests upon me today because I have been the sponsor of this project since its inception. I have been in the House now for some 14 years, and I cherish above everything else the confidence and good will of my colleagues. I think you will recognize that I am not going to mislead you or misrepresent this project to you. This project is of great importance to the people of my district because of the desperate need for this water.

Now, there are some who are opposed to this project. I have great affection for the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SAYLOR]. However, he is wrong in his conclusions on this project. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is setting his engineering ability up against the skill and experience of the engineers of the Bureau of Reclamation and other independent engineers, all of whom have approved this project, and stated it is feasible from an economic and engineering standpoint.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to my distinguished colleague from Colorado.

Mr. ASPINALL. The gentleman brings up the bugaboo of a larger project. Is it not a fact that this is a single project within itself and does not need a larger project; in fact, the report from the committee states that it is disassociated entirely with the project, the Gunnison-Arkansas project, to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania made reference.

Mr. CHENOWETH. The gentleman is absolutely right. This is an independent project, and is not dependent on any other project. There is no other project contemplated so far as this project is concerned. This project stands by itself; it is self-liquidating, and any talk about any other project is entirely without foundation.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania said that the project is not feasible. The feasibility ratio is 1.47 to 1, which I submit speaks well for the economic value of the project.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. AYRES. Many of us in the House realize how hard and diligent the gentleman from Colorado has worked in behalf of this project. I think he made a very significant statement a moment ago when he said that those of us who had the opportunity to know him had confidence in his judgment. I hope that the House will take the recommendation of the gentleman from Colorado and cast a vote in favor of the rule and, as the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLE], said, give the House an opportunity to hear this bill debated on its merits and not on any preconceived notion.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I thank the gentleman from Ohio and I greatly appreciate his support of this project.

Mr. DAWSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. DAWSON of Utah. The gentleman from Pennsylvania called attention to the fact that the Bureau of the Budget had not approved this project. Has the President given his approval to this project?

Mr. CHENOWETH. Five million dollars are in the budget for this fiscal year to start construction of this project. If that does not constitute approval of a project, I do not know what other proof can be submitted.

Mr. DAWSON of Utah. There is a report of the Interior Department and attention should be called to the fact that the Bureau of the Budget has no objection to that report.

Mr. CHENOWETH. The gentleman is absolutely right. I regret that this bill is here in the closing days of the session. It is not my fault. This bill was reported by the House Interior Committee in February of this year. This bill went to the Committee on Rules on April 9, and it has been there since that time until it was reported yesterday. This bill has been twice favorably reported by the House Interior Committee, the first time in the 83d Congress, and again in this Congress.

This bill has been twice passed by the United States Senate, first in the 83d Congress and again on July 12, just 2 weeks ago. Senator MILLIKIN and Senator ALLOTT have been sponsoring the project in the Senate during this Congress. Governor Johnson, of Colorado, also sponsored this legislation during the time he was a Member of the United States Senate. There has been no partisanship so far as this legislation is concerned. Democrats and Republicans join in requesting passage of this bill.

This project has been approved by 2 administrations, 1 Democratic and the other Republican. Mr. Oscar Chapman approved the project when he was Secretary of the Interior on May 4, 1951. Mr. Douglas McKay later approved the project under the present administration on April 28, 1953.

The project has the personal endorsement of President Eisenhower.

In his state of the Union message to Congress on January 5, 1956, the President recommended the construction of this project, and said:

> The development of our water resources cannot be accomplished overnight. The need is such that we must make faster progress and without delay. Therefore, I strongly recommend that action be taken at this session on such wholly Federal projects as the Colorado River storage project and the Fryingpan-Arkansas project.

I submit, therefore, that this is a feasible project. It has the approval of the budget, and has been twice reported by overwhelming votes by the House Interior Committee, and twice approved by the United States Senate.

As I understand in the closing days of the session it is the intention of the House leadership to consider only those bills which have a chance of passage. I want to remind the Members of the fact that a companion bill, S. 300, has passed the Senate, I might state without opposition, without any objection being raised. So here is a bill that has a chance of becoming law at this session.

Mr. MORANO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MORANO. Can the gentleman tell us whether or not private enterprise can do this job out there?

Mr. CHENOWETH. This project is too large for private enterprise to construct. Otherwise it would have been constructed long ago. Except for the fact that this is too large a project for local and private capital to construct, we would not be here today asking for this legislation. The President, in his recommendation of this project, has called attention to the fact that we should build only those projects which are beyond the capacity of local initiative, public or private, but which are needed for irrigation, flood control, power, as well as municipal and industrial water supply.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman for the statement he is making and to remind him and the membership generally that, as majority leader in the 83d Congress, I attempted then to obtain a rule for the consideration of this measure; and, when the vote came on that rule, the people on our side by an overwhelming majority supported the rule. I trust it will be that way again. On that vote in the 83d Congress, 138 Republicans voted for the rule, with only 61 against; while only 50 Democrats voted for the rule and 134 voted against.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I appreciate the fine support which the gentleman from Indiana has given this project.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PRICE. Of course, the gentleman knows that I have been a consistent supporter of this measure.

Mr. CHENOWETH. And I greatly appreciate his support.

Mr. PRICE. And I shall continue to support it. I am very glad to have the expression of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] that he has just made. I am sorry that he did not feel the same way about our atomic reactor program.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I do not have time in this debate on the rule to discuss that legislation, but I do sincerely appreciate the support of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PRICE. I agree with the gentleman that there are some things that the Government must assist in. I felt that one of the most important things was keeping the United States ahead of the rest of the world in the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes and for the development of industrial power.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I appreciate the gentleman's contribution.

Mr. MORANO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MORANO. I want to say that I voted for the rule the last time and I intend to vote for the rule again.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I thank the gentleman very much and appreciate his support.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I hope the rule will be adopted so that we may present the details of this project. I am sure that after you hear just what this project does, and learn of the great benefits which will be derived therefrom, you will support this bill, which I am proud to sponsor.

This is not a giveaway proposition. This money will be repaid to the United States Government with interest, except that part allocated to irrigation which, under our reclamation laws, is interest free.

I want to again stress the fact that no new land is being brought into cultivation by this project. Supplemental water will be made available to land which is now under irrigation. The project also provides for domestic water and for the development of hydroelectric power, the revenues from which will be used to assist in the payment of the allocation to irrigation, which is beyond the ability of the irrigators to pay.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is a meritorious project and deserves the consideration of the House. I urge my friends in this House, on both sides of the aisle, to support this rule so that we may present to you the details of this project. I feel we are entitled to this rule, and I hope this resolution will have your support.

Mr. Speaker, I want again to refer to the fact that the Senate has passed this measure. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] yesterday announced his retirement from the Senate, because of ill health. I think I need not remind you of the high esteem in which he is held in the United States Senate. Senator MILLIKIN has sponsored this project in the Senate over the years. I would like to refer my colleagues to the RECORD of yesterday to the tributes paid Senator MILLIKIN on the floor of the Senate by both Democrats and Republicans. Members on both sides of the aisle joined in these tributes to a great American. I mention this so that you may reflect whether or not a man of the stature of Senator MILLIKIN would sponsor a project which is unworthy of consideration. The Senate thought enough of this project to pass this legislation without a dissenting vote.

I am anxious to impress upon the House that this is not a new project, hastily conceived and lacking necessary engineering data and support. This project has been under consideration for many years, and has had the exhaustive study of the Bureau of Reclamation. Many years ago we had men in Colorado with vision who conceived the idea of bringing surplus water from the western slope of Colorado to the Arkansas Valley, in eastern Colorado, in order to provide water that is badly needed, both for supplemental irrigation and for domestic purposes. This project is the culmination of their dreams. Many of these pioneers in water development have passed on to their reward, but others are living and will see their hopes realized if this project is constructed.

The intense interest in this project, and the desperate need for this water, resulted in the organization of the Southeastern Colorado Water Development Association. Membership in this association is distributed over the entire Arkansas Valley. I wish to take this opportunity to commend the officers and directors of this association, who have given so unselfishly of their time and energy in order that this project might become a reality.

The REA cooperatives in this area are very much interested in this project and have given the same their enthusiastic support. Three cooperatives will purchase this power, being the Southeast Colorado Power Association, at La Junta; the San Isabel Electric Association, at Pueblo; and the Sangre de Cristo Electric Association, at Salida. These REA associations serve more than 35,000 rural people living in 17 counties in southeastern Colorado, comprising approximately one-fourth of the State's total area.

Mr. HALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HALEY. I wonder if the gentleman would tell the House if water rights have been cleared up out there. Is there not still some controversy about the water rights?

Mr. CHENOWETH. No; there is no controversy. I will say to my distinguished friend from Florida, we have pretty well settled our water problems in Colorado. This project has the approval of the Colorado Water Conservation Board which speaks officially on all water matters affecting the State. No other State is involved. We are dealing with water that has been allocated to the State of Colorado under the upper Colorado River compact.

Mr. HALEY. I am glad to hear the gentleman say it has been adjudicated. I understood there was still some controversy out there.

Mr. CHENOWETH. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. ASPINALL] has inserted in this bill an amendment which I am sure fully protects the water users on the western slope. The gentleman heard the colloquy a moment ago between my colleague, Mr. ASPINALL, and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER], where Mr. MILLER stated it was his opinion that these rights are fully protected in this bill. This is a project over which there is no serious controversy in the State of Colorado. I do not say everyone approves the project. I do not think the gentleman will find any project anywhere that has unanimous endorsement.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman tell the members of the committee if he knows who owns the controlling interest in the Twin Lakes Reservoir and Canal Co.?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I am glad the gentleman brought up the matter of the Twin Lakes Reservoir and Canal Co. My friend [Mr. SAYLOR] is seeking to bring in a collateral issue which does not belong here. I know the officers of the Twin Lakes Co. I know the history of this company. I should like to correct the gentleman from Pennsylvania in a statement he made. I know he did not intend to mislead you.

At the time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was liquidated by direction of Congress, I think the gentleman will find that the affairs of the Twin Lakes Reservoir and Canal Co. were in pretty good shape. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was well satisfied with that loan. The interest and the principal were paid up to date. I do not think there was any dissatisfaction over the loan made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Twin Lakes Reservoir and Canal Co. A conservancy district will be formed under Colorado laws which will enter into contract for the repayment of this money.

All of the property in the district will be pledged for the repayment of this money to the Government.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SAYLOR. I should like to call the gentleman's attention to the letter which is in the files and the report from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that says that on the initial renegotiation they had to write off a half million dollars, and when they sold the bonds on liquidation they had to lose another $100,000, plus the 35,000 shares of stock.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I think the gentleman recognizes the fact that in the liquidation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation a good many loans were not paid in full. There was no question that this was a good loan. There was no trouble in finding a purchaser for this loan. The affairs of the Twin Lakes Co. were in good shape. I think everyone was pretty well satisfied with the deal that was made. However, the Twin Lakes Co. is not involved in this legislation except their reservoir is to be enlarged and becomes a part of the project. The Twin Lakes Reservoir and Canal Co. is a separate and independent enterprise. I think the gentleman will find that the Twin Lakes Reservoir and Canal Co. endorses this project. The gentleman referred to the fact that they opposed this project, which is not the case.

Mr. PILLION. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PILLION. Is it a fact that this bill contains approximately $2 million of nonreimbursable moneys for the preservation of fish?

Mr. CHENOWETH. That is right. I think that is not uncommon in legislation of this kind, because this area is recognized as one of the finest fishing areas in the whole country. I think it has been the practice of Congress in projects of this kind to allocate nonreimbursable funds for the development of fish and wildlife resources.

Mr. PILLION. Can the gentleman tell us how many fish will be propagated and saved by this project? I do not mean to be facetious.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I am sure the gentleman does not expect me to answer a question like that, but I can assure him this money is going to be well spent and that the sportsmen of this country are going to receive many benefits from this project. I would like the gentleman to come out to Colorado and see for himself just what we have.

Mr. PILLION. Does the gentleman recall any testimony taken before our committee on the subject of the preservation of fish life?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I do not know what the gentleman is leading up to here. I am very fond of the gentleman. He is one of my very close personal friends. I think he is trying to divert attention from the merits of the project. I do not know what he is referring to. Whatever we spend for this purpose will be a good investment, I will say to my friend from New York.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I want to again urge the adoption of this rule, so that H. R. 412, a bill authorizing the Fryingpan-Arkansas water diversion project, can be considered. Many of you have spoken to me concerning this project, and have expressed your interest. I do appreciate your support. This project means much to Colorado and I hope you will vote for this rule.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, this is a highly controversial bill. When it came before the House a year or so ago we defeated it decisively. I think it would be a mistake to grant a rule. All we will accomplish is to spend the rest of the afternoon fighting over this bill. In the closing hours of the session we can devote our time to bills that have some hope of passage.

It seems to me the thing to do is to end this promptly and to defeat the rule and proceed with the business of closing this session of the Congress. I have sat here for months when the House did not meet but 2 or 3 days a week and we had very little business. Many of us who live a long way from here were compelled to stay here and, now in the last hours of the session, they bring up controversial bills and we do not have an opportunity to devote sufficient consideration to them. I think this is a bad way to legislate and we should dispose of it by defeating this rule here and now.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to our distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas is laboring under a mistake if he thinks this rule was overwhelmingly defeated when it was last before the House. As a matter of fact, and this can be verified from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, it was defeated by one vote. If there had been one vote more in favor of the rule it would have permitted the Speaker, and I was Speaker at that time, to cast a vote in favor of the rule which would have determined the vote.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. MARTIN. If the gentleman will give me a couple of extra minutes I would gladly yield, I have only 4 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I have the rollcall before me.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman give me 2 minutes?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am sorry.

Mr. MARTIN. I cannot yield then. You have plenty of time.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I will tell you about it.

Mr. MARTIN. You put it in on your own time.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I will do so.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, let us look at this bill as it really is. There is no public power, associated with this legislation. It is an irrigation bill. It answers the needs of the people of Colorado for water. Those of us who live in the East may not realize what water means to the people in these arid regions. Water means to them their very lives and existence. These irrigation projects have not worked out too badly. They have been under heavy burdens of costs; they have held out fairly well; and they have contributed to the building up of the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, what do we find confronting us today? We find a great section of our country asking for an opportunity to be heard through legislation in this House of Representatives. The people of Colorado are asking that they have their day in court. Are we going to deny that? I cannot believe we are. Here is legislation recommended by President Eisenhower after a personal inspection. He recommends this bill. Only this morning he called me on the telephone and said he hoped this legislation would pass. It was a part of his program for the building of the West. The bill comes with the endorsement of the Bureau of the Budget and they have even made an allowance for the initial plant. The bill comes here with the support of the other body; the Senate having already given its overwhelming approval.

The legislation comes with the approval of the committee on the Interior. Should not all these endorsements warrant our giving the bill a chance to be considered? I repeat, are we going to say that we will deny the gentleman from Colorado, who has served here for 14 years, an opportunity to have his bill considered in the House? I do not think we are. I hope when the roll is called we will adopt this rule and then give consideration of the bill on its merits.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such of the remaining time as I may need.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that every year or two we have "Fryingpan." So in bringing before you a rule for consideration of this matter I feel very much like the old saying, "Here is where we came in"; because just 2 years ago a similar rule was under consideration right at the close of the session. I know the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] is usually very accurate. I know he always wants to be accurate. So first I wish to correct his statement as to the rollcall on that rule, because I have it before me. It was defeated by 7 votes, 188 yeas and 195 noes.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on a question of the record.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I will have to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN. The gentleman also will notice by looking over the RECORD that a number of Members changed their votes. At one time it was only 1 vote difference.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Well, this is the final record.

Mr. MARTIN. If anyone wants to know what the real record is, I call their attention to CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 100, part 9, page 12453.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. And I call attention to page 11786 of the daily RECORD, which was the final rollcall on the rule. The vote as recorded in the permanent RECORD was yeas 188, noes 195.

However that may be, here we are again in the same situation that we were 2 years ago when this bill came in 3 days before the adjournment of Congress and was fully discussed on the merits, and the Congress decided they did not want to waste any time on it at that late date. That is what I hope the Congress will do at this time.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Very briefly, please.

Mr. CHENOWETH. The gentleman knows the great esteem and affection I have for him.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes, but let us not take time on that right now.

Mr. CHENOWETH. The gentleman does not attach any blame to me for bringing this bill up at this late date, does he?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. This is a good time for me to pay my respects to the gentleman from Colorado, to whom I am greatly devoted. The gentleman has tried as assiduously as anybody could do get this matter up. I do not think he has missed a day of either calling the committee or me to know when I was going to get a rule out for him on Frying Pan. Now there is talk around here that if we do not pass this thing the gentleman would not return here. I would not do anything in the world to prevent his returning to Congress, but if we pass this thing today he would not have anything more to brag about. He would not have any issue. I want to keep this thing alive. As long as we can keep him fighting for it we can keep him here in Congress. He will not have any issue to run on if you do this thing to him. Please do not do it.

My friend complains about this bill staying in the Rules Committee. Here is the fact about that. This Frying Pan proposition just has not got the merit to get through the Congress for the reasons stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SAYLOR]. It came before the Rules Committee, it is true. I discussed it with the Rules Committee and we held a hearing on it in the Rules Committee, and it just could not muster enough votes to get a rule.

How did it get here? I do not know exactly, but there have been some funny things going on around here, and somehow or other this thing got all mixed up with the project called Hells Canyon, and there were some good folks around here who were for Hells Canyon and some who were for Fryingpan and they got the idea that if we could get them both up that they would both win. Well, that looked good for a time, but after a while Hells Canyon went to that place in a hurry by direction of the United States Senate.

Now the fellows who were thinking, "Well, we'll get them both out and pass them both," they just kind of got inadvertently blocked on this deal and Hells Canyon is out and Colorado Fryingpan is just trying to stay in.

You all want to go home and are hoping you can get out of here tomorrow night. If you bring this bill up on the floor of the House with 2 hours of debate and the numerous amendments to be offered, and the committee amendments that will be offered you will be here until midnight before you get through with it and then there will be other matters that you have got to take care of. I do not think we ought to use up time fooling with this thing which you just know is not going to pass.

I hope you will defeat this rule because this just has no chance.

They have brought in the fate of our good friend from Colorado. I want to say this for Mr. CHENOWETH, we have given him a good run for his money. He has made a good fight. I would not want to do anything to hurt him, because my good friend Mr. CHENOWETH, there is no person in this House who is more enthusiastic or works harder in the interests of his constituents, but I want to keep him still having something to work for.

It was said on both sides that in Colorado this thing had all been settled. I do not think it has been settled, because I have one letter here from the west side of the mountains—I do not know who these people are, but it is from a water-protective association. They do not want it.

The good Lord put this Colorado River over on the west side of the Rocky Mountains. The advocates of this bill now wish to dig a hole through the mountains and put part of it over on the east side of the mountains. I think if it was intended to be over on the east side of the mountain the good Lord would have put it over there himself. But this generation of people have been thinking they were powerful smart and they think they are smart enough to do anything, including putting the Colorado River from the west side of the Rockies over to the east side of the Rockies. I am afraid we have been so smart in this generation that maybe we have discovered the things that will ultimately lead to our complete destruction.

This tunnel is going to cost an awful lot of money. They have not any more idea what it is going to cost than the man in the moon. For example, 2 years ago they said it was going to cost $179 million. This year they say now it is going to cost not more than $154 million. It is the only thing I have heard of in the last few years that has gone down instead of up except farm products.

Mr. HALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HALEY. The gentleman expresses surprise about the estimated cost of this project going down. It is not surprising to me when you marvel at all of the things not being completed. I think it has been the history of these irrigation and reclamation projects throughout the country and throughout the years that before they are finally finished they cost 2 to 3 times the original estimate.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Of course, and this will be no exception.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I will have to yield to my friend from Colorado.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I appreciate what the gentleman has said about me very much, although it may not all be deserved.

There is a limitation of $157 million in this bill, so the cost cannot go beyond that figure. I personally think the project will be constructed for much less than that amount. I am sure every effort will be made to build this project at the lowest possible cost.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Let me say that if the gentleman from Colorado returns, as we hope he will, he will be here in the future asking for $250 million. See if I am not right. And he is so persuasive and persistent he will probably get it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I believe, under the circumstances, it is only fair that Members should have a chance to express their views in respect to this proposed legislation. The bill, I am informed, has been on the calendar for several months. I am also advised it has passed the Senate by a good-sized vote. Perhaps that is beside the question, but I do feel that those who favor the bill, as well as those who oppose the measure, ought to have a chance to express their views. This is not a question of whether you are for or against the proposal. Not at all. It is a question of whether we are willing to listen to the debate and then decide whether or not we want to support it or vote against it. It seems to me it is pretty drastic to be unwilling to even listen to the discussion. Let me repeat—this is not at all a question of whether you are for or against the measure. It is only a question of whether you are willing to listen to the debate on both sides of the question and then decide whether you favor it or not.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 179, nays 194, answered "present" 3, not voting 56, as follows:

DISPLACED BUSINESSES

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in the housing bill passed by the House and sent to the other body is a provision for the reimbursement up to $2,000 of small business tenants for expenses incurred in moving when dispossessed by reason of urban redevelopment.

In the bill reported out by the Banking and Currency Committee reimbursement up to $5,000 was provided, also loans at low interest rates for the reestablishment of displaced businesses. In the Banking and Currency Committee I had endeavored to have the maximum for moving expense reimbursement set at $50,000, and in this endeavor had been supported by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER], the chairman of the subcommittee of the Small Business Committee that had accorded a public hearing to the representatives of the Hyde Park district in Chicago. I wish to commend the gentleman from New York for the great and outstanding service he has rendered small business at all times. I can assure him that among the displaced small business tenants in the district in Chicago that I have the honor to represent his name always will be cherished.

Mr. Speaker, the $2,000 reimbursement provision, provided the bill is passed by the other body and becomes a law, will be at least a token of the interest of the Congress in the plight of the small-business tenants who are being uprooted from locations where they have been long established. They are paying heavily the price of urban progress, and while the bill we passed would give them some relief, very much more remains to be done. This is an area for study and legislative action that should command the attention of the 85th Congress immediately on its reconvening.

That my colleagues may know how serious is the plight of the displaced small-business tenants, I am taking the liberty of presenting for your reading, without first asking the consent of the writer, the following personal letter from my mail of this morning:

DEAR SIR: Our Ford dealership at 5518 Lake Park Avenue, Hyde Park, Chicago, Ill., is being taken away from us.

We will lose our investment in leasehold improvements of $85,000, in shop equipment, wiring, exhausts, heating, etc., in the amount of $60,000; in furniture and fixtures and signs in the amount of $21,000, and in possible inventory loss of approximately $50,000. A grand total of $216,000.

We do not own the building in which our business is established. We are merely tenants, and as a result of condemnation we are forced to go out of business and we are faced with bankruptcy and a loss of well over $216,000, as well as the loss of 10 long, hard years devoted day and night in establishing whatever goodwill exists.

One partner loses also 20 years of prior work in the same location as a garage operator.

Our business employs over 50 people with an annual payroll of $285,000. All of them will lose their jobs. Both my partner and I (we each own 50 percent of the stock in our corporation) have earned a living for our families through this Ford dealership. Now our means of livelihood is being taken away from us.

Perhaps a bit of background will give you further insight into the horror of what this means.

Prior to 1947 we, Mr. Morris Cohen, and the writer, Edward France, applied to the Ford Motor Co., for a Ford franchise. After 6 long months of waiting and praying, we obtained their consent.

We both invested practically every cent we had in the world—money that had been slowly saved over many prior years—in order to get our business started. Over the period of these last 9 years we both worked practically day and night and many times into the early mornings trying to build up a business that we felt had the possibilities of continuing for many years to come—one which would provide security for us even as we grew older. That security is now being taken away from us by Government condemnation without 1 cent of payment.

At the time that we obtained our franchise, we negotiated a 10-year lease with our present landlord. We agreed that we would make certain leasehold improvements and as a result received a reasonable rental. We since have put in many times the original amount committed.

Just a couple of years ago we were in new negotiations with our landlord for a 10-year extension of our lease. Everything was agreed upon and all that had to be done was to sign the lease. The papers were drawn by our attorney and everything was all set. Then the news of the contemplated Hyde Park redevelopment came out. Our landlord upon advice of his counsel then refused us an extension.

Unfortunately there is no place in the immediate Hyde Park area to which we can move. We must, under the terms of our franchise with Ford, stay within a 1-mile radius, and there is no such place. With no place to move, and not enough money to move all of our equipment nor to remodel a different place if there were something else available, we have no alternative but to close up our business—just lock the door and walk away from it broke.

Of course we can hold a public auction to sell some things, but have you ever witnessed a distress auction? Valuable parts and equipment usually bring about 2 cents to 5 cents on the dollar. The bulk of our investment is attached to the building, some of which cannot be moved or would be too costly to move.

I cannot find words in the English language to describe this situation other than the word "horror."

When we have read in the papers in the past of certain foreign governments appropriating private businesses and putting out on the streets its owners, I am sure that we have all been horrified at this gross injustice. Nonetheless, here is a situation about which we have no one to whom we can raise our voices in complaint or askance.

Does this all seem fair? Can a business be completely destroyed and wiped out; its owners bankrupted, its employees discharged, with absolutely no consideration to its owners because they happen to be tenants rather than property owners?

Does it seem fair to ask men who have built up a valuable Ford business, who have invested their life's savings, who have undertaken certain personal obligations such as, among other things, purchasing homes for their families, who have worked 20 years of working hours in less than half that time, to walk away from their business broke?

It is most amazing to know that practically every lawyer, every politician, and every layman, who has heard of our problem, just won't believe it. They are all so certain that at least we will be partially reimbursed for something.

Would to God that this were so.

However, it merely means trying to start all over again after 20 long years of work and savings.

Is there no help for us or others like us, despite our large investment?

Please visualize for a moment our positions being reversed and this is happening to you or yours. After building and working and saving and sweating and worrying, everything is taken away from you, through no fault of yours, and you are left broke with no one to talk to about it, because the law is quite clear—it can take whatever you have because you happened to have been a tenant in your business as against being the owner of the building?

Need I say more?

My purpose in writing is to show that any contemplated Federal-aid law certainly should provide some help to those who stand to lose large fortunes as well as small ones. We are given to understand that the current legislation being considered will assist businessmen up to the amount of $2,000. If this is correct, it certainly would represent a very fine gesture, but would not, even remotely, bring about the result for which it was originally intended; namely, to prevent businesses from sustaining such heavy losses, as is apparent in our particular case.

May we take this opportunity to thank you personally for every effort you have bent in order to rectify a most unjust situation and may the good Lord smile upon you in your every activity.

Yours very truly,

RITZ CENTRAL MOTORS, INC.,
EDWARD FRANCE.
MORRIS COHEN.

P. S.—At this writing, the newspapers have just announced that the pending legislation has been pigeonholed, which could mean no assistance whatsoever. Every day lost means that many more people will suffer terribly.

If in the case of the individual or widow such military service is not excluded under the preceding sentence, but upon attaining retirement age (as defined in section 216 (a) of the Social Security Act) he or she becomes entitled (or would upon proper application be entitled) to such benefits, the Commission shall redetermine the aggregate period of service upon which such annuity is based, effective as of the first day of the month in which he or she attains such age, so as to exclude such service. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall, upon the request of the Commission, inform the Commission whether or not any such individual or widow or child is entitled at any specified time to such benefits.

No credit shall be allowed for the service covered by the refund until the deposit is made.

"'(e) Interest under subsection (c) or (d) shall be computed from the midpoint of each service period included in the computation, or from the date refund was paid, to the date of deposit or commencing date of annuity, whichever is earlier. The interest shall be computed at the rate of 4 per centum per annum to December 31, 1947, and 3 per centum per annum thereafter compounded annually. Any Member who completes twenty-five years of service, or who attains the age of fifty years and completes twenty years of service, shall, upon separation from the service (other than separation by resignation or expulsion), be paid a reduced annuity computed as provided in section 9. No Member or survivor of a Member shall be entitled to receive an annuity under this Act unless there shall have been deducted or deposited the amounts specified in section 4 with respect to his last five years of Member service.

"'Disability retirement

"'SEC. 7. (a) Any employee who completes five years of civilian service and who is found by the Commission to have become disabled shall, upon his own application or upon application by his department or agency, be retired on an annuity computed as provided in section 9. Any Member who completes five years of Member service and who is found by the Commission to have become disabled shall, upon his own application, be retired on an annuity computed as provided in section 9.

"'(b) No claim shall be allowed under this section unless the application is filed with the Commission prior to separation of the employee or Member from the service or within one year thereafter. This time limitation may be waived by the Commission for an individual who at the date of separation from service or within one year thereafter is mentally incompetent, if the application is filed with the Commission within one year from the date of restoration of such individual to competency or the appointment of a fiduciary, whichever is the earlier.

"'(c) Each annuitant retired under this section or under section 6 of the act of May 29, 1930, as amended, unless his disability is permanent in character, shall at the expiration of 1 year from the date of such retirement and annually thereafter, until reaching age 60, be examined under the direction of the Commission. If the annuitant fails to submit to examination as required under this section, payment of the annuity shall be suspended until continuance of the disability is satisfactorily established.

"'(d) If such annuitant, before reaching age 60, recovers from his disability or is restored to an earning capacity fairly comparable to the current rate of compensation of the position occupied at the time of retirement, payment of the annuity shall cease (1) upon reemployment by the Government, (2) one year from the date of the medical examination showing such recovery, or (3) one year from the date of determination that he is so restored, whichever is earliest. Earning capacity shall be deemed restored if in each of 2 succeeding calendar years the income of the annuitant from wages or self-employment or both shall equal at least 80 percent of the current rate of compensation of the position occupied immediately prior to retirement.

"'(e) If such annuitant whose annuity is discontinued under subsection (d) is not reemployed in any position included in the provisions of this act, he shall be considered, except for service credit, as having been involuntarily separated from the service for the purposes of this act as of the date of discontinuance of the disability annuity and shall, after such discontinuance, be entitled to annuity in accordance with the applicable provision of this act.

"'(f) No person shall be entitled to receive an annuity under this act and compensation for injury or disability to himself under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, as amended, covering the same period of time. This provision shall not bar the right of any claimant to the greater benefit conferred by either act for any part of the same period of time. Neither this provision nor any provision in such act of September 7, 1916, as amended, shall deny to any person an annuity accruing to such person under this act on account of service rendered by him, or deny any concurrent benefit to such person under such act of September 7, 1916, as amended, on account of the death of any other person.

"'Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, the right of any person entitled to an annuity under this Act shall not be affected because such person has received an award of compensation in a lump sum under section 14 of the Act of September 7, 1916, as amended, except that where such annuity is payable on account of the same disability for which compensation under such section has been paid, so much of such compensation as has been paid for any period extended beyond the date such annuity becomes effective, as determined by the Department of Labor, shall be refunded to the Department of Labor, to be covered into the Federal Employees' Compensation Fund. Before such person shall receive such annuity he shall (1) refund to such Department the amount representing such commuted payments for such extended period, or (2) authorize the deduction of such amount from the annuity payable to him under this Act, which amount shall be transmitted to such Department for reimbursement to such fund. Deductions from such annuity may be made from accrued and accruing payments, or may be prorated against and paid from accruing payments in such manner as the Department of Labor shall determine, whenever it finds that the financial circumstances of the annuitant are such as to warrant such deferred refunding.

"'Deferred retirement

"'SEC. 8. (a) Any employee who is separated from the service or transferred to a position not within the purview of this Act after completing five years of civilian service may be paid an annuity beginning at the age of sixty-two years computed as provided in section 9.

The employment of an annuitant under this subsection shall not operate to create an annuity for or in any manner affect the annuity of any survivor.

"'(c) If a Member heretofore or hereafter retired under this Act hereafter becomes employed in an appointive or elective position, annuity payments shall be discontinued during such employment and resumed in the same amount upon termination of such employment: Provided, That if such retired Member takes office as Member and gives notice as provided in section 2 (c), his service as Member during such period shall be credited in determining his right to and the amount of his subsequent annuity: Provided further, That this subsection shall not apply to a Member appointed by the President of the United States to a position not requiring confirmation by the Senate.

"'Payment of benefits

"'SEC. 14. (a) Each annuity is stated as an annual amount, one-twelfth of which, fixed at the nearest dollar, accrues monthly and is payable on the first business day of the month after it accrues.

"'(b) Except as otherwise provided, the annuity of an employee shall commence on the first of the month after separation from the service, or on the first of the month after salary ceases provided the employee meets the service and the age or disability requirements for title to annuity at that time. The annuity of a Member or of an elected officer of the Senate or House of Representatives shall commence on the day following the day on which salary shall cease provided the person entitled to such annuity meets the service and the age or disability requirements for title to annuity at that time. The annuity of an employee or Member under section 8 shall commence on the first of the month after the occurrence of the event on which payment of the annuity is based.

Such obligations issued for purchase by the fund shall have maturities fixed with due regard for the needs of the fund and bear interest at a rate equal to the average rate of interest computed as to the end of the calendar month next preceding the date of such issue, borne by all marketable interest-bearing obligations of the United States then forming a part of the public debt that are not due or callable until after the expiration of five years from the date of original issue; except that where such average rate is not a multiple of one-eighth of 1 per centum, the rate of interest of such obligations shall be the multiple of one-eighth of 1 per centum nearest such average rate. Such obligations shall be issued for purchase by the fund only if the Secretary of the Treasury determines that the purchase in the market of other interest-bearing obligations of the United States, or of obligations guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the United States on original issue or at the market price, is not in the public interest.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7619) to adjust the rates of compensation of the heads of the executive departments and of certain other officials of the Federal Government, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The committee of conference recommends that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment and that the Senate agree to the same.

The conference substitute consists of five titles:

(1) Title I. Executive Pay
(2) Title II. Terms of Civil Service Commissioners and Succession to Duties of Chairman
(3) Title III. Miscellaneous Provisions
(4) Title IV. Civil Service Retirement
(5) Title V. Scientific and Professional Positions

The House bill related only to executive pay.

TITLE I. EXECUTIVE PAY

Title I of the conference substitute establishes salary levels for Cabinet officers, sub-Cabinet officers, and other executives of the Federal Government generally conforming to the salary levels for such officials provided by the bill as passed by the House. The salary levels for Cabinet officers ($25,000), for the Under Secretary of State, the Deputy Secretary of Defense, the Director, Office of Defense Mobilization, the Director, Bureau of the Budget, and the Comptroller General ($22,500), and for the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force ($22,000), are the same as in the House bill.

Principal differences in the conference substitute and the bill as passed by the House are: (1) Chairmen of major boards and commissions are in salary level of $20,500 under the conference substitute, compared to levels of $19,500 and $20,000 in the House bill and (2) Assistant Secretaries of executive and military departments (including Assistant Postmasters General), administrators of certain bureaus and agencies, and members of major boards and commissions are placed in the $20,000 salary level under the conference substitute, compared to a salary level of $19,000 in the House bill. The salaries of governors of Territories and possessions are placed at $19,000 under the conference substitute.

The conference substitute establishes a proper alinement between salaries of Cabinet officers, sub-Cabinet officers, and the heads of the various agencies, independent establishments, and bureaus in accordance with the level of the duties and responsibilities of such positions.

The Senate amendment provided for the establishment of specified numbers of administrative assistants and other secretaries or immediate staff assistants in the White House Office. The conferees on the part of the House agreed to the total number of such positions as contained in the Senate amendment, and the conference substitute approves such positions without regard to the assignment and distribution thereof.

In accordance with the bill as passed by the House, the conference substitute increases the maximum salaries under the Classification Act of 1949 (grade GS–18) and under the Postal Field Service Compensation Act of 1955 (salary level 20) from $14,800 to $16,000, with appropriate adjustments in salary steps for the immediate lower grade and levels provided in those acts. Maximum salaries for chief medical officers and assistants in the Veterans' Administration are increased, under the conference substitute and the bill as passed by the House, to maintain the existing relationship between such salaries and the salaries of other Government officials and of classified and postal field service positions.

TITLE II. TERMS OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSIONERS AND SUCCESSION TO DUTIES OF CHAIRMAN

Title II of the conference substitute establishes 6-year, staggered terms of office for United States Civil Service Commissioners; provides for designation by the President of a Vice Chairman of the Commission; and provides a line of succession to perform the duties and responsibilities of the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission by the Vice Chairman, in the absence of the Chairman, and by the other member of the Commission in the absence of the Chairman and Vice Chairman. The bill as passed by the House contained no such provision. However, this provision of the conference substitute is identical to the recommendation of the House committee in House Report No. 1844 with respect to the terms of office of Civil Service Commissioners and succession to the responsibilities of Chairman of the Commission in his absence.

TITLE III. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Title III of the conference substitute provides for the appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of a General Counsel of the Post Office Department, a General Counsel of the Department of Agriculture, and a General Counsel of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to replace the existing offices of the chief legal officers of such Departments, which will be abolished. The House bill contained no such provision.

The Senate amendment authorized the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts to place a total of 4 positions in grade GS–18 of the general schedule of the Classification Act of 1949, and provided that the positions of 7 directors of commodity offices, Commodity Stabilization Service, Department of Agriculture, shall be in grade GS–16 of such schedule. The bill as passed by the House contained no such provisions. The conference substitute does not contain such provisions, but increases by 11 positions the total number of supergrade positions which a majority of the Civil Service Commissioners are authorized to place in appropriate grades of the general schedule. It is the understanding of the committee on conference that the Civil Service Commission will immediately consider the 11 positions in question to determine if they merit these grades.

Three positions allocated by the Senate bill in grade 18 for deputy administrators for the Agricultural Research Service are contained in the conference substitute. The bill as passed by the House contained no such provision.

TITLE IV. CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT

The conference substitute contains a complete revision of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930. The House bill contained no such provision.

The conference substitute greatly liberalizes retirement benefits of Federal employees. The cost to the Government of the added benefits is estimated at $310 million a year. The major new employee benefits provided by the conference substitute are:

Annuities will be computed at (a) 2 percent of the high average salary multiplied by all years of service in excess of 10 plus 1½ percent of such salary multiplied by the first 5 years of service, plus 1¾ percent of the years of service from 5 to 10, or (b) 1 percent of high average salary, plus $25, multiplied by total years of service, whichever is greater. Under present law annuities are computed on the basis of 1½ percent of high average salary, or 1 percent of such salary plus $25, multiplied by total years of service, whichever is greater.

The annuity of an employee electing a survivor annuity will be reduced by 2½ percent of the first $2,400 and 10 percent of the balance. The present reduction is 5 percent of the first $1,500 and 10 percent of the balance.

Optional retirement is authorized at age 62 after 5 years of service, with the right to elect survivor benefits. Present law provides an annuity after 5 years of service, but requires 15 years of service for election of survivor benefits.

The present right to retire on a reduced annuity at age 55 after 30 years of service is continued.

The reduction factor for retirement before reaching age 60 is changed from 3 percent a year to 1 percent for each year the retiring employee is under age 60 and 2 percent for each year under age 55.

Disability benefits are liberalized by providing a minimum of 40 percent of the average salary, or the annuity which would have been earned at age 60, whichever is the lesser.

An annuity is granted upon involuntary separation after attaining the age of 50 years with 20 years of service, and the existing provision for annuity upon involuntary separation after 25 years of service, regardless of age, is continued.

Upon death of an employee after 5 years of service, or of a retired employee, the surviving widow or widower will receive an annuity equal to 50 percent of the earned annuity of the decedent, beginning the first month after such death.

Survivor annuities of children of an employee who dies after 5 years of service, or of a retired employee who dies, are increased by an average of 150 percent.

An annuitant who is reemployed and serves at least 1 full-time year on active duty in a position covered by the Retirement Act will receive an annuity based on his reemployed service as well as his annuity based on the original retirement. Any lump-sum leave credit will not be reduced by reason of annuity paid to him during reemployment.

Members of the civilian faculties of the Naval Academy and Naval Postgraduate School, and United States commissioners who meet certain tests of minimum compensation and service, are brought into the civil service retirement system.

Status of civil-service retirement fund

In the judgment of the managers on the part of the House, the conference substitute is both generous and realistic. It provides greatly liberalized retirement benefits and at the same time improves the financial soundness of the civil-service retirement fund.

The financial condition of the retirement fund has deeply concerned the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee for some time past. Recommendations of the committee based on its extensive study of methods of financing the fund were presented to the House and printed in House Report No. 1844, 84th Congress.

The committee found that there are three essentials to proper financing of the retirement fund. They are (1) employee contributions to the fund in amounts related to benefits provided and to recognized standards for a staff annuity system, (2) equal contributions to the fund by the Government as a payroll cost of each department and agency, and (3) appropriations by the Government to the fund in amounts which, when added to such contributions by the employees and matching contributions by the Government, will place in the fund each year the sum required to maintain it on a "normal cost plus interest" basis.

The normal cost plus interest basis for financing the retirement fund is defined in the conference substitute. In brief, it requires appropriations to the retirement fund each year to cover that part of the Government's share of accrued normal costs for the current year which are not met by the matching contributions of the departments and agencies and, in addition, interest on the past deficiency of the fund. When added to the contributions of the employees and of the departments and agencies, such appropriations will maintain the fund on a sound basis and the present deficit ($13,435,000,000 at June 30, 1955) will not be further increased.

The Civil Service Commission estimates that upon approval of the conference substitute an appropriation of approximately $555 million will be required each fiscal year to maintain the retirement fund on a normal cost plus interest basis. The fund also will receive $582 million from employee deductions and a like amount from contributions by the departments and agencies.

The normal cost plus interest method of financing the retirement fund is recommended by the board of actuaries of the civil service retirement and disability fund, by the Committee on Retirement Policy for Federal Personnel (created by Public Law 555, 82d Cong., to study all Federal retirement systems) and by independent actuarial and retirement authorities. It is the traditional basis of appropriation estimates by the Civil Service Commission for financing the fund.

It is emphasized that the major portion of the past deficiency, on which the Government pays interest, results from two factors—first, the "starting load" when the retirement system was first established, that is, the requirement to pay annuities based on long periods of service during which little or no contributions were made by the employees being retired under the system, and second, numerous increases in benefits throughout the years since with no accompanying provision for adequate financing. This condition necessitates the adoption of a firm basis for financing the retirement fund which will prevent further increase in the deficiency. The conference substitute contains the three essentials for financing the retirement fund on a normal cost plus interest basis, which will accomplish this purpose. It requires employees' contributions of 6½ percent of salary and matching contributions by the departments and agencies. It directs the Civil Service Commission to submit annual estimates of appropriations necessary to finance the fund on a normal cost plus interest basis and to continue the retirement system in full force and effect.

These and certain other fiscal adjustments provided by the conference substitute will greatly strengthen the financing of the retirement fund and assure its soundness in the future. The benefits granted by the conference substitute are the maximum benefits that could be granted Federal employees within the limits of sound financing.

The conference substitute authorizes the Secretary of Defense to establish not more than 120 scientific and professional positions

(in lieu of 45 now authorized) in the Department of Defense and not more than 25 such positions in the National Security Agency, to carry out research and development functions relating to national defense and military and naval medicine. It authorizes the Chairman of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics to establish 30 such positions in his agency. A salary range of $12,500 to $19,000 is established for such positions by title I of the conference substitute. The bill as passed by the House contained no such provision. However, the House in this Congress already has passed H. R. 11040, to create a substantially larger number of such positions. It is expected that the need for additional positions of this type will be reexamined early in the next Congress.

The conference substitute also increases, from 1,200 to 1,226, the maximum number of positions in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the general schedule in the Classification Act of 1949 which a majority of the Civil Service Commissioners are authorized to establish in accordance with that act. The existing provision for reports by the Civil Service Commission to Congress on the total number of such positions and the number thereof in each supergrade, contained in the Senate amendment, is replaced in the conference substitute by a requirement for reports to Congress by the Commission, and by other authorities authorized to establish like positions, setting forth, in addition to such information, information with respect to qualifications of incumbents of these positions and other information that is deemed appropriate or required by the Congress or a committee thereof.

The language in the conference substitute is identical to many sections of S. 2875, as reported to the House, and in other respects to the language contained in the bill as it passed the Senate. In this respect attention is directed to a more complete analysis in House Report No. 2854 and Senate Report No. 1787, reports on S. 2875.

TOM MURRAY,
EDWARD H. REES,
JAMES H. MORRISON,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 7619) to adjust the rates of compensation of the heads of the executive departments and of certain other officials of the Federal Government, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House may be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this conference agreement represents one of the most substantial liberalizations of the Federal employees retirement system. Annuities of present employees and their widows will be increased by about 25 percent and those of children by 150 percent.

The last major revision of the Federal employees retirement system was made in 1948, in the 80th Congress, at which time I had the honor to be chairman of the committee that developed many of the programs which this piece of legislation improves. In 1948, for the first time we provided survivors' benefits for widows and children of Federal employees. Before that time there had been no survivor benefits for children and widows of Federal employees. These benefits are greatly liberalized by this legislation.

Under this bill a retiring employee may provide an annuity for his widow by merely taking a reduction of 2½ percent on the first $2,400 of his annuity and 10 percent on all above that as compared to the present 5 percent on the first $1,500 and 10 percent on all over that.

One of the major improvements made by this legislation is a revision of the formula for computing the annuity of those Federal employees who are retiring. Today an employee receives 1½ percent on highest 5-year average salary multiplied by his years of service. Under the bill he will receive 1½ percent for the first 5 years, 1¾ percent for the next 5 years, and 2 percent for the remainder of his service.

Another major benefit in the bill affects those employees who retire at ages less than 60. Presently the reduction formula for each year under 60 is 3 percent per year. Under the bill it will be 1 percent for each year under 60, and 2 percent for each year under 55.

Another major benefit is a provision for a minimum annuity of 40 percent of an employee's average annual salary if retired for disability regardless of age.

Still another provision will permit an employee with 20 years service and age 50 to receive an immediate annuity if involuntarily separated. The retirement at 25 years at any age at involuntary separation is retained. This provision is particularly important because it permits employees with 20 years' service at age 50 to retire and retain their Government insurance at the full face value until age 65 with no cost to them. The 30-year, age 55 retirement provision in present law is retained in the conference bill.

The bill (S. 2875) which the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service reported last week with language I drafted, while not considered by the House as a whole, was very beneficial in the conference. A large portion of its language, provisions and policies is contained in the conference bill.

I can assure the Members that the employees will be pleased with the provisions of this bill. If you could have seen the smiles and congratulations coming from the officials of the employee organizations you would surely appreciate their satisfaction with its provisions.

I can assure the Members that all provisions of this bill have been thoroughly considered in conference. I firmly believe that it is a good bill and represents a major advance in the modernization of laws affecting all Federal employees.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the conference agreement on H. R. 7619 contains a number of major bills added to a bill which passed the House last session and which was limited to the adjustment of the rates of compensation for the heads of the executive departments and agencies.

The Senate added four more titles in addition to executive pay, as follows:

Title I, executive pay.

Title II, terms of Civil Service Commissioners and succession to duties of Chairman.

Title III, miscellaneous provisions.

Title IV, civil-service retirement.

Title V, scientific and professional positions.

I will discuss the major points contained in the conference agreement consecutively as they appear in the bill.

Title I relates to executive pay. It establishes salary levels for Cabinet officers at $25,000 per annum, for the Under Secretary of State, the Deputy Secretary of Defense, Director, Office of Defense Mobilization, Director, Bureau of the Budget, and the Comptroller General at $22,500, and for the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force at $22,000.

Salaries for the chairmen of major boards and commissions is placed at $20,500, Assistant Secretaries of executive and military departments, including Assistant Postmasters General, administrators of certain bureaus and agencies, and members of major boards and commissions at $20,000, and salaries of governors of Territories and possessions at $19,000 per annum.

The conference agreement establishes a proper alinement between salaries of Cabinet officers, sub-Cabinet officers, and the heads of the various agencies, independent establishments, and bureaus in accordance with the level of the duties and responsibilities of such positions.

It also increases the maximum salaries under the Classification Act of 1949—GS–18—and under the Postal Field Service Compensation Act of 1955—salary level 20—from $14,800 to $16,000, with appropriate adjustments in salary steps for the immediate lower grade and levels provided in those acts.

Maximum salaries for chief medical officers and assistants in the Veterans' Administration are increased to maintain the existing relationship between their salaries and the salaries of other Government officials and of classified and postal field service positions.

Title II establishes the terms of Civil Service Commissioners as a 6-year staggered term of office and also provides for a line of succession to the Chairmanship through the other Commissioners in the absence of the Chairman.

Title III provides for the appointment by the President, by and with the advice of the Senate, of General Counsels of the Post Office Department, Department of Agriculture, and Health, Education, and Welfare, to replace the existing offices of the chief legal officers of those Departments.

Title IV contains a complete revision of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930. It liberalizes retirement benefits of Federal employees. The cost to the Government of the added benefits is estimated at $345 million a year, $35 million of which will be absorbed as the net result of increased employees' contributions. The major new employee benefits provided by the conference agreement are:

At the present time, civil service annuities are based upon 1½ percent of the highest average annual salary over a period of 5 consecutive years times the total years of service. This bill will change that formula so that it will be 1½ percent for the first 5 years of service, 1¾ percent for the next 5 years of service, and 2 percent for the remainder, multiplied by the years of service.

The annuity of an employee electing a survivor annuity will be reduced by 2½ percent of the first $2,400 and 10 percent of the balance. The present reduction is 5 percent of the first $1,500 and 10 percent of the balance.

Optional retirement is authorized at age 62 after 5 years of service, with the right to elect survivor benefits. Present law provides an annuity after 5 years of service, but requires 15 years of service for election of survivor benefits.

The present right to retire on a reduced annuity at age 55 after 30 years of service is continued.

The reduction factor for retirement before reaching age 60 is changed from 3 percent a year to 1 percent for each year the retiring employee is under age 60 and 2 percent for each year under age 55.

Disability benefits are liberalized by providing a minimum of 40 percent of the average salary, or the annuity which would have been earned at age 60, whichever is the lesser.

An annuity is granted upon involuntary separation after attaining the age of 50 years with 20 years of service, and the existing provision for annuity upon involuntary separation after 25 years of service, regardless of age, is continued.

Upon death of an employee after 5 years of service, or of a retired employee, the surviving widow or widower will receive an annuity equal to 50 percent of the earned annuity of the decedent, beginning the first month after such death.

Survivor annuities of children of an employee who dies after 5 years of service, or of a retired employee who dies, are increased by an average of 150 percent.

An annuitant who is reemployed and serves at least 1 full-time year on active duty in a position covered by the Retirement Act will receive an annuity based on his reemployed service as well as his annuity based on the original retirement. Any lump-sum leave credit will not be reduced by reason of annuity paid to him during reemployment.

Members of the civilian faculties of the Naval Academy and Naval Postgraduate School, and United States Commissioners who meet certain tests of minimum compensation and service, are brought into the civil-service retirement system. Contributions of the employees will be 6½ percent and Members 7½ percent.

STATUS OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT FUND

In the judgment of the managers on the part of the House, the conference agreement is both generous and realistic. It provides liberalized retirement benefits and at the same time improves the financial soundness of the civil-service retirement fund.

The financial condition of the retirement fund has deeply concerned the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee for some time past. Recommendations of the committee based on its extensive study of methods of financing the fund were presented to the House and printed in House Report No. 1844, 84th Congress.

The committee found that there are three essentials to proper financing of the retirement fund. They are, first, employee contributions to the fund in amounts related to benefits provided and to recognized standards for a staff annuity system; second, equal contributions to the fund by the Government as a payroll cost of each department and agency; and, third, appropriations by the Government to the fund in amounts which, when added to such contributions by the employees and matching contributions by the Government, will place in the fund each year the sum required to maintain it on a normal cost-plus-interest basis.

The normal cost-plus-interest basis for financing the retirement fund is defined in the conference agreement. In brief, it requires appropriations to the retirement fund each year to cover that part of the Government's share of accrued normal costs for the current year which are not met by the matching contributions of the departments and agencies and, in addition, interest on the past deficiency of the fund. When added to the contributions of the employees and of the departments and agencies, such appropriations will maintain the fund on a sound basis and the present deficit—$13,435,000,000 at June 30, 1955—will not be further increased.

The language in the conference agreement is identical to many sections of S. 2875, as reported to the House, and in other respects to the language contained in the bill as it passed the Senate. In this respect attention is directed to a more complete analysis in House Report No. 2854 and Senate Report No. 1787, reports on S. 2875.

AMENDING TITLE II OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. COOPER submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 7225) to amend title II of the Social Security Act to provide disability insurance benefits for certain disabled individuals who have attained age 50, to reduce to age 62 the age on the basis of which benefits are payable to certain women, to provide for continuation of child's insurance benefits for children who are disabled before attaining age 18, to extend coverage, and for other purposes.

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. NO. 2936)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. "(B) the number equal to the number of months in the period beginning with the first day of the first month for which she is entitled to an old-age insurance benefit and ending with the last day of the month before the month in which she would attain the age of sixty-five.

"(2) The wife's insurance benefit of any wife for any month after the month preceding the month in which she attains the age of sixty-two and prior to the month in which she attains the age of sixty-five shall be reduced by—the month in which she attains the age of sixty-two.

"(A) 25/36 of 1 per centum, multiplied by

The preceding provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to the benefit for any month in which such wife has in her care (individually or jointly with the individual on whose wages and self-employment income such wife's insurance benefit is based) a child entitled to child's insurance benefits on the basis of such wages and self-employment income. With respect to any month in the period specified in clause (B) of the first sentence, if such wife does not have in such month such a child in her care (individually or jointly with such individual), she shall be deemed to have such a child in her care in such month for the purposes of the preceding sentence unless there is in effect for such month a certificate filed by her with the Secretary, in accordance with regulations prescribed by him, in which she elects to receive wife's insurance benefits reduced as provided in this subsection. "(3) In the case of any woman who is entitled to an old-age insurance benefit to which paragraph (1) is applicable and who, for the first month for which she is so entitled (but not for any prior month) or for any later month occurring before the month in which she attains the age of sixty-five, is entitled to a wife's insurance benefit to which paragraph (2) is applicable, the amount of such wife's insurance benefit for any month prior to the month in which she attains the age of sixty-five shall, in lieu of the reduction provided in paragraph (2), be reduced by the sum of—

"(i) the number equal to the number of months specified in clause (B) of paragraph (1), multiplied by

"(ii) 5/9 of 1 per centum, and further multiplied by

"(iii) the excess of such old-age insurance benefit over such wife's insurance benefit.

Such subtraction shall be made only if the total of such months specified in clauses (A), (B), and (C) of the preceding sentence is not less than three. For purposes of clauses (B) and (C) of this paragraph, a wife's insurance benefit shall not be considered terminated for any reason prior to the month in which she attains the age of sixty-five.

"(C) the number equal to the number of months for which the old-age insurance benefit was reduced under such paragraph (1) but for which such benefit was subject to deductions under paragraph (1) or (2) of section 203 (b).

"(7) In the case of a woman who is entitled to an old-age insurance benefit to which paragraph (5) is applicable and who, for the month in which she attains the age of sixty-five (but not for any prior month) or for any later month, is entitled to a wife's insurance benefit, the amount of such wife's insurance benefit for any month shall be reduced by an amount equal to the amount by which the old-age insurance benefit is reduced under paragraph (5) for such month.

"(8) In the case of a woman who is or was entitled to a wife's insurance benefit to which paragraph (2) was applicable and who, for the month in which she attains the age of sixty-five (but not for any prior month) or for any later month, is entitled to an old-age insurance benefit, the amount of such old-age insurance benefit for any month shall be reduced by an amount equal to the amount by which the wife's insurance benefit is reduced under paragraph (6) for such month (or, if she is not entitled to a wife's insurance benefit for such month, by (i) an amount equal to the amount by which such benefit for the last month for which she was entitled thereto was reduced, or (ii) if smaller, an amount equal to the amount by which such benefit would have been reduced under paragraph (6) for the month in which she attained the age of sixty-five if entitlement to such benefit had not terminated before such month).

"(9) The preceding paragraphs shall be applied to old-age insurance benefits and wife's insurance benefits after reduction under section 203 (a) and application of section 215 (g). If the amount of any reduction computed under paragraph (1), under paragraph (2), under clause (A) or clause (B) of paragraph (3), or under clause (A) or clause (B) of paragraph (4) is not a multiple of $0.10, it shall be reduced to the next lower multiple of $0.10."

R. 7225) to amend title II of the Social Security Act to provide disability insurance benefits for certain disabled individuals who have attained age 50, to reduce to age 62 the age on the basis of which benefits are payable to certain women, to provide for continuation of child's insurance benefits for children who are disabled before attaining age 18, to extend coverage, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The following Senate amendments made technical, clerical, clarifying, or conforming changes: 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 16, 18, 28, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 43, 44, 45, 49, 50, 54, 56, 62, and 64. With respect to these amendments (1) the House either recedes or recedes with amendments which are technical, clerical, clarifying, or conforming in nature, or (2) the Senate recedes in order to conform to other action agreed upon by the committee of conference.

Amendment No. 2: Section 101 (a) of the House bill amended section 202 (d) (1) of the Social Security Act so as to provide for payment of child's insurance benefits to disabled children aged 18 or over who are receiving (or are eligible to receive) such benefits before attainment of age 18. The Senate amendment provided for payment of such benefits to such disabled children even if they were not receiving (and not eligible to receive) such benefits prior to attaining such age. In the case of both the House bill and the Senate amendment, however, the disability must have begun before attainment of age 18. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 9: Section 101 (f) of the House bill provided the effective date for the provisions on child's insurance benefits for disabled children. Generally, these provisions would be effective January 1, 1956, in the case of children who attained age 18 after 1953. The provisions of the Senate amendment on this subject would be effective generally September 1, 1956.

The House recedes with an amendment making the provisions on child's insurance benefits for disabled children, as contained in the Senate amendment, effective generally January 1, 1957.

Amendment No. 10: Section 102 (a) of the House bill reduced the age at which women could qualify under the old-age and survivors insurance system for old-age insurance benefits, or for benefits as the wife, widow, or dependent mother of an insured worker, from 65 to 62. These provisions were generally effective after December 1955 (and lump-sum death payments in case of deaths after 1955).

The Senate amendment provided for the same reduction in the qualifying age. However, in the case of benefits payable to a woman as the wife of an insured worker (without having in her care a child of the worker entitled to child's benefits) and in the case of old-age insurance benefits payable to her, the benefits were to be reduced in order to take account of the earlier entitlement to the benefits. The reduction would be equal to 20 percent of the benefit which would be payable at age 65 in the case of old-age insurance benefits for which the woman qualifies at age 62 (with a proportionately lower reduction for each month after 62 that she delays in qualifying). In the case of wife's insurance benefits, the reduction for a woman qualifying for the full period between age 62 and 65 would be 25 percent of the benefit which would be payable at age 65.

The Senate amendment would generally be effective beginning September 1, 1956, in the case of widow's and parent's benefits and beginning January 1, 1957, in the case of wife's insurance benefits and old-age insurance benefits for women.

The House recedes with an amendment making the provisions effective generally November 1, 1956, and with technical amendments, including a technical amendment designed to simplify the computation of the actuarial reduction and the administration of these provisions in cases where a woman is entitled to both an old-age insurance benefit and a wife's insurance benefit. The effective date provided under the conference agreement would apply for purposes of all four types of benefits for women—old-age, wife's, widow's, and parent's insurance benefits, and (in the case of lump-sum death payments) where the death occurs after October 1956.

The conferees have been advised of the great difficulty which the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare will have not only in beginning benefit payments for the month of November 1956 to the large number of women who will file applications for early retirement benefits after the enactment date, but also in handling the very substantial additional workloads resulting from the disability and other provisions of the 1956 amendments. The conferees urge the Department to take immediate measures to staff up, to train its employees, and to take all other immediate measures to insure that it will do the best possible job in discharging its increased responsibilities under these amendments.

Amendments Nos. 11 and 12: Section 103 of the House bill provided for payment of disability insurance benefits to certain insured disabled individuals who have attained age 50 but have not reached age 65 and whose disability has lasted not less than 6 months. It also provided for reduction of such benefits, and child's insurance benefits for a disabled child age 18 or over, if another Federal benefit or State workmen's compensation benefit is payable by reason of physical or mental impairment. In addition, the House bill provided for suspension of these benefits based on disability pending determination of whether the disability has, in fact, ceased in cases where the Secretary believes the beneficiary is no longer disabled, and for withholding of such benefits for refusal, without good cause, to accept rehabilitation services available under an approved Federal-State program.

The Senate amendment contained the same provisions except for (1) technical or clarifying changes; (2) the addition of a provision exempting an individual from loss of benefits for months for which he refuses to accept rehabilitation services where the refusal relates to surgery or medical services or where the refusal is based on adherence to the teachings of a church or sect that teaches its members to rely solely on spiritual means for curing impairments; and (3) the addition of a provision establishing a separate Federal disability insurance trust fund composed of amounts equal to one-half of 1 percent of wages and three-eighths of 1 percent of self-employment income.

In the case of the House bill the new disability insurance benefits would first be payable for months after December 1955. In the case of the Senate amendment they would first be payable for months after June 1957.

The House recedes with an amendment under which refusal to undergo surgery or medical services would not exempt an individual from loss of benefits unless such refusal is based on adherence to the teachings of a church or sect which teaches its members to rely solely on spiritual means for curing impairments. The amendment also makes technical and conforming changes.

In providing in the conference agreement that determinations of disability for cash disability benefits be made by State agencies under the same arrangements as are now utilized in making determinations for the disability freeze, it is understood and expected that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare will fully utilize his authority to review and revise determinations of State agencies in order to assure uniform administration of the disability benefits and to protect the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund from unwarranted costs.

Amendment No. 13: Section 104 (a) of the House bill amended section 210 (a) (1) of the Social Security Act so as to provide coverage under the old-age and survivors insurance system, on the same basis as other agricultural labor, for service performed in connection with the production and harvesting of gum-resin products. The Senate amendment deleted this provision of the House bill, thereby continuing in effect the present exclusion from coverage of such service. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 14: This amendment added to the House bill a new section 104 (b), which would amend section 210 (a) (1) (B) of the Social Security Act so as to exclude from coverage under the old-age and survivors insurance system service performed by foreign agricultural workers lawfully admitted to the United States from any foreign country (or possession thereof) on a temporary basis to perform agricultural labor. Section 210 (a) (1) (B) presently excludes from coverage such service performed by workers so admitted from the Bahamas, Jamaica, and the other British West Indies. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 15: Section 104 (b) of the House bill amended section 210 (a) (6) of the Social Security Act so as to provide coverage under the old-age and survivors insurance system for service performed in the employ of a Federal home loan bank (and subject to its retirement system) and for service performed in the employ of the Tennessee Valley Authority (and subject to its retirement system). The Senate amendment deleted this provision of the House bill, thereby continuing in effect the present exclusion from coverage of such service. Under the conference agreement the provisions of the House bill providing coverage for such service performed by employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and by employees of Federal home loan banks, are retained. As explained in connection with the explanation of amendment No. 25, the extension of coverage in the case of Federal home loan banks will become effective only if the conditions specified in subparagraph (B) of section 104 (1) (2) of the bill as agreed to in conference are met, and the extension of coverage in the case of the Tennessee Valley Authority will become effective only if the conditions specified in subparagraph (C) of such section 104 (1) (2) are met.

Amendment No. 17: Section 104 (c) (2) of the House bill amended section 211 (a) (1) of the Social Security Act so as to provide that income derived from a share-farming arrangement by the owner or tenant of land may be included in computing his net earnings from self-employment if the arrangement provides for his material participation in the production (by the other party to the arrangement) of agricultural or horticultural commodities and such participation in fact exists. The Senate amendment added language to make it clear that the income so derived by the owner or tenant of land may be included in his net earnings from self-employment where he participates materially in the "management of the production" of such commodities. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 19: Section 104 (d) of the House bill amended section 211 (c) (5) of the Social Security Act so as to provide coverage under the old-age and survivors insurance system for self-employment lawyers, dentists, osteopaths, veterinarians, chiropractors, naturopaths, and optometrists. Under the House bill, of the professional self-employed individuals presently enumerated in section 211 (c) (5), only physicians and Christian Science practitioners would continue to be excluded from such coverage. The Senate amendment provides for the exclusion of the performance of service by an individual in the exercise of his profession as a doctor of medicine, doctor of osteopathy, or Christian Science practitioner (or the performance of such service by a partnership). The House recedes with an amendment extending coverage to the performance of service by an individual in the exercise of his profession as a doctor of osteopathy (or the performance of such service by a partnership).

Amendment No. 20: This amendment added to section 104 of the House bill a new subsection (d), which would amend section 218 (d) (6) of the Social Security Act to allow certain States (Florida, Georgia, Indiana, New York, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Washington, Wisconsin, and Hawaii), and the political subdivisions of such States, under certain conditions to divide their retirement systems into two divisions or parts, one consisting of the positions of members who desire old-age and survivors insurance coverage and the other consisting of the positions of members who do not, with each such division or part being treated as a separate retirement system. The provision added by this amendment would also allow employees of certain States (Florida, Georgia, Minnesota, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Washington, and Hawaii) who are covered by a retirement system, and who are compensated in whole or in part from Federal grants for unemployment compensation administration under title III of the Social Security Act, to have their positions (or all other positions in the department in which they are employed, or all positions in such department) treated as a separate retirement system for purposes of old-age and survivors insurance coverage. The House recedes with a clerical amendment and with an amendment deleting Indiana from the scope of the amendment.

Amendment No. 21: This amendment added to section 104 of the House bill a new subsection (e), which would permit certain States (Florida, Nevada, New Mexico, Minnesota, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Texas, Washington, and Hawaii) to modify their State agreements under section 218 of the Social Security Act at any time prior to July 1, 1957, without regard to certain requirements contained in section 218 (d) of that act so as to provide old-age and survivors insurance coverage under such agreements for school district employees who are not required to hold teachers' or administrators' certificates. The House recedes with a clerical amendment.

Amendment No. 22: This amendment added to section 104 of the House bill a new subsection (f), which would amend section 218 of the Social Security Act so as to permit certain States (Florida, North Carolina, Oregon, South Carolina, and South Dakota) to modify their State agreements to provide old-age and survivors insurance coverage under such agreements for employees in any policeman's or fireman's position covered by a retirement system, notwithstanding the provisions of such section 218 which preclude old-age and survivors insurance coverage of employees in any such position. If the retirement system covers positions of policemen or firemen (or both) and other positions as well, the policemen or firemen (or both) may be treated as having a separate retirement system for these purposes. The House recedes with clerical amendments.

Amendment No. 23: This amendment added to section 104 of the House bill a new subsection (g), which would amend section 211 (a) (7) (B) of the Social Security Act so as to permit inclusion, in the computation of net earnings from self-employment for purposes of old-age and survivors insurance, of certain remuneration received by any minister in a foreign country who is a United States citizen and whose congregation is composed predominantly of United States citizens. The House recedes with clerical amendments.

Amendments Nos. 24 and 25: Section 104 (e) of the House bill contained the effective dates applicable to the provisions of the House bill which extended coverage under the old-age and survivors insurance system. Senate amendment No. 24 deleted section 104 (e) of the House bill, and Senate amendment No. 25 inserted a new subsection containing the effective dates applicable to the coverage provisions in the bill as it passed the Senate.

The House recedes with an amendment. In view of the period of time which has elapsed since the passage of the bill in the House, the conference agreement retains the effective dates contained in the Senate amendment. In the case of coverage provided by section 104 (b) of the House bill which was restored by the conference action on amendment No. 15, the conference agreement provides that the amendment made by paragraph (1) of such section 104 (b) (relating to coverage of employees of Federal home loan banks) shall become effective only if the Federal Home Loan Bank Board submits to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the Secretary approves, before July 1, 1957, a plan for the coordination, on an equitable basis, of the benefits provided by the retirement system applicable to employees of Federal home loan banks with the benefits provided by title II of the Social Security Act, and such plan prescribes as the effective date thereof July 1, 1957, or the first day of a prior calendar quarter beginning not earlier than January 1, 1956. If the plan specifies July 1, 1957, as its effective date, the conference agreement provides that the amendment made by such paragraph (1) shall apply with respect to service performed on or after July 1, 1957. If the plan specifies as its effective date a day prior to July 1, 1957, the conference agreement provides that the amendment made by such paragraph (1) shall apply with respect to service performed on or after such day.

The conference agreement contains a similar requirement with respect to the amendment made by paragraph (2) of section 104 (b), relating to coverage of employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The plan with respect to such employees must be submitted by the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority. Otherwise, the conditions and provisions described above with respect to the amendment made by paragraph (1) of section 104 (b) also apply with respect to the amendment made by paragraph (2) of section 104 (b).

The conference agreement requires that, on or before July 31, 1957, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall submit a report to the Congress setting forth the details of any plan, described above, approved by him.

Amendment No. 26: This amendment added to the House bill a new section 105. Subsection (a) of the new section 105 would amend section 209 (h) (2) of the Social Security Act to provide that cash remuneration paid by any one employer in any calendar year (after 1956) to an employee for agricultural labor will constitute "wages" for old-age and survivors insurance purposes if such remuneration is $200 or more (regardless of the basis on which paid) or if such employee performs agricultural labor for that employer (for cash remuneration computed on a time basis) on 30 days or more during the year. Under present law, such remuneration only constitutes "wages" for old-age and survivors insurance purposes if it is $100 or more during the year.

Subsection (b) of the new section 105 would amend section 210 of the Social Security Act (with respect to service performed after 1956) so as to provide that where a crew leader furnishes individuals to perform agricultural labor for another person such individuals would be deemed to be employees of the crew leader for old-age and survivors insurance purposes, and the crew leader would be deemed not to be an employee of such other person. The term "crew leader" is defined as an individual who furnishes workers to perform agricultural labor for another person, if he pays their wages (either on his own behalf or on behalf of such person) and has not entered into a written agreement designating him an employee of such person.

Subsection (c) of the new section 105 would amend section 213 (a) (2) (B) (iv) of the Social Security Act so that an individual receiving $100 or more but less than $200 as wages for agricultural labor during a year will receive (as under existing law) one quarter of coverage.

The House recedes with amendments changing the $200 figure in the amended section 209 (h) (2) of the Social Security Act to $150 and changing the 30-day provision to 20 days.

Amendment No. 27: This amendment added to the House bill a new section 106, which would amend section 211 (a) of the Social Security Act (effective with respect to taxable years ending after 1956) so as to change the optional method for the computation of farm self-employment income.

Under existing law, a self-employed farmer who computes his income on a cash receipts and disbursements basis may deem 50 percent of his gross income from farming to be his net earnings from self-employment attributable to farming, if such gross income is $1,800 or less; and he may deem $900 to be his net earnings from self-employment attributable to farming if his gross income from farming is more than $1,800 and such net earnings as otherwise computed are less than $900.

Under the new section 106, the optional method of computing net earnings from farm self-employment would be extended to self-employed farmers who report income under an accrual method, and to members of farm partnerships. In addition, such optional method of computing net earnings would be changed so that a farmer whose gross income from farming is $1,200 or less may deem such gross income to be his net earnings from self-employment from farming, and a farmer whose gross income from farming is more than $1,200 may deem $1,200 to be his net earnings from farm self-employment if such net earnings as otherwise computed are less than $1,200. This optional method of computing net earnings from farm self-employment would be extended on the same basis to a member of a farm partnership with respect to his distributive share of the gross income of the partnership.

The House recedes with amendments. Under the conference agreement, if the gross income derived by a self-employed farmer from his farming operations is not more than $1,800, he may, at his option, deem his net earnings from self-employment derived from such farming operations to be 66⅔ percent of such gross income. If the gross income derived by a self-employed farmer from his farming operations is more than $1,800 and the net earnings from self-employment derived by him from such farming operations are less than $1,200, he may, at his option, deem his net earnings from self-employment from such farming operations to be $1,200. The conference agreement provides similar rules with respect to a partner's distributive share of the gross income of a partnership engaged in farming operations.

As under the Senate amendment, the conference agreement provides that, for purposes of applying this provision, the gross income derived by an individual from one or more farming operations and his distributive share of the gross income of one or more farm partnerships shall be aggregated and treated as having been derived from a single trade or business.

As under existing law, payments made to a partner which are guaranteed payments within the meaning of section 707 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 will be treated as income from a trade or business separate from the partnership.

The Senate amendment would have applied to taxable years ending after 1956. Under the conference agreement, this amendment will apply to taxable years ending on or after December 31, 1956 (including the calendar year 1956).

Amendment No. 29: This amendment added to the House bill a new section 108, which would amend section 214 (a) (3) of the Social Security Act so as to provide a special fully insured status for an individual with respect to whom all but 4 of the quarters elapsing after 1954 and prior to July 1957 (or, if later, the quarter in which he attains retirement age or dies) are quarters of coverage as defined in section 213 of such act, but with a requirement of a minimum of 6 such quarters of coverage. Section 214 (a) (3) presently provides such special insured status only where all of the quarters elapsing after 1954 and prior to July 1956 (or, if later, the quarter in which the individual attained retirement age or dies) are quarters of coverage, with the same 6-quarter minimum. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 30: This amendment added to the House bill a new section 109, which would amend section 215 (b) (4) of the Social Security Act so as to provide that up to 5 years of low earnings (or no earnings) may be dropped out in the computation of an insured individual's average monthly wage, regardless of the number of such individual's quarters of coverage; under present law only 4 such years may be dropped out unless the individual has 20 or more quarters of coverage. Subsection (b) of the new section 109 sets forth the conditions under which an individual may take advantage of the new 5-year dropout provision, limiting the application of such provision to those who become entitled in the future to old-age insurance benefits or (under specified circumstances) to recomputations of benefits on the basis of earnings after initial entitlement. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 31: This amendment added to the House bill a new section 110, providing that the primary insurance amount of an individual who dies or becomes entitled to old-age insurance benefits in 1957 shall be computed under section 215 (a) (1) (A) of the Social Security Act with a starting date of December 31, 1955, and a closing date of July 1, 1957, if this method of computation would result in a higher primary insurance amount and the individual had not less than 6 quarters of coverage after 1955 and prior to the quarter following his death or entitlement to old-age insurance benefits. In any such computation (using July 1, 1957, as the closing date), the total of the individual's wages and self-employment income after 1956 would be reduced to $2,100 if it exceeded that amount. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 32: This amendment added to the House bill a new provision (sec. 111), amending section 205 (b) of the Social Security Act so as to provide that an applicant for benefits, or any other individual who believes that his or her rights may be prejudiced by a decision of the Secretary, must file his request for a hearing (if he desires to file such a request as permitted under present law) within a period of 6 months from the date on which notice of the Secretary's decision is mailed to him or within such longer period as the Secretary may prescribe. Where notice of any such decision has been mailed to an individual prior to the date of the enactment of the bill, the period within which such individual may file his request would run for at least 6 months after such date. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 33: This amendment added to the House bill a new section 112, which would amend section 203 of the Social Security Act (effective with respect to taxable years ending after 1955) so as to provide that service performed outside the United States as a member of the Armed Forces shall be considered for purposes of the "work clause" as employment within the United States and not as noncovered remunerative activity outside the United States; the remuneration for such service would be included under the regular annual earnings test. Under the present provisions of section 203, a member of the Armed Forces serving overseas is regarded as engaged in "noncovered remunerative activity outside the United States" and as a result is subject under the work clause to the special 7-day test. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 34: This amendment added to the House bill a new section 113, which would amend section 202 (e) of the Social Security Act so as to provide that if a widow remarries and such remarriage is terminated by the second husband's death but she is not his widow for purposes of entitlement to old-age and survivors insurance benefits, such remarriage shall be deemed not to have occurred and she may again become entitled to widow's insurance benefits based on the wages and self-employment income of her first husband. The House recedes with an amendment changing the effective date from, generally, September 1956 to November 1956.

Amendment No. 35: This amendment added to the House bill a new section 114, which would amend section 202 of the Social Security Act to provide that where an individual failed to file proof of support by the insured worker as required for husband's, widower's, or parent's insurance benefits, or to file application for a lump-sum death payment in the case of a death occurring after 1946, within the period prescribed by law, and there was good cause for such failure to file in time (as determined by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare), such proof of support or such application shall be deemed to have been filed within the prescribed period of time if filed within 2 years after the expiration of such period or within 2 years after August 1956, whichever is later. The amendment would apply only to lump-sum death payments, and monthly benefits for months after August 1956, based on applications filed after August 1956. The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Amendment No. 41: The Senate amendment added a new section 117 to the bill, amending section 205 (c) (5) of the Social Security Act (relating to the time limitation for correction of earnings records) to provide that under specified circumstances an individual's earnings record could be corrected, even after the time limitation has run with respect to a given year, to include self-employment income for that year in any case where wages for that year were deleted from the records as having been erroneously reported. The amount of self-employment income to be included could not be in excess of the amount of wages deleted. The correction could be made only to the extent of the individual's self-employment income (or his net earnings from self-employment) not already included in his earnings record as self-employment income which is included in a tax return or statement filed before the expiration of the time limitation following the taxable year in which the deletion of wages is made. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 42: This amendment added to the House bill a new section 118, amending section 202 of the Social Security Act to add a new subsection (t) at the end thereof, providing that no benefits may be paid to certain aliens who are outside the United States.

Paragraph (1) of the new subsection (t) provided that the prohibition against payment shall apply to any individual who is not a citizen or national of the United States for any month after the third consecutive calendar month during all of which the Secretary finds, on the basis of information furnished to him by the Attorney General or which otherwise comes to his attention, that such individual is outside the United States and prior to the first month for all of which he has been in the United States. The prohibition would not apply to individuals who are citizens of a foreign country which the Secretary finds has in effect a social insurance or pension system which is of general application in such country and which pays periodic benefits, or their actuarial equivalent, on account of old age, retirement, or death, if United States citizens who are not citizens of such foreign country and who qualify for such benefits are permitted to receive such periodic benefits or their actuarial equivalent while they are outside of such foreign country for periods of 3 months or longer.

Paragraph (2) of the new subsection (t) provided that a person who is, or on application would be, entitled to a monthly benefit under section 202 for June 1956 would not, because of this provision, be deprived of such benefit or of any other benefit based on the wages and self-employment income of the individual on whose wages and self-employment income such monthly benefit for June 1956 is based.

Paragraph (3) provided that no lump-sum death payment may be made on the basis of the wages and self-employment income of an individual who died while outside the United States and whose benefits were not paid under paragraph (1) for the month preceding the month in which he died.

Paragraph (4) provided that the deductions under subsections (b) and (c) of section 203 of the Social Security Act on account of work or failure to have a child in the beneficiary's care would not be applied for any month with respect to the benefits of any individual if his benefits for such month are not payable by reason of paragraph (1).

Paragraph (5) provided that the Attorney General shall certify to the Secretary such information regarding aliens who depart from the United States to any foreign country (other than a country which is territorially contiguous to the United States) as may be necessary to enable the Secretary to carry out the purposes of this subsection, and shall otherwise aid, assist, and cooperate with the Secretary in obtaining such other information as may be necessary for this purpose.

The House recedes with an amendment which contains a substitute for the language proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment. Under section 118 (a) of the conference agreement, a new subsection (t) will be added to section 202 of the Social Security Act.

Paragraph (1) of the new subsection (t) provides that no monthly benefits will be paid under section 202 of the Social Security Act, and no disability benefits will be paid under the new section 223 of that act, to any individual who is not a citizen or national of the United States for any month which is (A) after the sixth consecutive calendar month during all of which the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare finds (on the basis of information furnished to him by the Attorney General or information which otherwise comes to his attention) that such individual is outside the United States (as defined in sec. 210 (i) of the Social Security Act), and (B) before the first month during all of which such individual has been in the United States (as so defined).

Paragraph (2) of the new subsection (t) provides that the suspension of benefits described in paragraph (1) will not apply to any individual who is a citizen of a foreign country which the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare finds has in effect a social insurance or pension system which is of general application in that foreign country and under which (A) periodic benefits (or the actuarial equivalent thereof) are paid on account of old age, retirement, or death, and (B) individuals who are citizens of the United States but not citizens of such foreign country and who qualify for such benefits are permitted to receive such benefits (or the actuarial equivalent thereof) while outside such foreign country without regard to the duration of such absence. The requirement set forth in subparagraph (B) of the preceding sentence would not be met by an insurance system in any foreign country under which, for example, Americans are precluded from receiving benefits by reason of their absence from that foreign country (regardless of how lengthy the period is before the benefits are cut off). Another example of a situation in which a foreign insurance system might fail to meet the requirements of such subparagraph (B) would be a case where such system has conditions to the receipt of payment which, though not phrased in terms of absence from the country, have the same effect as if such system expressly required presence in the foreign country concerned for the benefits to continue.

Paragraph (3) of the new subsection (c) provides that the suspension of benefits provided in the new paragraph (1) will not apply in any case where its application would be contrary to any treaty obligation of the United States in effect on the date on which this bill becomes law.

Paragraph (4) of the new subsection (t) makes the suspension of benefits inapplicable to benefits for any month (including derivative benefits) if the wage earner on whose record the benefits are based has, before such month, either (A) had 40 quarters or more of coverage, or (B) resided in the United States (as defined in sec. 210 (i) of the Social Security Act) for 1 or more periods aggregating 10 years or more.

In addition, paragraph (4) makes the suspension of benefits inapplicable to an alien who is outside the United States while in the active military or naval service of the United States.

Paragraph (5) of the new subsection (t) provides that no person who is, or upon application would be, entitled to a monthly benefit under section 202 of the Social Security Act for December 1956 shall be deprived, by reason of the provision in paragraph (1) suspending the benefits of aliens, of such benefit or any other benefit based on the wages and self-employment income of the individual on whose wages and self-employment income such monthly benefit for December 1956 was based.

Paragraph (6) of the new subsection (t) provides that if an individual is outside of the United States when he dies, and if no benefit may be paid to him for the month preceding the month in which he dies, no lump-sum death payment may be made on the basis of that individual's wages and self-employment income.

Paragraph (7) of the new subsection (t) provides that subsections (b) and (c) of section 203 of the Social Security Act (relating to deductions on account of work or failure to have a child in care) will not apply with respect to any individual for any month for which no monthly benefit may be paid by reason of paragraph (1) of the new subsection (t).

Paragraph (8) of the new subsection (t) provides that the Attorney General shall certify to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare such information regarding aliens who depart from the United States to any foreign country (other than Canada or Mexico) as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the new subsection (t). In addition, the Attorney General will be required to otherwise aid, assist, and cooperate with the Secretary in obtaining such other information as may be necessary to enable the Secretary to carry out the purposes of the new subsection (t).

Section 118 (b) of the conference agreement provides the effective date for the new subsection (t). It will apply to monthly benefits under title II of the Social Security Act for months after December 31, 1956, and to lump-sum death payments under section 202 (i) of that act in the case of deaths occuring after December 31, 1956.

Amendment No. 46: This amendment adds, to the portion of the House bill preserving the relationship between railroad retirement and old-age and survivors insurance, a new subsection (c) amending section 5 (k) (2) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 (relating to financial interchange). The Senate amendment provides the same type of financial interchange provisions between the Railroad Retirement Account and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund (established by amendment No. 12) as are presently provided with respect to such account and the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, with corresponding technical changes in other provisions of such section 5 (k) (2).

The House recedes with technical amendments.

Amendment No. 47: This amendment added to the House bill a new section 121, amending section 216 (e) of the Social Security Act (relating to the definition of "child") and section 202 (d) of that act (relating to benefits payable to children, as defined in section 216 (e)). Subsection (a) of the Senate amendment would add a new class of persons to the definition of child, so that in the case of a deceased individual, the definition would include a child with respect to whom such individual has stood in loco parentis for not less than 5 years immediately preceding the day on which such individual died. Subsection (b) of the Senate amendment would add a new paragraph (7) to section 202 (d) of the Social Security Act providing that a person who is a "child" by reason of the changed definition of that term in subsection (a) shall be deemed dependent upon the individual standing in loco parentis with respect to him if at the time of such individual's death, the child was living with and receiving at least three-fourths of his support from such individual. Subsection (c) of the Senate amendment provided that the amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall apply only with respect to monthly benefits for months beginning after the date of enactment.

The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 48: The Senate amendment added a new section 122 to the House bill. Subsection (a) of such section 122 would insert a new subsection "(u)" at the end of section 202 of the Social Security Act, consisting of two paragraphs. Under paragraph (1) of the new subsection (u), monthly benefits under section 202 of the Social Security Act would not be paid to any individual for any month after the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare has been notified by the Attorney General of the United States that such individual is or has been convicted of an offense under chapter 37, 105, or 115 of title 18 of the United States Code, or under section 4, 112, or 113 of the Internal Security Act of 1950. Paragraph (2) of the new subsection would provide for the Attorney General to furnish to the Secretary a complete list of the names of all individuals heretofore convicted of offenses specified in paragraph (1), and to notify the Secretary of the name of each individual hereafter so convicted. Such list and notification would be furnished as soon as practicable.

Subsection (b) of the Senate amendment would provide that the new subsection (u) should not be construed to restrict or otherwise affect any of the provisions of the act of September 1, 1954, which prohibits payment of annuities to officers and employees of the United States convicted of certain offenses.

The House recedes with an amendment substituting new language for the language proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment. Under section 121 (a) of the conference agreement, section 202 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (u).

Paragraph (1) of the new subsection (u) provides that if an individual is convicted of any of the offenses specified in that paragraph, and if the offense was committed after the date of the enactment of the bill, then the court may impose a penalty in addition to all other penalties provided by law. The additional penalty is that in determining whether any monthly insurance benefit is payable under section 202 of the Social Security Act or under section 223 (relating to disability) of that act to the individual so convicted for the month in which he is so convicted or for any month thereafter, there is not to be taken into account (A) any wages paid to such individual or to any other individual in the calendar quarter in which such conviction occurs or in any prior calendar quarter, and (B) any net earnings from self-employment derived by such individual or by any other individual during a taxable year in which such conviction occurs or during any prior taxable year. The offenses specified for which the additional penalty may be imposed are offenses under chapter 37 (espionage and censorship), chapter 105 (sabotage), and chapter 115 (treason, sedition, and subversive activities) of title 18 of the United States Code, and offenses under sections 4, 112, and 113 of the Internal Security Act of 1950, as amended.

The imposition of the additional penalty is left to the discretion of the court. However, in those cases where the court imposes this penalty, the convicted individual will lose, for the month of conviction and all months thereafter, monthly benefits (including disability benefits) to the extent that such benefits are based on the employment or self-employment record of any person for the period in which the conviction occurs or for any prior period.

For example, if an individual is convicted in December 1957 of an offense committed in January 1957, and if the court imposes the additional penalty provided by the new paragraph (1), then for purposes of determining any monthly benefit which would otherwise be payable to such individual for December 1957 or for any month thereafter, such individual's insured status and his average monthly wage shall be determined by omitting all wages paid to him for the last quarter of 1957 and for all prior quarters of 1957 and prior years and by omitting all net earnings from self-employment derived by such individual during 1957 (assuming that he is a calendar-year taxpayer) and during all prior taxable years.

If the convicted individual referred to in the preceding sentence is entitled to a monthly benefit based on the earnings record of a second individual, or if at some time in the future he makes application for such a monthly benefit, there must be omitted all wages paid to such second individual for the quarters specified in the preceding paragraph and all net earnings from self-employment income by such second individual during the taxable years specified in the preceding paragraph (with the exception that in this case the taxable year in which the conviction occurs will be determined by reference to the taxable years of such second individual, rather than by reference to the taxable year of the individual convicted).

It is to be emphasized that the additional penalty applies only to the individual convicted of the offense, and does not prejudice any of the rights of other individuals. Thus, if the penalty is imposed with respect to an individual, the entitlement of his wife, children, or parents to monthly benefits on the basis of his earnings record is to be determined as if no such penalty had been imposed. He is to be permitted to make application for benefits (if he is not already entitled to benefits) in the manner provided by law, if such application is necessary for others to become entitled to benefits on the basis of his earnings record. Similarly, section 203 (a) of the Social Security Act (relating to maximum benefits) is to operate as if the penalty had not been imposed. That is to say, in computing the maximum benefits which other individuals may receive on the basis of any earnings record, he will be deemed to be "entitled" to the benefits to which he would be entitled but for his conviction, even though the court-imposed penalty prevents the payment of any such benefit to him or reduces the amount thereof.

Paragraph (2) of the new subsection (u) provides that the Attorney General is to notify the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare as soon as practicable after the additional penalty has been imposed with respect to any individual. However, the period with respect to which the penalty is to be applied is dependent not on the date of such notification but on the time when the conviction occurs.

Paragraph (3) of the new subsection (u) provides that if the President of the United States grants a pardon of any offense with respect to which the additional penalty has been imposed, the penalty will not apply to months beginning after the month in which the pardon is granted. In the case of such a pardon granted to any individual, the determination of whether any monthly benefit is payable on the basis of his earnings record or the record of any other individual, and the determination of the amount of any benefit so payable, will be made as if he had not been convicted. However, the pardon will not affect monthly benefits for any month which begins on or before the date on which the pardon is granted.

Subsection (b) of section 121 of the conference agreement provides that the amendment made by subsection (a) of that section (which adds the new subsection (u)) is not to be construed to restrict or otherwise affect any of the provisions of the act of September 1, 1954 (Public Law 769, 83d Cong.), which prohibits payment of annuities to officers and employees of the United States convicted of certain offenses.

Subsection (c) of section 121 of the conference agreement amends section 210 (a) of the Social Security Act to exclude from the term "employment" service performed in the employ of certain Communist organizations. If any organization is registered at any time during any calendar quarter which begins after June 30, 1956, under the Internal Security Act of 1950, as amended, as a Communist-action organization, a Communist-front organization, or a Communist-infiltrated organization, then service performed in such quarter in the employ of such organization does not come within the definition of the term "employment." The same rule is provided in the case of any organization which fails to register but with respect to which there is in effect, at any time during the calendar quarter in question, a final order of the Subversive Activities Control Board requiring such organization to register as a Communist-action organization, a Communist-front organization, or a Communist-infiltrated organization. Whether or not there is in effect on any day a final order requiring registration is to be determined in the manner provided in title I of the Internal Security Act of 1950, as amended.

Subsection (d) of section 121 amends section 3121 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to exclude from the term "employment," for purposes of the taxes imposed by chapter 21 of such code, service which is not treated as employment for purposes of title II of the Social Security Act by reason of the amendment made by subsection (c) of section 121.

Amendment No. 51: Section 201 (b) of the House bill amended section 3121 (a) (9) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (which excludes from "wages" certain payments made to employees after they attain retirement age) to reflect changes made elsewhere in the bill with respect to the definition of retirement age. Section 201 (c) of the House bill made the necessary changes in section 3121 (b) (1) of the code (relating to the exclusion of service performed by gum-resin workers from "employment" for purposes of the Federal Insurance Contributions Act) to correspond with the changes made by the House bill in section 210 (a) (1) of the Social Security Act (relating to the exclusion of such service from "employment" for benefit purposes). The Senate amendment deleted both section 201 (b) and section 201 (c) of the House bill. In view of the action taken by the conferees with respect to amendment No. 10 (relating to definition of retirement age) and amendment No. 13 (relating to coverage of service performed by gum-resin workers), the House recedes with an amendment which restores section 201 (b) of the House bill.

Amendment No. 52: This amendment added to the House bill a new section 201 (b), which would amend section 3121 (b) (1) (B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the exclusion of service performed by certain foreign agricultural workers from "employment" for purposes of the Federal Insurance Contributions Act) to correspond with the changes made by amendment No. 14 in section 210 (a) (1) (B) of the Social Security Act (relating to the exclusion of such service from "employment" for benefit purposes). In view of the action taken by the conferees with respect to amendment No. 14, the House recedes with a clerical amendment.

Amendment No. 53: Section 201 (d) of the House bill made the necessary changes in section 3121 (b) (6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the exclusion of certain service from "employment" for purposes of the Federal Insurance Contributions Act) to correspond with the changes made by the House bill in section 210 (a) (6) of the Social Security Act which extend coverage to service in the employ of the Tennessee Valley Authority and to service in the employ of a Federal home loan bank. The Senate amendment deleted this provision of the House bill. In view of the action taken by the conferees with respect to amendment No. 15, the House recedes with an amendment which restores with clerical changes the provisions of the House bill.

Amendment No. 55: Section 201 (e) (2) of the House bill made the necessary changes in section 1402 (a) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the treatment of income derived from share-farming arrangements for purposes of the tax on self-employment income) to correspond with the changes made by the House bill in section 211 (a) (1) of the Social Security Act (relating to the treatment of such income for benefit purposes). The Senate amendment added to this provision of the House bill the same language as that which was added by amendment No. 17 to the provision of the House bill dealing with the treatment of such income for benefit purposes. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 57: Section 201 (f) of the House bill made the necessary changes in section 1402 (c) (5) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the treatment of certain professional self-employed individuals for purposes of the tax on self-employment income) to correspond with the changes made by the House bill in section 211 (c) (5) of the Social Security Act (relating to the treatment of such individuals for benefit purposes). The Senate amendment made the same change in this provision of the House bill as that which was made by amendment No. 19 in the provision of the House bill dealing with the treatment of such individuals for benefit purposes. The House recedes with an amendment conforming to the conference action on amendment No. 19.

Amendment No. 58: This amendment added to section 201 of the House bill a new subsection (e), which would make the necessary changes in section 1402 (a) (8) (B) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the computation of net earnings from self-employment, in the case of a minister serving in a foreign country, for purposes of the tax on self-employment income) to correspond with the changes made by amendment No. 23 in section 211 (a) (7) (B) of the Social Security Act (relating to the computation of such net earnings for benefit purposes). In view of the action taken by the conferees with respect to amendment No. 23, the House recedes with clerical amendments.

Amendment No. 59: This amendment added to section 201 of the House bill a new subsection (f), which would make the necessary changes in section 3121 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to correspond with the changes made by amendment No. 26 in section 209 (h) (2) of the Social Security Act (relating to the treatment of remuneration for agricultural labor as "wages" for old-age and survivors insurance benefit purposes) and in section 210 of that act (relating to the treatment of service performed by and for crew leaders for old-age and survivors insurance benefit purposes).

Paragraph (3) of the new subsection (f) would amend section 3102 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (which permits an employer paying cash remuneration for agricultural labor to deduct the Federal Insurance Contributions Act employee tax from such remuneration even though at the time of payment it is not clear whether or not such remuneration constitutes "wages") to reflect the change in section 209 (h) (2) of the Social Security Act made by amendment No. 26 and the change in section 3121 (a) (8) (B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 made by this amendment (No. 59).

The House recedes with amendments conforming to the conference action on amendment No. 26.

Amendment No. 60: This amendment added to section 201 of the House bill a new subsection (g), which would make the necessary changes in the last two sentences of section 1402 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the optional method of computing net earnings from farm self-employment for purposes of the tax on self-employment income) to correspond with the changes made by amendment No. 27 in section 211 (a) of the Social Security Act (relating to the optional method of computing such net earnings for old-age and survivors insurance benefit purposes).

The House recedes with amendments which conform to the conference action with respect to amendment No. 27.

Amendment No. 61: This amendment added to section 201 of the House bill a new subsection (h), which would amend section 3121 (l) (8) (A) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 so as to include as a foreign subsidiary of a domestic corporation, for purposes of the provisions of law permitting the extension of old-age and survivors insurance coverage to employees of such subsidiaries, any foreign corporation of whose voting stock not less than 20 percent is owned by a domestic corporation. Under present law, more than 50 percent of the stock of the foreign subsidiary must be owned by the domestic corporation in order for the employees of the foreign subsidiary to be eligible for such coverage. The House recedes with a clerical amendment.

Amendment No. 63: Section 201 (g) of the House bill amended section 3121 (k) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to extend until the end of 1957 the period during which employees of an organization which has filed a certificate waiving its tax exemption under the Federal Insurance Contributions Act may add their names to the list of employees concurring in the filing of such certificate. Under present law, no names may be added to any such list after the expiration of 24 months following the first quarter during which the certificate was in effect. The Senate amendment extended the period provided by the House bill for an additional year, i. e., until the end of 1958. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 65 and 66: Section 201 (i) of the House bill contained the effective dates applicable to the provisions of the House bill which made the necessary changes in chapter 2 (tax on self-employment income) and chapter 21 (Federal Insurance Contributions Act) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to reflect the changes in coverage under the old-age and survivors' insurance system which were made in the House bill. Senate amendment No. 66 deleted this subsection of the House bill, and Senate amendment No. 65 inserted a new subsection containing the effective dates applicable to such provisions in the bill as it passed the Senate. The new subsection also included special provisions to permit a minister, whose income as a minister, for any taxable year ending after 1954 and prior to 1957, would have constituted net earnings from self-employment, if the bill as amended by Senate amendment No. 58 had been then in effect, to elect to have the provisions of such amendment apply with respect to taxable years ending after 1954 and prior to 1957.

The House recedes with amendments. In view of the period of time which has elapsed since the passage of the bill in the House, the conference agreement, except as noted below, retains the effective dates contained in the Senate amendment. The amendment made by subsection (b) of section 201 of the House bill, which was restored by the conference action on amendment No. 51, shall apply with respect to remuneration paid after October 1956. The amendments made by subsection (d) of the House bill, which were restored by the conference action on amendment No. 53, shall apply with respect to service with respect to which the amendments made by subsection (b) of section 104 of the bill apply. (For an explanation of the effective date of these amendments, see amendment No. 25.) The amendment to subsection (a) of section 1402 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (made by sec. 201 (i) of the bill as agreed to in conference) shall apply with respect to taxable years ending on or after December 31, 1956, rather than to taxable years ending after December 31, 1956, as provided in the Senate amendment.

The conference agreement also makes necessary technical and conforming changes in the Senate amendment.

Amendments Nos. 67 and 68: Section 202 of the House bill amended section 1401 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to increase each of the rates of tax upon self-employment income prescribed by existing law by three-fourths of 1 percent, and amended sections 3101 and 3111 of the Federal Insurance Contributions Act to increase each of the rates of the employee tax and the employer tax prescribed by existing law by one-half of 1 percent. The increase in the tax on self-employment income would apply with respect to taxable years beginning after 1955, and the increase in the employee and employer taxes would apply with respect to remuneration paid after 1955.

Senate amendment No. 67 deleted section 202 of the House bill. Senate amendment No. 68 added to the House bill a new section 202, which amended the same sections of law as were amended by the House bill. Under the Senate amendment, the rates of tax prescribed in section 1401 upon self-employment income would each be increased by three-eighths of 1 percent; and the rates of the employee tax and the employer tax prescribed in sections 3101 and 3111, respectively, would each be increased by one-fourth of 1 percent. The increase in the tax on self-employment income would apply with respect to taxable years beginning after 1956, and the increase in the employee and employer taxes would apply with respect to remuneration paid after 1956.

The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 69 and 70: These amendments added to the House bill a heading for a new title III and a declaration of the purpose of such new title, which would amend the public assistance provisions of the Social Security Act and would consist of the matter contained in amendments Nos. 71 through 98. In view of the action taken by the conferees with respect to the latter amendments, the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, and 76: These amendments, which comprise part I (relating to matching of assistance expenditures for medical care) of the new title III of the bill, would amend sections 3 (a), 403 (a), 1003 (a), and 1403 (a) of the Social Security Act so as to provide separate dollar-for-dollar matching of State expenditures for old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, aid to the blind, and aid to the permanently and totally disabled where such assistance is furnished in the form of medical or other remedial care, up to a maximum of (1) $8 (or, in the case of aid to dependent children, $4 for each child recipient and $8 for each adult recipient) multiplied by the number of individuals receiving assistance in any form under the State plan, plus (2) certain additional amounts. State expenditures for assistance in the form of cash payments would continue under the present formula (as amended by amendments Nos. 89, 90, and 91). The amendments relating to medical care would be effective July 1, 1957 (and would continue in effect even after the expiration of such amendments Nos. 89, 90, and 91). With respect to amendments Nos. 71 and 76, the House recedes; and with respect to amendments Nos. 72, 73, 74, and 75, the House recedes with amendments limiting the dollar-for-dollar matching for medical care expenditures to a maximum of $6 (or, in the case of aid to dependent children, $3 per child and $6 per adult) multiplied by the number of individuals receiving assistance under the State plan.

Amendments Nos. 77, 78, 79, 80, and 81: These amendments, which comprise part II (relating to services in programs of public assistance) of the new title III of the bill, would amend titles IV, X, and XIV of the Social Security Act so as to make it clear that the public assistance programs under those titles include not only the provision of financial assistance but also the furnishing of services designed to help needy individuals to attain self-support or self-care (or, in the case of aid to dependent children, designed to maintain and strengthen family life and to help the relatives caring for dependent children to attain self-support and personal independence). These amendments also require (effective July 1, 1957) that each State plan include a description of the services (if any) to be furnished by the State for this purpose, and make it clear that Federal payments to a State with respect to the costs of administering the State plan may include payments with respect to such services. With respect to amendment No. 77, the House recedes with an amendment making changes in title I of the Social Security Act (relating to old-age assistance) which have substantially the same purpose with respect to self-care as the changes made in titles IV, X, and XIV of that act by the Senate amendments; and with respect to amendments Nos. 78, 79, 80, and 81, the House recedes with clerical and conforming amendments.

Amendments Nos. 82, 83, and 84: These amendments, which comprise part III (extension of aid to dependent children) of the new title III of the bill and become effective July 1, 1957, would amend section 406 (a) of the Social Security Act so as to add first cousins, nephews, and nieces to the list of the relatives with one of whom a needy child must be living in order to be eligible for aid to dependent children under title IV of that act. These amendments also eliminate the requirement that a needy child between 16 and 18 years of age must be regularly attending school in order to be eligible for aid to dependent children. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 85, 86, 87, and 88: These amendments comprise part IV (relating to research and training) of the new title III of the bill. Amendment No. 86 would authorize the Federal Government (through grants, contracts, and jointly financed cooperative arrangements) to participate in the cost of research and demonstration projects relating to the improvement of the public assistance and related programs; the authorized appropriation for this purpose would be $5,000,000 for the fiscal year 1957 and such amount as the Congress may determine thereafter. Amendment No. 87 would authorize the Federal Government to make grants to States (as defined in sec. 1101 of the Social Security Act) to enable them (either directly or through nonprofit institutions of higher learning) to provide various types of training for personnel employed or preparing for employment in the public assistance programs; the authorized appropriation for this purpose would be $5,000,000 for the fiscal year 1958 and such amount as the Congress may determine thereafter, and the Federal share of the cost of such training would be 100 percent during the fiscal years 1958 through 1967 and 80 percent thereafter. With respect to amendments Nos. 85, 86, and 88, the House recedes; and with respect to amendment No. 87, the House recedes with an amendment under which the program of training grants for public welfare personnel would terminate at the end of the fiscal year 1962 and the Federal share of the cost would be limited to 80 percent during each of the 5 years of the program.

Amendments Nos. 89, 90, 91, 92, and 93: These amendments, which comprise part V of the new title III of the bill, would amend the matching formulas applicable to title I, IV, X, and XIV of the Social Security Act (relating to old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, aid to the blind, and aid to the permanently and totally disabled, respectively). Amendments Nos. 89, 90, and 91 apply to old-age assistance, aid to the blind, and aid to the permanently and totally disabled, and for purposes of assistance under those programs would (1) increase the ceiling on the Federal payment with respect to any individual from $55 to $65 and (2) provide that five-sixths of the first $30 per recipient can be counted instead of only four-fifths of the first $25; however, these increases would not be available to any State unless it maintains its average expenditure per recipient from State funds. Amendment No. 92 would extend until June 30, 1959, the temporary matching formula for aid to dependent children which was provided in section 8 (b) of the Social Security Act Amendments of 1952 and which is currently in effect. Under amendment No. 93, all of these amendments would become effective October 1, 1956.

With respect to amendments Nos. 89, 90, and 91, the House recedes with amendments (1) providing that the Federal ceiling for purposes of titles I, X, and XIV of the Social Security Act shall be $60 and that four-fifths of the first $30 per recipient can be counted, (2) eliminating the requirement that a State maintain its average expenditure per recipient from State funds in order to receive the Federal increase, and (3) changing the matching formula contained in title IV of the Social Security Act (relating to aid to dependent children) so as to provide that the Federal ceiling for purposes of such title shall be $32 with respect to the first dependent child in any home, $23 with respect to each additional child, and $32 with respect to each relative with whom the child is living (instead of $30, $21, and $30, respectively, as in present law), and that fourteen-seventeenths of the first $17 per recipient can be counted (instead of four-fifths of the first $15, as in present law).

With respect to amendment No. 92, the Senate recedes in view of the action taken on amendment No. 89 in regard to aid to dependent children.

With respect to amendment No. 93, the House recedes with an amendment providing that the changes made by amendments Nos. 89, 90, and 91 shall cease to be effective after June 30, 1959.

Amendments Nos. 94, 95, 96, 97, and 98: These amendments comprise part VI of the new title III of the bill. Amendment No. 95 would amend sections 403 and 1108 of the Social Security Act (effective for the fiscal year 1957 and subsequent fiscal years) so as to permit Federal matching (under the program of aid to dependent children) of expenditures in the Virgin Islands for relatives with whom dependent children are living, and so as to increase from $160,000 to $300,000 the maximum Federal payment to the Virgin Islands under all the public assistance programs in any fiscal year. Amendment No. 98 would make the same changes in the case of Puerto Rico (except that the increase in the maximum Federal payment would be from $4,250,000 to $5,312,500). Amendments Nos. 96 and 97 would make certain changes in the public assistance provisions of the Social Security Act with respect to the determination of need.

With respect to amendment No. 94, the House recedes. With respect to amendment

No. 95, the House recedes with an amendment combining its provisions with those of amendment No. 98 (relating to Puerto Rico), limiting the maximum Federal payment in the case of the Virgin Islands to $200,000, and making certain technical changes. With respect to amendments Nos. 96 and 97, and with respect to amendment No. 98 in view of the action taken by the conferees on amendment No. 95, the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 99: This amendment added to the House bill (as a part of a new title IV) a new section 401, which would amend section 403 of the Social Security Amendments of 1954.

Subsection (a) of such section 403 presently provides that service performed by an individual after 1950 and before 1955 as an employee of an organization (1) described in section 501 (c) (3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 which is exempt from tax under section 501 (a) of such code and, (2) which failed to file a waiver certificate, may, notwithstanding such failure to file, be deemed to constitute "employment" for old-age and survivors insurance purposes if the Federal Insurance Contributions Act taxes were paid (and not refunded) on the good-faith assumption that the certificate had been filed, and if the individual so requests. The Senate amendment extended for 2 years the period during which such service can be counted under subsection (a), so that the subsection would apply to service performed after 1950 and before 1957 (but only where the individual was employed by that organization before the enactment of the bill).

Subsection (b) of such section 403 presently provides that service performed for such an exempt organization after 1950 and before 1955, where the organization filed the waiver certificate but the employee failed to sign the list of concurring employees, may be deemed to constitute "employment" for old-age and survivors insurance purposes to the extent that the Federal Insurance Contributions Act taxes were paid (and not refunded) with respect to such service, if the employee so requests before 1957. The Senate amendment extended for 2 years the period during which such service can be counted under subsection (a), so that the subsection would apply to service performed after 1950 and before 1957 (but only where the employee was employed by that organization before the enactment of the bill), and also extends for 2 years (until January 1, 1959), the period during which the employee can file his request.

The House recedes.

Amendment No. 100: This amendment added to the House bill a new section 402, which would amend section 521 (a) of the Social Security Act (effective with respect to fiscal years beginning after June 30, 1956) so as to increase the annual authorization for child-welfare services from $10,000,000 to $12,000,000. The House recedes with an amendment providing that such increase shall be effective only with respect to fiscal years beginning after June 30, 1957.

Amendment No. 101: This amendment added to the House bill a new title V, which would establish a United States Commission on the Aging and Aged.

The Senate recedes.

Amendment of title: The Senate amendment conformed the title of the bill to the bill as amended by the Senate. Under the conference agreement the title of the bill is conformed to the bill as agreed to in conference.

JERE COOPER,

NOBLE J. GREGORY,
DANIEL A. REED,
THOMAS A. JENKINS,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 7225) to amend title II of the Social Security Act to provide disability insurance benefits for certain disabled individuals who have attained age 50, to reduce to age 62 the age on the basis of which benefits are payable to certain women, to provide for continuation of child's insurance benefits for children who are disabled before attaining age 18, to extend coverage, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point on the conference report just adopted and I also ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House desiring to do so may extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, we have reached another milestone in improving our social-security program. The conference committee report makes a number of important liberalizations in the system.

First, disability insurance protection is provided under the social-security system to over 35 million persons.

Second, social-security benefits are provided to women beginning at age 62.

Third, coverage under the social-security system is increased by over 250,000.

Fourth, the Federal share of public assistance to 5 million needy aged, disabled, blind, and dependent children is increased.

Fifth, Federal funds are provided for helping to meet the medical-care needs of the 5 million persons on public assistance.

Sixth, the program for aid to dependent children is broadened and strengthened.

Seventh, additional Federal encouragement is provided for helping the 5 milion public-assistance recipients attain self-support and self-care, and to maintain and preserve family life.

Eighth. Federal support is provided for research in social security.

Ninth, Federal funds authorized for child-welfare services are increased $2 million a year.

Tenth, Federal public-assistance funds for the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico are increased.

Mr. Speaker, these 10 provisions greatly strengthen and improve our social-security program.

I will now describe the provisions in more detail:

I. COVERAGE

(a) Self-employed professional groups: The House-passed bill provided coverage for all presently excluded self-employed professional groups except physicians. The Senate bill in addition excluded osteopaths. The conference agreement follows the House version of the bill.

(b) Farm operators and share farmers: The House bill made no change in the reporting of income requirements for farm operators. The Senate bill permitted the optional method of reporting to farmers on the accrual basis of accounting.

The Senate bill also provided that where annual gross farm income is between $400 and $1,200 the farmer could report either his gross income or his actual net earnings. Where a farmer's gross income is over $1,200 and where his net earnings are less than $1,200, the Senate bill provided that the farmer could report either his actual net earnings or $1,200. Where both a farmer's gross and net income is over $1,200, the Senate bill would have required his reporting his actual net earnings.

Under the conference agreement, a farmer will report two-thirds of his gross income where it is $1,800 or less as his net income. Where his gross income is over $1,800, he may report either his actual net income, or if his net income is less than $1,200 he may report $1,200 as his net income. The conference agreement would also permit members of farm partnerships to use the optional method of reporting.

The conference agreement substantially follows the House-passed bill by providing that rentals will be credited as self-employment income where the owner or tenant of the land participates materially with the individual working the land in the production or the management of the production of an agricultural or horticultural commodity.

Share farmers would be covered as self-employed persons, confirming the current interpretation of the law.

(c) Ministers: The conferees accepted the new Senate provision which would cover ministers outside the United States where they serve a congregation predominantly made up of United States citizens even though their employer may not be a United States employer.

(d) Agricultural workers: The House-passed bill made no change in the coverage requirement for agricultural workers. The Senate bill would have covered such workers where they, first, are paid $200 or more in cash wages in a calendar year by one employer; or, second, perform agricultural labor for an employer on 30 days or more during a calendar year for cash wages computed on a time basis.

Where farmworkers are recruited and paid by a crew leader, the crew leader would have been deemed to be the employer if he is not, by written agreement, designated to be an employee of the owner or tenant and if such crew leader is customarily engaged in recruiting and supplying individuals to perform agricultural labor. Under such circumstances the crew leader would have been deemed to be self-employed.

Under the conference agreement farmworkers who, first, are paid $150 or more in a calendar year by one employer; or, second, perform agricultural labor for an employer on 20 or more days during the calendar year for cash wages computed on a time basis would be covered.

The conferees accepted the Senate provisions relating to crew leaders.

The conferees accepted the Senate provision which would exclude from coverage agricultural workers from any foreign country who are admitted to the United States on a temporary basis.

The conference agreement also provides for an exclusion from coverage of persons producing or harvesting gum resin products as provided in the Senate bill.

(e) State and local employees: The conference agreement accepted the new provisions added by the Senate relating to the States named in the Senate bill except Indiana was deleted from the named States. It is my understanding that this deletion was at the request of the State of Indiana.

(f) Employees of nonprofit organizations: The conferees accepted the Senate version relating to nonprofit organization employees.

(g) Federal employees: The Senate deleted the House provisions granting coverage to Tennessee Valley Authority and Federal Home Loan Bank employees. The conference agreement would grant coverage to these employees.

(h) United States citizens employed by foreign subsidiaries of American corporations: The conferees accepted the Senate provision which would extend coverage to United States citizens employed by a foreign subsidiary of a domestic corporation where the corporation owns not less than 20 percent of the voting stock of the foreign subsidiary. At the present time there is a 50 percent ownership requirement.

(i) Adjustment of benefit provisions for newly covered persons: The conferees accepted the Senate provisions relating to insured status, the drop-out of years of low or no earnings, and starting and closing dates.

II. BENEFITS FOR PERMANENTLY AND TOTALLY DISABLED PERSONS

The conferees for the most part accepted the Senate version of the provisions granting benefits to the permanently and totally disabled.

The conference agreement deletes the provision of the Senate bill whereby individuals who refuse to undergo surgical or medical service in connection with rehabilitation would have been deemed to have done so with good cause.

III. RETIREMENT AGE FOR WOMEN

The House-passed bill would have reduced the retirement age for women from age 65 to age 62. The Senate bill would have provided full benefits at age 62 for widows and surviving dependent mothers only. Other women beneficiaries would be provided reduced annuities if they retire before age 65.

The conference agreement follows the Senate bill.

IV. SUSPENSION OF BENEFITS FOR CERTAIN ALIENS WHO LEAVE THE UNITED STATES

The conferees accepted the Senate provision suspending benefits to aliens who leave the United States with amendments making the suspension inapplicable if such a person has been a resident of the United States for 10 years or has paid contributions for 10 years or where there is a reciprocal treaty relating to benefits. The Senate provision was also amended to provide such a person would have to be outside the United States for 6 months before his payments would be suspended.

V. FORFEITURE OF BENEFITS UPON CONVICTION OF CERTAIN CRIMES

The Senate bill would have terminated an individual's benefits if he has been or is convicted of treason and certain other crimes under the Internal Security Act.

The conference agreement amends this provision to provide that benefits may be terminated only by a court.

VI. EXCLUSION FROM COVERAGE OF PERSONS LISTED BY THE SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES CONTROL BOARD

The conference agreement would exclude persons listed by the Board from coverage.

VII. FINANCING

The House-passed bill would have increased social security taxes by one-half of 1 percent on each the employer and employee, effective January 1, 1956. The self-employment tax would have been increased by three-fourths of 1 percent.

The conference agreement follows the Senate version whereby taxes would be increased one-fourth of 1 percent on each the employer and employee, effective January 1, 1957. The increase for the self-employed would be three-eighths of 1 percent. Similar increases would be made in each of the scheduled increases in taxes now contained in the law.

The conferees accepted the Senate provision establishing a separate trust fund for these increases which would be used only for the payment of disability insurance benefits.

The conferees also accepted the Senate provision providing for an increase in interest received by the Trust Fund.

VIII. PUBLIC ASSISTANCE AMENDMENTS

The House-passed bill did not contain any amendments to the public-assistance titles of the Social Security Act. The Senate bill would have increased the maximum amount matchable under the old-age assistance aid to the blind and the permanently and totally disabled to five-sixths of the first $30 plus one-half of the remaining amount up to a maximum of $65 if the States complied with a "pass-along" provision.

Under the conference agreement, matching would be on the basis of four-fifths of the first $30 plus one-half of the next $30 up to a maximum of $60.

The maximum amount matchable in the aid to dependent children program would be increased by $2.

The Senate bill provided for a new medical care program with 50–50 matching up to a maximum of $8 for adults and $4 for children recipients. The conference agreement reduces this amount to $6 and $3, respectively.

The Senate bill would have provided that in determining need a State could disregard up to $50 in earned income. The conferees deleted this provision. The conferees also deleted the Senate provision to the effect that there should be no discrimination based on sex in determining need.

The conferees accepted the Senate provision authorizing grants to States, public and nonprofit organizations for research and demonstration projects.

The conferees also accepted the Senate provision relating to training grants with an amendment providing that the Federal share would be 80 percent for 5 years.

The conference agreement contains the Senate provision deleting the requirement that a needy child must attend school between the ages of 16 and 18, as well as the Senate provision including first cousins, nephews, and nieces within the persons eligible for payments under the ADC program. Parents and other relatives in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands would be made eligible for payments under the ADC program.

The Senate bill raised the ceiling on Federal matching for public assistance for the Virgin Islands from $160,000 to $300,000. The conference agreement raises this amount to $200,000.

The conferees accepted the Senate provision raising the ceiling for Puerto Rico from $4,250,000 to $5,312,500.

The conferees accepted the Senate provision increasing the authorization for child welfare programs from $10 million to $12 million a year with a change making the increase effective for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958. The conferees agreed to delete the Senate provision which would have established a Commission on Aging.

Mr. Speaker, I inserted a press release announcing the conference agreement on H. R. 7225 in the RECORD on Saturday, July 21. This release will be found at page 13889, and it contains a more detailed description of the conference agreement.

Mr. Speaker, we have reached another milestone in our social legislation. A major achievement has been made in providing insurance benefit payments for disabled workers. The lack of disability insurance payments has been a long-recognized shortcoming in our social security insurance program. We have also made another major contribution to the social security program by reducing the age at which women beneficiaries may become eligible for benefits. We have now reached practically universal coverage under the system.

It has been my good fortune to have voted for the original Social Security Act and the many improvements which has been made since that time. I have long fought to add disability insurance benefit payments to the program. I am very happy that these benefits are now being added to round out the protection for our American workers.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 7225, the Social Security Act

Amendments of 1956, provides several major changes in the present law. As the ranking Republican Member of the Conference Committee on the part of the House, I would like to summarize these changes.

First, the bill provides for the payment of cash disability benefits at age 50 to covered individuals who are permanently and totally disabled.

Second, it provides for the payment of women's benefits at age 62 instead of the present 65. Widows and surviving dependent mothers would be given full benefits at age 62. Working women and wives would be given reduced benefits if they begin to draw them between age 62 and 65.

Third, additional self-employed persons are brought into the social security system. Among these, lawyers and dentists represent major new coverage groups. In my opinion, it is unfortunate that we have delayed so long in extending coverage to these groups. The bill which I sponsored in 1954 would have covered both lawyers and dentists at that time. Physicians will continue to be excluded under H. R. 7225.

Fourth, social-security taxes will be increased effective January 1, 1957, by ¼ of 1 percent for each the employee and employer, making the rate at that time 2¼ percent each. The self-employment tax will be increased from 2 to 3⅜ percent at the same time.

Fifth, the bill increases present public assistance payments. The matching formula for old-age assistance, aid to the blind, aid to the permanently and totally disabled, and aid to dependent children at the present time for the first 3 of these programs is four-fifths of the first $25 of a State's average monthly payment, up to a maximum of $55. The maximum amount matchable for these 3 programs would be increased from $55 to $60 and the formula would be changed so as to provide matching of four-fifths of the first $30 and one-half of the next $30 up to a maximum of $60. The aid to dependent children formula is presently four-fifths of the first $15 of a State's average monthly payment plus one-half of the next $15 up to a maximum of $30 for an eligible adult and for the first child. Each additional child is subject to a maximum of $21. The amount matchable would be increased by $2.

The increase in cost over present law for the first year amounts to $98 million for aid to the blind, aid to the permanently and totally disabled, and old-age assistance and $48 million for the first year for aid to dependent children. The conferees deleted the pass-along provision from the Senate bill.

I have always been vitally interested in the special problems of the blind and have taken a leading role in developing legislation on their behalf. For this reason, I am glad to call attention to the increased Federal matching for the aid-to-blind program.

Sixth, a new program would be added whereby the Federal Government would match on a 50–50 basis State expenditures on vendor payments in behalf of public-assistance recipients needing medical care up to a maximum determined by multiplying $6 per month times the number of adults and $3 per month times the number of children. This program will cost $65 million in the first year. This new program is one which I first introduced in bill form last year on behalf of the administration.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, there are many other changes provided by H. R. 7225, but I believe that the above summary contains the highlights.

In 1954, during the Republican 83d Congress, when I had the honor to be chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, I assumed responsibility for sponsoring and leading the battle for the administration's social-security program. That legislation has been one of the landmarks of the Eisenhower administration during its first term. It demonstrated, once and for all, that the Republican Party did not intend to turn the clock back in this area, but would take the lead in placing the retirement and survivorship protection of the American people on a firmer foundation.

That social-security bill which I sponsored and which Congress enacted into law in 1954 provided a number of important improvements in the existing program. First, and, I believe, most important, the basic protection of social-security coverage was finally extended to practically the entire gainfully employed population of the United States. For example, some 6 million farm owners and their families were brought into the system for the first time, an accomplishment of tremendous significance to the farm families of America. I recognize that a great many of the farmers of this country do not retire at age 65 and do not want to retire at that age. As a result, the retirement benefits of the social-security program are of uncertain value to many of these individuals. On the other hand, the survivor benefits of the system are of inestimable value to widows and dependent children upon the unexpected and untimely death of the family breadwinner. It has been my sad experience that my farmer friends and neighbors are certainly as susceptible to crippling injury and sudden death as the result of farm accidents as are individuals in other occupations, and probably more so. The new survivorship protection which we provided in 1954 should bring a new sense of security and peace of mind to our farm homes throughout the land.

These facts are equally true, I think, with regard to the millions of other self-employed individuals who were brought into the system for the first time under my bill in 1954. Personally, I have always wished that there were some practical way by which these individuals, including farmers, could be brought into the social-security system on an optional and not on a compulsory basis. I think that it is unfortunate to force people to take part in this type of retirement and survivorship system if they do not want to or do not need to. On the other hand, it has been demonstrated that an optional social-security system would cost just as much as private insurance, and would, therefore, be out of the reach of those of our people most in need of this basic protection for themselves and their loved ones. By extending the system to all, it has been possible to keep the costs relatively low, and thus within the means of the average individual.

The 1954 amendments also contained a number of other improvements in the existing system. Coverage was broadly extended with regard to farm workers. Moreover, my bill substantially improved the so-called "work clause" which had operated to deny benefits to individuals, otherwise eligible for benefits, who had earnings in excess of $75 a month. Under my bill, the allowable amount of earnings was increased to $1,200 a year. In addition, my bill provided across-the-board increases in benefits for all social security beneficiaries. These increases were modest in amount but helped in some measure to offset the rise in the cost of living which had struck with especial severity at our older citizens.

In comparing the action of Congress in 1954 and the action today with regard to this bill, I feel that certain comments are in order.

I believe that it was most unfortunate that no public hearings were ever held by the Committee on Ways and Means on this bill. This seems extraordinary in view of the billions of dollars involved and, even more important, in view of its significance in terms of human needs, upon which no value in dollars can be placed.

I believe it is unfortunate that the Committee on Ways and Means, as well as this House as a whole, has had no opportunity to determine what other areas of improvement within the social security system might be appropriate. For example, no effort was made to study a possible increase in minimum benefits, even though such an action would have benefited all of our retired workers and not just a selected few. The Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means made every effort last year to have this and other problems considered but to no avail. Frankly, I believe that the utter refusal by the majority to even consider an increase in the present minimum cash benefits demonstrates a callous disregard of the needs of our older citizens.

In many ways, the bill as agreed to by the conference committee represents a distinct improvement over the House bill. The provision for a separate trust fund with respect to the increased contributions required by disability benefits is a sound one. No one has the faintest conception what cash disability benefits ultimately will cost. The special trust fund will permit the Congress and the public to keep a close check on the finances of this new program. The overall lower cost of the conference bill is a distinct advantage.

I believe that the conferees have done an excellent job in resolving the differences between the House and Senate bills.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I was a Member of Congress when the first social-security legislation was passed. It was then considered as an old-age pension law. We, in Ohio, had an old-age pension law for a year or two, and, of course, I was somewhat familiar with the principle. I felt that probably the most deserving persons who should have help under this kind of legislation would be the deserving blind people, and I offered an amendment to the bill in the Ways and Means Committee providing for "aid to the indigent blind." In spite of all my earnestness, the Ways and Means Committee refused to accept my amendment. I then followed the matter up and offered my amendment on the floor of the House. Again, in spite of all my earnestness, the House of Representatives turned me down. The newspapers and magazines saw the fairness of my proposition and as a result, when the bill came before the Senate, my amendment was adopted and became a part of the first social-security law.

I mention this to show that from a humble beginning, where the poor blind woman who held out her tin cup on the street corner could not qualify for help, the principle of "public assistance has spread until today the social-security activities of the Government reach out and include nearly all our people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss some of the changes in this great and important system made in the legislation under consideration today.

The conferees on H. R. 7225, the Social-Security Act Amendments of 1956, have accomplished successfully a very difficult and complex task.

The bill embraces a great many important changes, both in the old-age and survivors insurance system and also in the public assistance program. I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues some of the most significant of these changes.

First of all, H. R. 7225 contains an entirely new disability insurance program. It provides for the payment of cash benefits at age 50 to individuals who become permanently and totally disabled. The idea of disability insurance has been a controversial one over the years. There have always been sharp differences of opinion, not over the theoretical desirability of such a program, but over whether it could be practically administered and whether it could be financed on a sound basis. I believe that the conference bill provides for about the best approach to this problem that we can achieve at this time. However, we should watch the development of this program with great care.

Secondly, the bill lowers the age at which women can become entitled to benefits. Widows and surviving dependent mothers would be given full benefits at age 62. Working women and wives would be given reduced benefits if they begin to draw them between age 62 and 65. Working women would receive 80 percent of their full benefit should they retire at age 62. If they delay retirement they would be given five-ninths of 1 percent for each month's delay up to age 65. Wives would be given 75 percent of their full benefits should they begin to receive benefits at 62. For each month's delay up to age 65 they would receive twenty-five thirty-sixths of 1 percent. Should a woman accept a reduced benefit, this benefit would continue to be payable and it would not be increased upon their reaching age 65.

Third, the bill extends coverage to additional self-employment individuals, including lawyers and dentists. I believe it safe to say that when this bill becomes law, doctors of medicine will be the only self-employed group not covered by social security.

Fourth, it must be understood that the liberalizations provided by this bill must be paid for in order to keep the finances of the system on a sound basis. As a result, the social-security tax will go up one-quarter percent next January 1, after which it will be 2¼ percent each on employee and employer. The self-employment tax will go up to 3⅜ percent on the same date.

Mr. Speaker, that concludes the changes involving the old-age and survivors' insurance program. Several other changes are provided with respect to public assistance.

For example, with regard to old-age assistance, aid to the blind, and aid to the permanently and totally disabled, the maximum amount which the Federal Government will match is increased to $60 from the present $55. The matching formula is also changed to four-fifths of the first $30 and one-half of the next $30 up to a maximum of $60, instead of four-fifths of the first $25 and one-half of the next $30 up to a maximum of $55, as under present law. In addition, and this is very important, there will be a $2 increase in the amount matchable with respect to the aid to dependent children program.

Finally, the bill provides a new program with respect to matching medical care payments for the needy. Under the bill, the Federal Government will match on a 50–50 basis vendor payments by the States with respect to medical care for public-assistance recipients. The bill provides a ceiling on the program equal to $6 per month times the number of adults and $3 per month times the number of children receiving assistance.

Summarizing the entire bill, it provides: First, disability benefits under OASI; second, lowering the OASI benefit age for women to 62; third, coverage of all self-employed except doctors of medicine; fourth, increased social security taxes January 1, 1957; fifth, increased Federal share under public assistance; and sixth, Federal matching of State payments with respect to the medical care of public assistance recipients.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I am extremely pleased that the conference report on the Social Security Act Amendments of 1956 contained three major improvements in the law—improvements which will lower the retirement age for women, provide benefits to totally and permanently disabled workers at age 50, and extend coverage to dentists, lawyers, and certain other professional, self-employed groups.

The contents of the conference report are particularly pleasing because I have worked for these major improvements for a number of years.

As early as February 26, 1953, I introduced a bill in the House of Representatives, proposing that the retirement age for women be lowered to age 60 and that totally disabled workers be made eligible for benefits regardless of age.

This bill, H. R. 3554, 83d Congress, was the result of a long and thorough study assisted by outstanding experts on social security.

Two years later, on March 18, 1955, I reintroduced my proposal in an improved form. This time it was embodied in two separate bills: H. R. 1635 which proposed to lower the retirement age for women to age 60; and H. R. 5057, which called for the payment of social-security benefits to totally disabled workers, again without age limitations.

The progress made toward the achievement of these goals in the Social Security Act Amendments of 1956 will prove of tremendous benefit to thousands of American people. It will alleviate the problem of numerous widows, surviving dependent mothers, working women, and wives of workers, who will be able to retire at an earlier age.

At the same time, this new legislation brings new hope and relief to many American families which have been subjected to hardships because the principal wage earner became disabled, and was unable to draw social security benefits until age 65.

I join with my distinguished colleagues in supporting the conference report on the Social Security Act Amendments of 1956 in the firm belief that this constructive and farsighted legislation merits our whole-hearted support.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, broadening social security to provide payment to disabled persons at age 50 or over, at the same time lowering women's eligibility age to 62, is a solid achievement of the 84th Congress in providing for the general welfare and, at the same time, strengthening purchasing power for those most in need of such help.

I am proud that I voted for this bill, H. R. 7225, when it passed the House July 18, 1955. I am proud today to have voted for the conference report on the final bill following Senate action July 17, 1956.

Mr. Speaker, this broadening of coverage is a landmark of progress in legislation that is humane and economically wise. As predicted by the veteran Senator WALTER F. GEORGE in the last great speech of his long career, this advance is but a beginning. If our Nation continues in peace and freedom, as we all pray daily that it will, it is as certain as tomorrow's sunrise that future Congresses will further improve the Social Security Act, passed in 1935 against virtually solid Republican opposition and now supported by both parties with only a small hard core of die-hard dissenters.

There is no logic, no justifiable reason for denying benefit payments to insured workers who become totally and permanently disabled at 49 or 48 or 38 or 28 years of age.

The line of age 50 was chosen in taking this first step toward complete coverage for disability because members of the House Ways and Means Committee felt that the area from age 65 to age 50 was all that could be successfully proposed in the first legislative action by Congress.

Lest anyone leap to the conclusion that this is in any sense a raid on the Public Treasury or on taxpayers, let me say at once that it is a pay-as-we-go program, that the additional cost of insuring workers against permanent and total disability is to be met out of an additional one-quarter of 1 percent payroll tax to be paid by the workers themselves and a like amount to be paid by the insured workers' employers, the combined amount to be earmarked and reserved to pay disability benefits. This removes any possibility of draining the old age and survivors' insurance trust fund.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that very strong arguments can be made for lowering eligibility for disability payments below age 50, for removing any age qualifications whatever, and for making the eligibility test identical with the test for the payment of survivors benefits; namely, earnings in insured employment for the same number of years and quarters and amounts as now required for eligibility under the old-age and survivors insurance provisions of the act.

If a young worker has been working in insured employment for 10 years, during which both he and his employer have been taxed and have been paying into a fund to cover him, his dependents and survivors against the hazards of old age, death, and disability, it seems to me quite likely that permanent and total disablement of that worker at age 30 is quite likely to confront him, his wife, and young children with a more difficult and potentially more tragic situation than is likely to arise upon disablement at or after age 50, when dependency is likely to be less frequent and for shorter periods, since most of the children will have grown up beyond the dependency cut-off age of 18, or will be approaching that age.

At whatever age disability occurs, the insured worker and the members of his family are confronted with expenses beyond normal living expenses for able persons either of working age or in retirement. Medical care, surgery, therapy, prosthetic appliances, and other devices are often needed in addition to frequent nursing care.

All of these considerations, it seems to me, point to the need for, and the likelihood of, further improvements in the Social Security Act at an early date to lower the disability eligibility age until it is removed altogether and also to provide for the cost of medical, hospital, therapy, appliances and nursing care.

I shall continue to support and work actively for such further improvements.

Mr. Speaker, as so often happens in public policy and legislation, that which is morally right turns out to be economically right. This will be proven again in the 84th Congress' historic extension of the Social Security Act to cover disability and to lower the eligibility age for women.

The payments that can now be made to the totally and permanently disabled and to women upon reaching age 62 will strengthen mass purchasing power in precisely those areas where it is most needed, namely, in families whose income is threatened or has been cut off, and for the necessities of life itself, food, clothing, shelter, fuel, and medical care.

This bill passed the House with bipartisan support, only 31 voted against it, but 23 of those 31 were Republicans.

A year later, in July 1956, all the weight of the present administration through its Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare was thrown into the fight in an effort to defeat the disability provisions of the bill, with the result that they passed the Senate by the narrow margin of 47 to 45. Forty-one Democrats voted for the George amendment adding disability to the bill as in the House version. Only 7 Democrats voted against it. But 38 Republicans voted against the George amendment adding disability, only 6 Republicans voted for that amendment. In conclusion, I want to quote and endorse the words of Senator GEORGE in closing the debate on his amendment:

Mr. President, I undertake to say that this is the most important question I have ever presented to the American people. Senators may do as they please now. Within the next Congress they will accept this principle. Regardless of promises or obligations, I do not believe that the Senate will so far desert the working people of the United States.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, before voting on H. R. 7225 with amendments agreed to by the Conference Committee, I want to express concern over the amendment relating to agricultural workers and crew leaders. This is a Senate-approved amendment to section 201 (f) (2) of the measure. I call attention to the statement of the Department of Labor circulated belatedly to members of the Conference Committee which voices strong opposition to the amendment.

The statement declares that the amendment will be most unfortunate for the migratory agricultural workers. The statement predicts that "deductions would be made from the worker's pay envelope without in many cases being recorded with the Social Security Administration, thus defeating the purpose of the amendment and thus depriving the migrant of honestly earned benefits under the Social Security Act."

The statement bases its prediction on the Labor Department's "long experience with the so-called crew leader system, under which approximatly 350,000 migrant workers travel and secure their jobs."

There is a distinction—

The Department points out—between crew leaders and legitimate labor contractors, who actually employ and pay agricultural workers. These labor contractors are now considered as employers for income tax and social security purposes under rulings of the Internal Revenue Service. Their operations are not affected by this proposed legislation.

Unlike the recognized labor contractor, the crew leader is generally only one step removed from migrant worker status himself. He may be a crew leader today and a migrant worker tomorrow, and vice versa. He is not, except in a few States, licensed, nor is he bonded. He usually has no place of business, no fixed residence, no facilities whatever for keeping records, and in many instances is illiterate.

The crew leader's charge for service averages around 12 percent of the workers' meager earnings. Crew leaders, having no responsibility toward workers or farmers, have been known to abscond with entire payrolls, leaving the migrants and their families destitute, without work, money or transportation.

While many migrants are now recruited directly by the farmers or through the employment service, section 201 (f) (2) would tend to force the workers to come under the crew leader system. The employer would find it more advantageous to have his entire work force under crew leaders and thus avoid employer-employee responsibilities.

This section would give statutory recognition to the crew leader system and would confer upon it a legal status inappropriate to its nature and most unfortunate for the migrant workers. Deductions would be made from the worker's pay envelope without in many cases being recorded with the Social Security Administration, thus defeating the purpose of the amendment and depriving the migrant of honestly earned benefits under the Social Security Act.

Moreover, from the standpoint of labor law administration, a dangerous precedent would be established by this amendment in its recognition of the practice of using a middleman to allow employers to shift their responsibilities for complying with labor legislation. This action might be a step in the direction of removing long recognized responsibilities of employers under other labor laws—workmen's compensation, for instance, or child labor, or the field of minimum wages."

These are telling arguments against this amendment and afford valid grounds for grave apprehension. I believe acceptance of this amendment carries with it an obligation on the part of Congress and especially of the Ways and Means Committee of which I am a member to follow closely the operation of this amendment in practice. If the Labor Department's unqualified forebodings are borne out by experience I believe the Congress should rectify the situation by legislative action. The least favored and least protected segment of our economic society—the approximately one million migratory agricultural workers—should not be left to the even more unhappy state which the Department of Labor declaration implies is in store for them under this amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the social security bill of 1956 makes several significant changes in existing social security law:

First. It provides for payment to persons covered by social security who are totally disabled and who have reached the age of 50 years. Payments begin in July 1957. I see a great field of controversy in the determination of when and if a person is totally disabled. Such has been the experience of countless individuals seeking to establish this point to meet the requirements of workmen's compensation and Veterans' Administration laws.

Second. It reduces from 65 to 62 the age which women may qualify for payments as follows:

(a) If they are widows or surviving, dependent mothers of covered workers, they are eligible for full payment.

(b) If they are wives of workers covered by the Social Security Act or covered workers themselves, they may at age 62 elect to receive 80 percent of the payment. It should be pointed out that they then do not become eligible to receive the full amount at a later date. This would be effective November 1956.

Third. Increased contributions are a part of the law to meet the increased costs. Effective January 1, 1957, taxes would be increased one-fourth of 1 percent for each, the employer and employee, making the rate 2¼ percent on each. The self-employment tax will be increased from 3 to 3⅜ percent.

Fourth. Eligibility for payments under Aid to Dependent Children program is broadened to include first cousins, nephews, and nieces.

Fifth. Beginning in taxable year 1956, coverage is extended to professional groups, except physicians.

Sixth. Formerly farm operators must have earned a net income of $400. Under the new bill where gross income is $1,800 or less, two-thirds of the gross income may be considered as net income for social-security purposes. Where the gross income is over $1,800, it is deemed that the net income is at least $1,200 for computation purposes. This provision is to be effective on the 1957 income.

Seventh. Agricultural workers are covered after they earn $150 or work 20 days or more during a calendar year.

Eighth. Under this bill, the Federal Government also increases funds available for matching State aid in public assistance programs. This would apply to aid for the needy aged, aid to the blind, and aid to disabled dependent children.

Ninth. The new bill would also continue old-age and survivors program aid for dependent childen beyond the age of 18 if such children are disabled.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, the conference report on the amendments to the Social Security Act constitute substantial improvements for our senior citizens. It is with regret, however, that I note that some of the amendments adopted by the Senate were eliminated. Two in particular stand out: First, the provision which would have allowed recipients of old-age pensions to earn up to $50 a month without having their assistance diminished by such earnings. This amendment is so worthy that I intend to fight for it next year. It will add to the dignity of those receiving pensions and it is certainly a justified right. Secondly, I regret the elimination of the Senate provision that there be no discrimination based on sex in determining need. In my State of California, as well as in many other States, there is ample evidence that local authorities try to give less amounts to women than to men and there is certainly no evidence that the cost of living is any higher for men than it is for women.

On the affirmative side, I am happy to see that many of the things which Senator ESTES KEFAUVER and I fought for are included in the final bill. Outstanding, of course, is the reduction in the retirement age for widows and surviving dependent mothers from 65 to 62. Working women and wives will be given graduated benefits from 62 to 65, starting at 80 percent of the full amount they will receive at 65. Of great benefit also is the payment to those permanently and totally disabled of benefits beginning at the age of 50. It is interesting to note that members of the Christian Science Church and other churches who rely on spiritual healing and who refuse rehabilitation services would be deemed to have done so with good cause.

The bill, of course, also extends the social-security coverage to farm operators and share farmers, to ministers and to agricultural workers, as well as employees of nonprofit organizations. However, physicians were eliminated at the insistence of the American Medical Association.

Under the matching formula for pensions, the pensions will be increased from $55 to $60 and, although the final bill does not include the so-called pass-along provision adopted by the Senate which would have required the States to increase the pensions they pay by the same $10 amount, we in California have already taken care of that matter through the State legislature so our pensioners will receive a much-needed and well-deserved $10 increase.

I have a happy feeling that my efforts to help our senior citizens receive adequate pensions, under improved conditions, have been substantially successful. We still have a long way to go and I am pledged to continue the fight.

Mr. SEELY-BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I am advised that this morning the Senate passed a bill to launch a broad new program of Federal aid to depressed areas of the Nation. As has earlier been stated by the President, we must help deal with the pockets of chronic unemployment that here and there mar our Nation's general industrial prosperity. Certainly it is well recognized that economic changes in recent years have often been so rapid and so far-reaching in their effect that areas generally committed to a single local resource or industrial activity, such as the textile industry, have found themselves temporarily deprived of their markets and their jobs. I do believe that for communities so hit, a real sense of responsibility must remain with the people living there, and with their State, but I also am just as firmly convinced that a soundly conceived Federal partnership program can be of real assistance to the people in their efforts to help themselves.

I am well aware of the many problems involved in any legislation of this kind, and that every proper effort must be made to make sure that the legislation as drawn will not encourage further dislocation but will rather direct itself toward being of help and assistance to those communities which are so earnestly striving to help themselves.

I do urge that at the earliest possible moment we in the House be given the opportunity of debating fully and completely this important measure.

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, adoption of the conference report on H. R. 7225 represents the most historic and far-reaching improvements yet to be made in the Social Security System first enacted in 1935. This bill lowering the age at which women become eligible for benefits, providing disability insurance at age 50, expanding coverage to thousands of individuals not now covered, and increasing the Federal old-age assistance payment shares is a major step forward in providing the people of this Nation with a truly adequate and comprehensive social security program. However, there is still much to be done. We still have a long way to go before our present old-age programs, even with the enactment of H. R. 7225, are truly adequate to meet the ever-increasing problems of old age and disability.

Ever since coming to Congress 10 years ago, Mr. Speaker, I have been greatly concerned with the problems facing the older citizens of our Nation. The problem of old age is one of the most serious facing us today. The poet Browning wrote the famous line, "Grow old along with me, the best is yet to be," but if we were to look at hard, cold facts today we could see that growing old brings on problems and complications which would test the strength of the youngest and strongest of us much less that of the older person.

OLD-AGE PROBLEM NATIONAL CONCERN

The problem of old age is of national concern. It touches each of us, young and old alike. Consider for a moment that since 1900 the number of persons over 65 has quadrupled while the total population has only doubled. From 1947 to 1952 the population aged 65 and over, increased an almost unbelievable 17 percent while the total population in that same time increased only 5 percent. By 1975 there will be more than 20 million Americans 65 and over. There are over 14 million today, and the average income for a man and his wife over 65 today—one of the 14 million—is only $1,500. Their average savings are less than $500. Millions of old folks, Mr. Speaker, living on such pitifully small incomes in these days of high costs of living. The situation is becoming, if it isn't already, a national disgrace.

During the last 50 years, our national economy has moved from one based primarily upon agriculture to one of huge industrialization, creating many new and unanticipated social problems, particularly with respect to our older persons who are being shunted more and more to an insecure, dependent and much too hopeless and helpless a position in our society. They are being deprived of work because of their age and being forced to retire prematurely when they have good, active years ahead of them. As a result, many of our older people have inadequate financial resources to maintain themselves and their families as independent and self-respecting members of their communities, are unable to find adequate housing for themselves and their families, are confronted with disabling health and medical problems, are driven by frustration and despair to private and public mental institutions and general hospitals, and are placed in increasing numbers on old-age assistance rolls.

Because of the enormity of the problem even further improvements in the Social Security System should be enacted. The program in operation today is not designed to adequately assist the Nation's older, disabled, and dependent citizens. Basically we are still operating under a 1935 law trying to solve the social-security problems of 1956. We do all in our power to modernize our laws calling for highway construction, defense measures, and countless others, yet when it comes to the field of social welfare and social security we seem satisfied with things the way they are. It is no more logical to put the tremendous traffic of today on the roads of 1920 than it is to try to solve the problem of today's aged and disabled with programs developed two decades ago. Present law just is not designed to solve the tremendous problem confronting us today.

FURTHER IMPROVEMENTS NEEDED

For instance, lowering the age at which women become eligible for benefits as provided in H. R. 7225, while it is a significant improvement over existing law, does not go far enough. Ever since coming to Congress I have urged that the retirement age in general, for men and women alike, be lowered to age 60. I have introduced a bill, H. R. 4471, with such a provision. I hope the day is not too far off when we truly face up to the problem and lower the retirement age to 60 for everyone.

Allowing disabled persons to obtain benefits at age 50, another provision of H. R. 7225, is a fine, progressive improvement in present law. It is estimated that in the first year of operation disability insurance benefits will be payable to about 250,000 workers, amounting to $200 million in benefits. Under the courageous leadership of Senator WALTER GEORGE this provision was retained in the Senate version of the bill in the face of determined opposition from the administration and an almost solid bloc of Republican votes against it. Actually, one could ask himself why must there be a disability age limit at all. When a person becomes totally disabled, bedridden, and unable to work, he is deserving of assistance. What we seem to be saying in H. R. 7225 is that a disabled person over 50 needs help, but a disabled person under 50 can take care of himself. Such is not the case, and everyone knows it. Yet the solution to the problem is shackled with this completely unrealistic age requirement. Disabled persons of whatever age need and deserve social-security coverage and until such is the case, we will not be adequately discharging our duties to them. My bill, H. R. 4471, would entitle a disabled person to assistance at any age, and I am pleased to see such able leaders as Senator GEORGE, of Georgia, take a similar stand on this issue.

I was extremely pleased to see coverage extended to over 250,000 self-employed individuals and their families under H. R. 7225. This, again, is a great improvement and one I have long striven for. But we see once more the piecemeal approach to the problem. The real solution is to extend coverage to all persons—to enact a truly overall and comprehensive social-security program for all today and not wait another few years to make a change here and a change there. The problem exists right now. We should not postpone the solution which we know to exist. Every moment lost just adds to the misery and tragedy of many of our older and disabled citizens. As Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare Folsom has said, "Social legislation must change with changing social and economic conditions." These are fine sentiments, but we do not seem to be living up to them.

Apparently there are those who think we are unable to afford, from a financial standpoint, to take such a step toward the solution of the problem. Is it possible that a nation as rich as ours cannot afford to provide security both financial and social to its older citizens who helped make it as rich and great as it is? I cannot believe that such is the case. Headlines blare out the good news that our economy is approaching the $400 billion mark. But how much publicity is given the fact that nearly three-fourths of all Americans over 65 years of age either have no income of their own or receive less than $1,000 a year? This is a sad commentary on our economy. While storage bins burst with surplus food, many of these older folks actually live on marginal or submarginal levels. I am convinced that our economy can withstand the expense of a real Social Security System.

SOCIAL SECURITY AND FREEDOM

In order for this Nation to continue to maintain the kind of liberty and freedom we have become accustomed to, Mr. Speaker, the Government must participate in programs which provide security for the individual against risks over which he has no control. It is not a negative concept of liberty or freedom which gives us our individual and collective strength, but rather the more positive approach involving the existence of those economic and social conditions necessary to enjoy the good life, and to exercise the privileges of free speech, press, and citizenship. We all know that a man who is unemployed, for instance, is far from free—that to him freedom is a hollow word hedged about with the misery which accompanies poverty and insecurity. By the same token we know that our old folks who live on a miserly old-age assistance pension are not really free and able to enjoy the liberties and rights which our form of government provides. Such problems as these led Franklin D. Roosevelt to observe that "in order to preserve our democratic institutions we need to prove that the practical operation of democratic government is equal to the task of protecting the security of the people." One group in America, Mr. Speaker, sorely in need of help in protecting such security is our older and disabled citizens. We must all be aware that millions of them have been watching and waiting to see whether this Congress would accept its responsibilities and enact legislation truly beneficial and helpful to the older folks. Some progress, indeed great progress has been made with the enactment of H. R. 7225. But we should not stop here. Having made such excellent progress this year I am confident that in the not too distant future we will see the dream of a truly comprehensive and adequate social-security program become a reality.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to support the adoption of the conference report on the social-security amendments of 1956, H. R. 7225, and in doing so would like to commend the House conferees in the work they did with the Senate conferees on this important and meritorious legislation.

It is my view that within the limits of the matters germane to the conference a very desirable bill has been brought back to the House of Representatives for final approval. In making this observation I would like to express the opinion that certain improvements that should have been accomplished during this Congress are neglected in this legislation. The improvements that I have in mind that were not taken care of by the bill as agreed to in conference include such meritorious amendments as a liberalized retirement test so that America's aged citizens could lead more productive lives through employment without loss of their social-security entitlement.

I also believe that consideration should have been given to blanketing-in the present aged who are not now covered under social security so that those persons who have reached retirement age, and are not now eligible for benefits through no fault of their own, could begin to receive them. In this connection I would point out to my colleagues in the House that I introduced legislation, H. R. 9272, on February 13, 1956, to provide for the blanketing-in of the present aged on a basis that would guarantee against impairment of the actuarial soundness of the trust fund. If my proposed amendment to the Social Security Act had been adopted, our aged American citizens who met the eligibility requirements could have begun to draw benefits without concern over the iniquitous "needs test" and the humiliation that attends the acknowledgment of poverty that is required in order to be eligible for public assistance today.

In supporting this legislation I would like to make particular reference to four improvements provided by the conference report that I regard as particularly significant and meritorious. The first of these improvements pertains to the reporting of earnings by farm operators and tenant farmers. The legislation as modified in conference would provide a liberalized income reporting method so that small farmers may receive credit for a higher portion of their total income and thus become entitled to larger benefits than would be available to them under existing law. This change will result in more farmers becoming eligible for OASI benefits and the benefits to which they will be entitled will be higher than they would have obtained under present law. Tenant farmers will be regarded as self-employed individuals so that both the tenant farmer and the landowner may obtain coverage under the OASI program.

Agricultural workers would also be benefited under the conference agreement. Such workers would not be subject to social-security taxes if they are only casually engaged in employment and are not paid $150 or more in cash wages in the calendar year by one employer or if they perform less than 20 days of work for an employer during the calendar year. This change will not exclude from coverage those agricultural workers who should have the benefits of the OASI program but will save the employer of the occasional farmworker from the need of keeping records on casual employees that he hires for a very short time. In this respect another improvement that was adopted by the conferees was the exclusion from coverage of agricultural workers from foreign countries who are admitted to the United States on a temporary basis.

Another amendment that would be made to the Social Security Act by the conference agreement that I regard as particularly significant is the amendment providing disability benefits for the totally disabled individual upon the attainment of age 50. A serious benefit gap has existed in our social-security program to date in that disability benefits are not payable under the OASI system. It has always been my view that the family of a worker who is disabled is as much in need of disability benefits as is the family of a retired worker in need of retirement benefits or the family of a deceased worker in need of survivorship benefits. One of the principal purposes of the social-security program is that its benefits are the means whereby family ties have essentially remained intact where the untimely death of the principal wage earner of the family has occurred. I would point out to my colleagues in the House that the loss of income is just as complete under circumstances of total disability as it is under the circumstances of the death of the principal family provider. For that reason it is appropriate that disability benefits would be payable under this conference agreement.

It is true that the disability benefits provided by the conference agreement are available on a more conservative basis than benefits payable to the retired and to survivors under existing law. However, the conference agreement establishes a separate trust fund and allocates a separate tax payable to that trust fund so that as experience with this new aspect of the social-security program is gained a liberalization of the disability portion of the program may be undertaken if it is warranted. I predict, Mr. Speaker, that the disability benefits that will become payable under the conference agreement on H. R. 7225 will do much to make the old-age and survivors insurance program more adequately meet an urgent need of the American people.

The third aspect of the report filed by the conferees on the social security amendments of 1956 that I regard as particularly significant pertains to the public-assistance titles of the Social Security Act. I am gratified to observe that the amendments provided in the conference agreement to these public-assistance titles will insure to our aged, our disabled, our blind, and our dependent children a liberalized benefit level that more realistically recognizes the cost of even the barest subsistence today. It should be recognized that people who are compelled to avail themselves of public assistance are entitled to an adequate benefit commensurate with the costs of their living requirements in our present-day economy. For that reason I would observe that the benefit increases provided under the conference agreement are most meritorious.

The fourth aspect of the bill to which I would like to specifically refer pertains to the lowering of the retirement age for women under the old-age and survivors insurance program, from 65 years to 62 years. I am convinced that this retirement age should have been lowered even further with respect to women who are unable to obtain work because they have not previously been a participant in the labor market and who are without means of support because of the death of their husbands. The amendment contained in the conference report lowering the retirement age for women is a step in the right direction. Women will now be able to make an election as to whether they will retire or will continue working at an earlier date than is possible under the present law and in this way the old-age and survivors insurance program is made more realistic and more adequate.

I would also like to commend the conferees on the action that they have taken to preclude the payment of benefits to persons convicted of crimes that are traitorous in their nature and that would deny recognition for coverage purposes to employment by communistic-front organizations. I also subscribe to the action of the conferees imposing more stringent limitations on the payment of benefits to aliens. It has always been my view that the old-age and survivors insurance program was established to provide for the welfare of American citizens and I strongly believe that it should be so limited. The payment of benefits to aliens constitutes a drain on the trust fund and results in the denial of benefit increases that might otherwise be possible for our American citizens. An amendment to public-assistance titles that merits the support of all Members of the Congress is the amendment that would provide on a 50–50 matching basis medical-care benefits. This amendment will do much to assure to our aged citizens the medical care that they, perhaps more than any other category of our citizenry, need so direly.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that in the time allotted to me I do not have a more adequate opportunity to discuss this conference report, the social-security program, and the changes that must be accomplished in the future to make the program more fully meet the needs of our American citizens. It is my view that the social-security law more vitally affects our American polity than any other Federal statute. For that reason I think the Congress of the United States should be particularly attentive on a continuing basis to effecting changes and improvements in the law as they prove feasible. I am confident the Congress will undertake such attentiveness and will review the operation of the program to make sure that it is fiscally sound, economically adequate, and humanely equitable.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to urge my colleagues in the House to support the adoption of the conference report on H. R. 7225.

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Speaker, for the past 10 years I have repeatedly and emphatically declared in this House my conscientious judgment that the enactment of and continuing improvement in our Social Security System is the greatest bulwark that can be legislatively erected against the danger of domestic inroads upon our people from subtle Communist propaganda and criticism of our so-called capitalist society.

It is, therefore, with the deepest earnestness I express the hope that this conference report will be adopted unanimously. In my opinion, such action will represent the most historic and far-reaching improvements yet made in the Social Security System that was first enacted in 1935.

The bill and conference report lowering the age at which women become eligible for benefits, providing disability insurance at age 50, expanding coverage to thousands of individuals not now within the System, and increasing the Federal old-age assistance payments is a major step forward in providing the people of this Nation with a truly adequate and comprehensive social-security program.

I am particularly gratified that our older citizens are being extended an additional measure, which could still be expanded, of assistance. The problem of reasonably helping our older people is one of the most challenging facing the country today. Since 1900, the number of persons over 65 has quadrupled, while the total population has only doubled. By 1975, there will be more than 20 million Americans 65 and over; there are over 14 million today. The average income for a man and his wife over 65 now is only $1,500. Just think of it for a minute, these millions of our older folks trying to live on such pathetically small incomes in these days of high living costs. At least we are beginning to deal with that deplorable situation, and I trust we will continue to give it even greater sympathetic consideration in our further actions.

Allowing disabled persons to obtain benefits at the age of 50 is a genuinely Christian and humane provision of this new legislation. Indeed, we may well question the justice of setting this arbitrary figure of disability at 50. It is quite obvious that disabled persons of whatever age need and should morally be granted social-security coverage. I look forward to the day when we will realistically realize that age is not a just factor in considering the needs of a disabled person. At whatever age such tragedy occurs, the individual and family members are plagued with expenses beyond normal living for medical care, medicine, correctional appliances, nursing care, and so on. Anyone who has experienced any temporary family sickness at all realizes the tremendous financial burden that accompanies sickness and disability these days.

Let us further appreciate that in setting up this program it is not in any sense an imposition on the Public Treasury or our taxpayers. The additional cost of taking care of these disabled persons is to be met out of an additional one-fourth of 1 percent payroll tax to be paid by the workers themselves and a like amount to be paid by the insured workers' employers, the compiled amount to be earmarked and reserved to pay disability benefits. This process removes any possibility of depleting the old-age and survivors insurance trust fund.

Mr. Speaker, another outstanding feature of improvement in this current legislation is the lowering of age limit at which women can become entitled to benefits. I refer, of course, to the provision to lower to 62 the retirement age for workingwomen, wives and dependent mothers. Widows and surviving dependent mothers will be given full benefits at age 62. Workingwomen and wives would be given reduced benefits if they began to draw them between ages 62 and 65, in accord with a well-defined formula. This is, indeed, a definite improvement in our long-neglected consideration of American women under this System. It still leaves an obvious inequity by excluding other groups of women from the same benefits.

We all know and experience proves that after the age of 50, or even before, in our modern industrial life, women who lose their jobs or are otherwise unemployed find it extremely difficult to get new positions, far more than men under the same circumstances. Women, therefore, are frequently forced into retirement much earlier than men and therefore need the benefits earlier. These are hard facts which must be dealt with sooner or later, but at least we are taking a step now in the right direction; I hope that we will continue this present promise of progress in this field.

There are, Mr. Speaker, many more sound and beneficial provisions in this bill, such as the extended coverage to certain farmers, ministers, agricultural workers, and self-employed individuals, including lawyers and dentists. All of these provisions have been carefully explained to the House and thoroughly justified. There is no need of repeating them here.

Mr. Speaker, these current improvements in our Social Security System, as spelled out in this legislation, are in entire accord with our Christian principles and traditions. They are within the capacity of this blessed and bountiful Nation to assume. We have been extremely anxious these last 10 years and extremely generous in providing billions of dollars to aid and assist friendly peoples, and even some enemies, all over the world. Some of those expenditures were and are undoubtedly wise in our self-interest, but the wisdom and practicality of certain others become ever more and more doubtful.

To those who question our own ability to reasonably participate in a sound Social Security System at the Federal level, I suggest they take a look at the staggering and astounding amounts of money that we have spent abroad. I ask them, in all sincerity, what will it profit us to spend abroad if we neglect to the point of discouragement and demoralization the welfare of our own people? I would remind them that the primary duty of this National Legislature is concern for the people of the United States.

This social-security measure is truly in accord with the exhortation of the President to legislate for the good of all Americans, and I now urge its unanimous adoption without further delay.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, the 84th Congress has just completed action on one of the most significant and humane pieces of legislation in recent history—I refer, of course, to the social security amendments of 1956. The enactment of this landmark legislation is another victory in the long struggle in which my Democratic colleagues and I have engaged, side by side, in providing a degree of self-respecting security for our elderly people, our disabled, and those who have suffered misfortune. I am proud to state that I have for many years worked long and hard to improve and strengthen our social-security program and that the amendments of 1956 achieve many of the objectives which I urged many years ago.

It is therefore appropriate on this occasion for me to review briefly just what has been accomplished by the 1956 social security amendments and indicate those areas where further improvements may yet be made. I am particularly interested in reviewing these accomplishments, Mr. Speaker, because of the vital interest which I have always had in our social-security program and because of the contribution which I am proud to have made, as a member of the Ways and Means Committee and of the Congress, toward enactment of this important legislation.

It will be recalled that in the summer of 1955 the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives originated and passed by an overwhelming majority this basic legislation. Certain changes were made in the bill by the Senate Finance Committee, and further changes were made on the Senate floor. Insofar as the major provisions of the bill are concerned, I still believe the House version was the soundest approach, but I am happy that the bill which has finally been approved does retain most of the improvements recommended by the House.

The five principal features of the 1956 social security amendments may be summarized as follows:

First, one of the most important provisions of the 1956 amendments was provision for disability insurance protection for the permanently and totally disabled at or after age 50. The inclusion of this provision rounds out the protection of our social-security program and provides one of the most humane actions which could have been taken by the 84th Congress. The gap which existed in our Social Security System prior to approval of these amendments was obvious. Previously, a worker who was insured under the System and who became disabled regardless of his age had to wait until age 65 before becoming eligible for any benefits, a situation which unquestionably was unsound and unfair. Certainly, a breadwinner who is unfortunate enough to become permanently and totally disabled at age 50, and who is a fully insured individual under social security, should not be forced to wait for 15 years before receiving benefits.

I am proud to state that the bill passed by the House of Representatives last year by an overwhelming vote included this humane provision and it was with gratification that I noted it was restored to the bill on the floor of the United States Senate, after having been removed by the Senate committee. It is estimated that some 250,000 individuals may become eligible for benefits during the first year under this provision of the bill, and this basic protection is extended to some 35 million insured persons.

Before leaving this point, Mr. Speaker, I must state that I would have much preferred not to see the age limit of 50 placed in the disability-insurance provision, but I recognized the practical legislative situation which existed. I do intend, however, to work for refinements and improvements in this respect at a later date.

Second, the bill provides for a reduction in the retirement age of widows, workingwomen, and wives, from age 65 to age 62. For a number of years, I have worked for a reduction in the retirement age for women. As the bill passed the House of Representatives last year, the retirement age for all of these categories of women was reduced uniformly from 65 to 62 upon my motion. As the bill came back to us from the Senate, provision was made for reduction in the retirement age to 62 with full benefits for widows, but it provides further for an actuarial reduction in retirement benefits for wives and workingwomen if they choose to retire at age 62 rather than 65. In the case of wives, 75 percent of full benefits may be received by them if they begin receiving them at age 62, and in the case of workingwomen, 80 percent of their full benefits may be received if they retire at 62 rather than 65.

As indicated, under the House version of the bill, all women could retire at age 62 with full benefits. I still think this was by far the better version, but I recognize the practical situation in that the modified version of the bill apparently was the only acceptable version to the Senate during this session.

In this connection I should like to emphasize that it was upon my motion that the Ways and Means Committee in 1955 included the original provision to lower the age limit uniformly for all women to age 62 with full benefits. I repeat that I am very sorry that the version which I recommended in committee and which passed the House was not accepted by the Senate.

Further, in this connection I think it appropriate for me to indicate that in the 83d Congress I introduced a bill—H. R. 2713, on February 6, 1953—which provided for the lowering of the retirement age for women from 65 to 60. I believe that it is fair for me to state that my record shows my vital interest in this matter, and while I am glad that action has been taken to provide for lowering the retirement age to age 62, I still consider that improvements may be made in this area, and it is my intention to press for and support measures at a future date to make such improvements.

Third, coverage was extended to many additional individuals, so that now our social-security program is nearly universal in its coverage. Some 250,000 persons were added, and perhaps many more, depending upon State and local action. Practically all self-employed professional people are now covered except physicians, who were left out at their request; coverage was made available to more State and local employees; provisions relative to sharefarmers were clarified and amplified; and further additional groups were brought into the System, such as employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority, Federal Home Loan Banks, and others.

Fourth, provision is made for the payment of benefits after age 18 to the dependent child of a retired or deceased worker if the child has been permanently and totally disabled since before age 18. The mother of the child would also be eligible for benefits under this provision so long as she continues to have the child in her care. I think this provision, which originated in the Ways and Means Committee, is one of the most commendable in the entire bill, although it is of narrower application. The situation faced by those persons who are caring for a mentally or physically handicapped child is sad indeed, and their suffering is greater because of their concern as to what may happen when the family income may be cut off by death or retirement of the wage earner. This provision will help ameliorate, to a degree, this situation.

Fifth, a number of improvements were made with respect to grants-in-aid for public assistance, aid to the blind, aid to the permanently and totally disabled, and aid to dependent children. The Federal share for these programs was increased; the program for aid to dependent children was broadened and strengthened; Federal support for research is provided; Federal funds for child welfare are increased; and other changes are made.

I am not entirely satisfied, however, with these changes, important as they are. For the most part, they are a step in the right direction, and will enable our needy aged, blind, disabled, and dependent to have some improvement in their security, but I consider that my own bill on this subject, H. R. 10302, would have been much better. It would have placed these programs on an up-to-date basis, provided even higher assistance levels than is provided in the present amendments, and made other desirable changes. However, the provisions of the social security amendments of 1956 do make improvements in the grant-in-aid programs and I am pleased to see this done.

Mr. Speaker, the foregoing are some of the major provisions of this important legislation. I regard this bill as one of the most forward-looking enactments which any Congress in recent years has approved. I am proud to emphasize that its basic framework was laid out in the bill originated last year by the Committee on Ways and Means and that I am happy to have had the opportunity of working hard for its enactment. I expect to continue to press for further improvements in our Social Security System, which now is reaching a well-rounded program of basic protection, soundly and equitably financed, for all our people.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H. R. 7225 to amend and liberalize the Social Security Act. I am extremely pleased to note that the conferees included the provision which will allow women to become eligible for benefits at age 62 rather than 65 under the present law. This was one of the provisions of the bill that I introduced, H. R. 6783, and was incorporated by members of the Committee on Ways and Means into H. R. 7225 with modifications. Although I would desire to see the age eligibility reduced to 60 for women, I accept the modification to age 62 by committee members and wholeheartedly support the recommendations in the conference report.

I am also pleased that this bill includes dentists and lawyers in the social-security program and that provision has been made for the continuation of monthly benefits for mentally and physically retarded children after age 18.

Mr. Speaker, the hour is fast approaching when the 84th Congress will pass into history. During both sessions these needed and desirable amendments to the Social Security Act have been studied and debated. The House-Senate conferees are to be commended for working out an agreement on this important measure so that we could have this report before us today. I urge my colleagues to overwhelmingly adopt this report so that we may have a liberalized social-security law this year.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, the title of this bill is self-explanatory—it is, in effect, a bill to modernize the whole social-security program in keeping with the policies which we on the Democratic side have been supporting and promoting ever since the original Social Security Act was passed.

This bill does many things to help many people—women approaching retirement age whose wait before collecting benefits will now be shortened in a great many cases; people on public assistance and aid to the blind and aid to dependent children who can look for a larger Federal contribution to their monthly benefits; and the sick and ill among the indigent who can look for Federal assistance toward medical and hospital expenses. Furthermore, practically all professional groups except medical doctors are now to be covered by social security. And the disabled have had opened to them under this bill a great new program for receiving social-security benefits at or after the age of 50.

On this occasion, as we prepare to pass this bill, I cannot help but think back a few years.

Mr. Speaker, as you drove down the Boulevard of the Allies, or down Bigelow Boulevard, toward Pittsburgh's Golden Triangle during those autumn days and into the late fall, the billboards called down at you a frightening message that the workers of our country were being victimized by a cruel hoax.

The billboards were Republican Party billboards; the "cruel hoax" to which they referred was social security—the social security law which Franklin Delano Roosevelt had signed into law the year before but which had not yet gone into effect regarding the payroll deductions and benefits under the old-age and survivors insurance program.

The Republican Party was shedding immense — and expensive — billboard tears over the consequences of this terrible New Deal law—and was promising to repeal it.

Now I grant, Mr. Speaker, that all this may sound like ancient history to some. After all, it did happen 20 years ago. To the new voters of today, 20 years may appear to be an eternity—for certainly to their way of thinking it is a lifetime, at least.

OUTSTANDING NEW FEATURES IN 1956 SOCIAL SECURITY BILL

But the voter of any age today—whether he lived through the days I speak of 20 years ago and was aware of their significance, or whether he just heard about them at the family dinner table as the parents reminisced about the exciting and eventful era when this country was pulled from the depths of depression—each such voter knows that we have experienced in the United States in this interval of one generation a great change, actually a social revolution.

And, of course, social security—the social security law which 20 years ago the Republicans werc promising to repeal—has been a cornerstone of the structure of our society and economy.

During these past 20 years, there have been periodic changes and improvements in the social security law. The improvements, in nearly all cases, have been proposed, supported, and enacted primarily by Democrats and opposed, in most instances, by Republicans. So the billboards of 20 years ago are not entirely obsolete, although, of course, it would take a brave Republican, indeed, to campaign for office today on a promise to repeal social security. Rather, we find the Republican Party giving much lip-service to the social security laws, but going in for backstage maneuvers to weaken, if not destroy, the program.

EISENHOWER ADMINISTRATION OBJECTED TO CHANGES

The new benefits are a case in point. The social security bill which is now before us for final action is, in many respects, a truly outstanding one. It incorporates some great new improvements, particularly the principle of paying retirement benefits at age 50 to workers who become totally and permanently disabled. Also incorporated into the bill is a long-overdue provision to permit widows to receive their survivorship benefits at age 62; for working-women to retire at 62; and for wives of retired workers to begin collecting their supplementary benefits at age 62. The Republican administration and its supporters in Congress sought desperately to block these improvements.

This marks the first time since the original social security bill was enacted in 1935 that there has been any break in the 65-year minimum age for retirement benefits. It establishes a new principle, and sets a precedent which, no doubt, will be expanded in the future. I foresee the removal of any age minimum for payment of benefits to the totally disabled who are eligible by reason of their previous employment and earnings and contributions to the fund.

Now that we have established the precedent of permitting retirement for women at age 62, I foresee further reductions in the future of that age minimum for women, and probably some reduction, too, in the present 65-year minimum retirement age for men under the program.

In addition to these advanced features of the new bill, we have widened the coverage of the program to include lawyers, dentists, optometrists, veterinarians, osteopaths, and others. These groups heretofore had not been sure they wanted to be covered but finally became aware of the tremendous value to them and to their families of social-security coverage—particularly in survivorship benefits should the breadwinner die. Throughout our Nation now families are held together through social security which would in other years have been forced to separate upon the father's death. It has been a great, great thing for America.

REPUBLICAN OPPOSITION TO LOWERED RETIREMENT AGE

While the bill is an outstanding legislative achievement, it has in it some features which are unfair to those women between the ages of 62 and 65 who elect to take advantage of their new opportunity to retire before 65. As a result of Republican opposition to the whole principle of early retirement benefits, a Senate compromise had to be accepted which penalizes workingwomen by deducting from their retirement benefits a certain percentage for each month they lack of being 65 at the time they apply for benefits. This penalty is then supposed to remain in effect even after the woman reaches 65. That is too severe.

A workingwoman who wants to retire at age 62, as this bill permits, would receive only 80 percent of the monthly benefits that she would be eligible for at age 65. For each month that she delays retirement after 62, until she is 65, the benefit will be increased by five-ninths of 1 percent. And while wives of retired workers can now apply for supplementary retirement benefits at age 62, if they do, they receive only 75 percent as much as they would be eligible for at age 65, and so on.

INTEND TO SEEK REPEAL OF PENALTY CLAUSE

These penalty provisions were not in the bill which passed in the House of Representatives last year. Nor were they in the bill which my committee, the Committee on Ways and Means, reported out last year. They were inserted in the bill in the Senate, as the price exacted by conservative Republican elements in the narrowly divided Senate in getting through the principle of retirement for women before 65. I think this limitation was unfair, and I intend next year to seek its repeal. I hope we have a sufficiently large Democratic majority in the Senate, as well as the House, next year, to enable us to overcome such tactics as occurred in the Senate this year on this provision of the social security bill. The House bill would have paid full benefits to all eligible women at 62, with no penalty clause. That is what I am for.

Going back to those billboards of 20 years ago, Mr. Speaker—the billboards along the Boulevard of the Allies overlooking the Monongahela River, and on Bigelow Boulevard overlooking the Allegheny, and across Liberty Bridge and up the Mount Washington roadway, and all over the city of Pittsburgh and the county of Allegheny 20 years ago—billboards proclaiming that the Republican Party would repeal social security because it was a cruel hoax on the worker, a tax on your pay envelope, a drag on recovery from the depression, interference with the private insurance business, a crushing burden on the economy, and so on—going back to those days, Mr. Speaker, we find that they were really not too far back, at that. For in this bill now before us, we experienced a straight out political battle between the two parties over liberalizing and improving the social-security law.

THE FIGHT OVER DISABILITY BENEFITS

It is clear from the debate and votes on the bill that the principle of improving social security to provide more generous retirement benefits at an earlier age is primarily still a Democratic principle, and opposition to that idea is primarily still a Republican principle, and a Republican administration concept.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the disability provision of the new bill, which is its most outstanding single new feature from the standpoint of social insurance against personal disaster, was put into the bill originally by my committee and by the House over the violent objections of the Eisenhower administration and the Republican leadership. It was retained in the bill in the Senate by the very narrowest of margins, on what turned out to be an almost solid party line vote—the overwhelming majority of the Democrats voting for it and the overwhelming majority of the Republicans voting against it. And the Eisenhower administration, as I said, was 100 percent opposed to it and used every conceivable device to line up Republican votes against it.

The Republicans were saying, in effect, that a 50-year-old worker who is totally and permanently disabled should be required to sit around for 15 years and wait until he is 65 before collecting any of the social-security benefits he had earned during his working career. How indifferent can one be to human needs—to the needs of the average family and worker?

REPUBLICAN PARTY UNAWARE OF PEOPLE'S REAL NEEDS

But we do not have to depend upon the social-security debates and votes alone to see how the amazing attitude displayed by the Republican Party 20 years ago over the "cruel hoax" of social security still dominates that party when it comes to human needs and human problems. We have concrete evidence of the vast differences between the two political parties on all social issues and on human needs each time Congress takes up any important legislation affecting the people generally.

AUTHORIZING SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE TO PAY THE EXPENSES OF AN ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON SOIL AND WATER CONSERVATION

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3314) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to pay the expenses of an Advisory Committee on Soil and Water Conservation.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE]?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3314) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to pay the expenses of an Advisory Committee on Soil and Water Conservation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to pay expenses of an Advisory Committee on Soil and Water Conservation and related matters, but such committee members (other than ex officio members) shall not be deemed to be employees of the United States and shall not receive compensation.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this bill simply authorizes payment of the expenses of advisory committees which are appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture. The bill was requested by the Department.

The total expenditures estimated by the Department are about $5,000 a year. These committees are departmental committees appointed by the Secretary for the purpose of advising on soil and water matters. This pays their expenses when on official duty.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. Is it not a fact that this bill was a part of the housekeeping bill of the Department of Agriculture bill which the House passed some time ago but which we were told would not be taken up in the Senate on account of other provisions?

Mr. POAGE. Yes. This is one of the items which appeared in the bill we passed and on which the Senate has not acted. The Department has asked for this particular bill.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, if the gentleman had made that explanation in the first place, it would not have been necessary to have a suspension.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, in relation to giving the Department of Agriculture any more money for anything I would like to comment on an article which appeared in the Columbus (Ohio) Citizen of last Sunday. The article is headed, "Hamilton Cattleman Helps To Square Away Pentagon", and tells about the Deputy Defense Secretary, Reuben B. Robertson, of Hamilton, Ohio, who is supposedly putting the Pentagon on a business-like basis. In the same article, it tells about his herd of 55 Black Angus cows back in Hamilton Ohio, and I quote, "the herd was losing so much money we had to sell them," said Robertson, "but I would say that the Military Establishment is in a pretty business-like condition."

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, how anomalous you can get but it is pretty obvious that if Mr. Robertson is the right man to put the Pentagon on a business-like basis then the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Benson, has gotten the agriculture in this country in a horrible mess if this great expert, Mr. Robertson, can run the Pentagon but can't afford to keep his farm.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

AMENDING AGRICULTURAL MARKETING AGREEMENT ACT OF 1937

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 8384) to amend section 8c (2) of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8c (2) of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 (7 U. S. C. 608c (2)), as amended, is further amended by inserting the word "cranberries" between the words "and not including fruits, other than olives," and the words "and grapefruit, for canning or freezing" where they appear in said section.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NICHOLSON] is the author of this measure which was reported by the Committee on Agriculture. I would be very glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts if he desires me to do so at this time.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Colorado was up here awhile ago he said he put his bill in in March, and a rule was just reported out. Mr. Speaker, I never did get a rule, and I put mine in in January. But, I want to thank you very much for giving me an opportunity to present this bill.

Friends and neighbors of mine came to my house last Christmas and asked me to put in a bill that might help them overcome the condition that they are now in. The cranberry industry has lost money for the last 2 or 3 years. Every barrel that they pick and screen and put on the market costs them money. So, they wanted a marketing order.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether most of us know too much about these marketing orders, but this is only one out of a great many. I was surprised when I looked it up to find that there were marketing orders on citrus fruits; 12 on other fruits; 4 on tree nuts, that is, walnuts and pecans and so forth; and 65 on milk and milk products, which includes cheese and butter, and so forth. They found some fault because the Attorney General got an indictment against this organization a couple of years ago.

Mr. Speaker, all this order does is to allow these cranberry growers to go to the Department of Agriculture and submit plans so that they may get an order to do business. After the Department has had a public hearing on it, they set up rules and regulations by which the farmer must do in order to sell his fruit. Then it is brought back to the growers themselves and if two-thirds agree, the order goes into effect.

Now what is the matter with that?

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. What we want to know is what is a marketing order that enables them to sell? What is the nature of it?

Mr. NICHOLSON. They go to the Department and get an order. For instance, they might have something to do with the size of the berries, the price of the berries, anything that enters into the sale of the article.

Mr. MASON. You mean they cannot sell without this marketing order?

Mr. NICHOLSON. They can, but the Attorney General may get them for fixing prices. I just read to the gentleman from Illinois a number of orders that were in existence now, and what they were. Everybody has them, I suppose, except the cranberry people. The only change in the law this bill makes is that it puts the word "cranberries" between "olives" and "grapefruit."

Mr. GUBSER. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GUBSER. Does this affect cranberries for processing and canning as well as fresh cranberries?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, it does. Mr. Speaker, the district I represent raises more cranberries than the whole of the rest of the world put together, and the growers of cranberries there are composed of men who own from 1 acre up to 20 acres. There are only 2 or 3 big growers, and Members who have been screaming about helping small business have a chance here to get on the small-business wagon and take a ride with them.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman mean to say that our Thanksgiving and Christmas cranberries come from the gentleman's district?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, if you get the right kind; if you get the best, they come from my district.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Does this proposal contemplate fixing the price of cranberries?

Mr. NICHOLSON. No; it does not contemplate that.

Mr. KEATING. Could that be done under the proposed legislation?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I do not know whether it could or not—yes; they could establish a price for a box or a barrel of cranberries.

Mr. KEATING. Would the gentleman consider that this is a conservative measure?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I certainly would consider it a conservative measure. The people who are in this business are conservative businessmen. The livelihood of a great many of them depends upon this business. As I said in the first place, they have lost money. This may give them an opportunity to get to where they will be making money again.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. I quite agree with the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, who grows nearly as many cranberries and nearly as fine ones as we do in my district in New Jersey. This is a serious matter which deserves the support of the whole House.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, I have a telegram here from the American Farm Bureau Federation which supports the passage of this bill to include cranberries. It is addressed to the Honorable JOHN MCCORMACK, a Member whom we all respect and admire and who thinks that this is a good bill.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. PHILBIN. I want to compliment the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts for the excellent work he has done on this matter. I am in full agreement with everything he has said, and I intend to support his bill.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman from Massachusetts has been a very able legislator and has served his country well in the Congress of the United States. He has presented a bill worthy of our consideration. It is in the best interest of the people he represents. I congratulate him on the statement he has made here today.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I certainly thank the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. The gentleman spent one evening telling me about the cranberry industry and how difficult it was for the small growers to make any money. If this bill does anything to help them, I am for it.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I thank the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DODD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. I want to help the gentleman from Massachusetts. I am in favor of this measure. I think it is a sound one. I have had the opportunity to observe the gentleman now for two sessions. I think he is a remarkable and able legislator.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RIVERS. I want the gentleman to know I am going to vote for his bill. I do not know all the provisions in it, but I am certainly for it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE. As a Representative from the State of Maine which consumes cranberries produced in the gentleman's district, I want to commend the gentleman for bringing this bill to the floor.

Mr. MILLER of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Maryand. Can the gentleman tell us what the position of the Department of Agriculture is on his bill?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I do not have the least idea.

Mr. MILLER of Maryland. Can the gentleman give us some information as to why segments of the canning industry are opposed to it?

Mr. NICHOLSON. There are segments of the canning industry that are opposed to it. They always have been, because they are in a certain line of business, like canning corn, beans, fish, and a hundred and one other things, and they are afraid we want to get into that business. We have enough troubles with cranberries without inviting other troubles.

Mr. McINTIRE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. McINTIRE. I join with the gentleman in support of the legislation. I have been very much interested in the bill as it has been processed through the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MARSHALL. I came over here for the purpose of voting against the gentleman's bill, but he has been so convincing in his arguments that I have changed my mind and am going to support it.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ALBERT. This program has worked well with other products. I see no reason why cranberries should be discriminated against. I am for this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Wisconsin. I shall support the bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NICHOLSON].

With the exception of a few large cranberry corporations, the cranberry farmers of Wisconsin, as far as I can determine, are wholeheartedly in support of the legislation. As a member of the House Agriculture Committee, I attended all the hearings on the bill and supported the legislation in the committee. I have also informed a great number of my colleagues in the House that this legislation is desired by the great majority of cranberry farmers in my State.

I am glad I had the opportunity to help my colleague [Mr. NICHOLSON] on the bill and I hope it passes.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I would like to thank my good friend and colleague, Mr. JOHNSON, of Wisconsin, for all the assistance he has given me on this bill. He has worked unceasingly with me in an effort to have action taken on this legislation during this session. I am sure that the cranberry growers in Massachusetts as well as the cranberry growers in Wisconsin appreciate his wholehearted support of this bill. The people of Wisconsin can be justly proud in having such a conscientious, hard-working legislator as LESTER JOHNSON representing them in Washington.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. May I say to the gentleman I support his bill because I want to support the farmers of Massachusetts, and I hope the gentleman will help support the farmers of Iowa.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Massachusetts is evidencing great leadership in the way he is handling this bill on the floor. I join with the gentleman, and sincerely hope the bill will pass overwhelmingly by a voice vote.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]. May I add that if this bill passes, as we hope it will, it will be because of the great popularity of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NICHOLSON].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. I just want to say that the gentleman from Massachusetts has been my friend over the years, and I would vote for the bill even if it were a bad bill.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield.

Mr. McDONOUGH. I want to inform the gentleman I have enjoyed my association with him as a committee colleague, and I have enjoyed the popularity that he has in the House of Representatives. I think he has earned the support and respect of this House, and I hope his bill passes.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield.

Mr. CANFIELD. I am for this bill both on a personal and on a merit basis. The gentleman now in the well of the House who is the sponsor of this bill represents the Cape Cod district. I love to spend my summers in Cape Cod and when I go up to Cape Cod I delight in telling friends up there that I am a personal friend of their Congressman and for me that has been an open sesame.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, this takes a two-thirds vote and I hope it is unanimous.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, we have had such a fine testimonial meeting here that I am rather reluctant to say anything about this bill. It is very disturbing to me to have to oppose my very good friend from Cape Cod, the author of the bill, but there are things that should be of vital concern in connection with this type of legislation. I feel I must say something about the bill, and why I am opposed to its passage even under suspension of the rules. I wish my colleague from Massachusetts well and I am glad that there have been so many fine testimonials for him. But there are principles involved in this legislation which, probably, do not seem of great consequence to some, but it does create a monopoly in the production and processing of cranberries. The gentleman represents a district that produces and controls about 85 percent to 90 percent of the cranberries produced in this country. Under existing law, the cranberry growers have the right to have a marketing order in the marketing and production of fresh cranberries. This bill seeks to give a control over the processing of cranberries throughout the country, and with that control they will not only be able to dictate the price of cranberries under a marketing order for the sale of fresh cranberries, but also for the processing and sale, and quantity of fresh cranberries that goes into processing in this country. The men in the production of cranberries who also now control 85 percent of the processing of cranberries and who are for this bill were indicted by the Federal Government last April, in 1955. It is a long indictment.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I cannot yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That was in 1954.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. April 8, 1955, is the date of the indictment.

I am sure my friend recognizes the implications connected with his bill, but I am sure he is not aware of the extent of this bill if it is enacted into law, because it does give the growers of cranberries, and 2 large processors, now controlling 85 percent of the processing of cranberries in this country, a complete monopoly, and it removes the effect of the indictment that the present administration has secured against those cranberry producers that now control nearly all of the cranberry production in the country.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. HAND. I would like to associate myself with what the gentleman is saying. This bill is not for the benefit of the small grower but for the benefit of the monopolistic grower, very definitely, and is very detrimental to the interests of the processor. If I am correct in this, this is a bill to exempt from the antitrust laws people who are now violating the antitrust laws.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is the effect of it.

Mr. HAND. I yield to no one, in my affection for the gentleman from Massachusetts, but I do not like his bill. I hope it will be defeated.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. One reason for the indictment is that they put the smaller operators out of business and they have succeeded in that.

Mr. BEAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDERSEN. I yield.

Mr. BEAMER. Is it not true that this is an amendment to the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act, and we should read the complete act, for it means that if we exempt cranberries the next step will be tomatoes and corn and all the other canned products to which we have referred, and you may have a monopoly in those particular fields. I speak for Indiana and many other areas, that this is merely getting the camel's nose under the tent.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman for calling that to my attention. I might point out that our Committee on Agriculture has refused to include other commodities when it came to the processing and canning of those commodities. A year or so ago we refused to give a marketing order, including citrus fruits. Grapefruit was already under the order, but citrus fruits had been excluded. We also refused to amend the law for cling peaches. They can put it into operation for certain fruits and vegetables and asparagus, but they cannot go to the extent that this proposes for cranberries.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. I share with my colleagues great admiration and affection for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NICHOLSON] but I have been informed by processors in my area, who employ a great many people, that they are very much opposed to this legislation, because it adds cranberries to the list of other items which are already under these orders. These orders are detrimental to the interests of large numbers of our people for the benefit of only a few, so I must oppose this bill.

Will the gentleman point out specifically how such a marketing order will affect those in the canning industry, and elaborate on the reasons for their objections, because the gentleman is a recognized expert on that subject.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I do not claim to be an expert, and I thank the gentleman for the compliment, but it is the beginning of a long line of requests to amend the law to be included under the provisions of the marketing orders for many other commodities. I do not care whether it is cranberries or some other commodity, we should not give a monopoly to any group in this country, whether processors or canners.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. The big cranberry combine you are talking about does not exist, because 45 percent of the cranberry growers do not have anything to do with that anyway. This bill, as far as I am concerned, is a help only to the small growers throughout Massachusetts. I do not know about New Jersey or Wisconsin.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I recognize that, for I know the gentleman would never have introduced this if it had not been his idea that it helped the small grower. But if the National Cranberry Association is a small grower—they represent thousands of other growers and they also do the processing, and they, together with the United Cape Cod Cranberry Co. and a few other companies up there in that area, control 85 percent of the production and the processing of cranberries in the United States——

Mr. NICHOLSON. No; they do not.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I have it here in the indictment. I do not think the attorney general of the State of Massachusetts or the district attorney for that particular district would get an indictment against these defendants if they had not felt justified.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Now, listen——

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am sorry; I cannot yield; I do not have sufficient time.

Mr. MACK of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield briefly.

Mr. MACK of Washington. In my district there are a great many cranberry growers and they have plots of from 1 to 5 acres. These people are owners of these cooperative associations that do the packing, so it is small people who really own the packing plants, who do the canning, and they have small tracts, from 1 to 5 acres.

Mr. GUBSER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GUBSER. I commend the gentleman on the statement he is making.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to compliment the gentleman on his statement in opposition to this bill and state that I thoroughly agree with it.

If the effects of this bill were restricted to fresh cranberries only, I could heartily favor it; but since it includes processed or canned cranberries, I must oppose it. I represent one of the greatest canning centers in the United States. I have learned that the processing and marketing of canned foods represents a cycle which often consumes more than a full year. Under this bill, you would be placing the canning industry in the position of accepting quotas and other marketing conditions on the raw product which they use. This, of course, would have a tremendous effect on the cost of that raw product and the selling price which the canner must receive in order to make a fair profit. Yet, oftentimes the canner must wait a full year before he sells, and during that period of time marketing conditions may have changed, resulting in a selling price not justified by the investment in the raw product.

The principle involved here is serious and, in my opinion, should not be applied to anything but fresh or perishable commodities. This bill could well mean the start of more and more inclusions under Federal marketing orders of canned fruits and vegetables. It would well mean chaos to the great canning industry.

I strongly urge the defeat of this bill.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that H. R. 8384 has been brought up under suspension of the rules. By using this procedure all amendments to the pending legislation are barred from consideration by the House of Representatives.

We in Wisconsin have had considerable experience with marketing orders, particularly as they have been applied to milk producers. As I have stated in the House Agriculture Committee and on the floor of the House on several occasions, our experience in Wisconsin with marketing orders makes it imperative that to adequately protect the individual producer of an agricultural commodity several amendments are necessary and should be included in H. R. 8384 before this legislation is enacted into law.

The first amendment which I believe is necessary is a provision guaranteeing to each individual cranberry grower the opportunity of casting his ballot for or against the approval of such a marketing order as proposed by H. R. 8283. Many Members of the House may not be familiar with the procedure that is used in approving or disapproving marketing orders. At the present time it is possible for a market association or cooperative to cast the ballots for their member producers. In this way the two-thirds vote required for approval does not necessarily reflect the wishes of two-thirds of the individual producers.

In view of the fact that the motion before us today is to suspend the rules and preclude the consideration of amendments, I will be unable to offer my amendment assuring each individual cranberry grower a chance to vote his wishes regarding a marketing order on cranberries for canning or freezing.

The second amendment which I believe is most desirable for the House of Representatives to consider along with this legislation is the addition of a section to this bill which will assure that in the event 66⅔ percent of the cranberry growers individually vote in favor of the establishment of a Federal marketing order, future amendments to said marketing order can be adopted or rejected without affecting the order itself. Presently our dairy farmers in Wisconsin who are operating under Federal milk marketing orders have run into great difficulty because the regulations established by the Department of Agriculture provide that in the event an amendment to an order is rejected by the industry, the entire order becomes ineffective. Our experience in Wisconsin has convinced us that provisions must be written into the law providing that each amendment to a Federal marketing order should stand on its own feet. The rejection of any amendment should not nullify the order.

The two amendments which I have outlined above are necessary to give adequate protection to the individual cranberry growers in the United States. Thirty-four percent of our national cranberry production comes from Wisconsin. I have attempted to poll as many cranberry growers as possible. I did not receive any replies regarding this legislation from many of the growers that I contacted in our State. From my contacts, however, I could tell that there was not a unanimity of opinion regarding this legislation among the growers in my congressional district. It is therefore very desirable that the amendments which I feel are necessary to this legislation be adopted. I shall vote against suspending the rules on this legislation which will bar consideration of these amendments by the House of Representatives today.

Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent, I include in the RECORD of today's proceedings a letter received from Eatmor Cranberries, Inc., of Wisconsin Rapids, Wis.; 2 letters from Mr. B. C. Brazeau, president of Indian Trail Cranberry Growers, Inc., of Wisconsin Rapids, Wis.; and a wire from Mr. William Huffman, Jr., secretary-manager of the William F. Hon. MELVIN R. LAIRD,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN LAIRD: We are in receipt of your letter of February 7 along with a copy of bill H. R. 8384, relative to including canned and processed cranberries under the Federal marketing order.

We have sent copies of your letter and bill to our directors for their information and, I presume, you will be hearing from them shortly.

It is my understanding that Mr. C. A. Searles, president of our organization, has contacted you favorably regarding this bill.

We wish to thank you for your interest in this matter and informing us of this proposed legislation.

Very truly yours,

Congressman MELVIN R. LAIRD,
United States House of Representatives
Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN LAIRD: Reference is made to the House bill (H. R. 8384) permitting processing grade cranberries to be included under Federal marketing orders.

We are an agency which could be said to be representing about 24 Wisconsin cranberry growers. Our growers would represent perhaps about 15 percent of the Wisconsin production. We handle the sales for these growers and furnish technical and other services for their growing operations. The writer himself is a cranberry grower, who last year produced a little less than 9,000 barrels. This would be a little less than 1 percent of the national cranberry crop and a little less than 3 percent of the Wisconsin crop.

We wish to register our vigorous opposition to the proposed bill. It is our opinion that the growers in our organization would be solidly against it, and there is considerable opposition in other segments in the State. We consider the measure both unnecessary and undesirable. Some kind of fresh fruit grades for inspection purposes would be a good thing for the industry, but this can be easily accomplished without marketing orders. The difficulty that the cranberry industry has experienced in recent years stems from excessive carryovers. Great strides are being made at the present to eliminate these excesses, and it is entirely possible that the situation will be well in hand even this year.

Very truly yours,
INDIAN TRAIL, INC.,

INDIAN TRAIL
CRANBERRY GROWERS, INC.,
Wisconsin Rapids, Wis., June 13, 1956.
Hon. MELVIN LAIRD,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN LAIRD: I was very much interested in learning of the proceedings at the subcommittee hearing in connection with bill No. H. R. 8384 relating to legislation permitting processing grade cranberries to come under a Federal marketing order. There is one point that was touched upon in a rather indirect manner but which should probably receive considerably more emphasis. The national cranberry industry is unusual in the fact that one cooperative controls well over half the national cranberry crop. A second large cooperative controls another substantial percentage. Together they probably control over three-quarters of the national cranberry crop. The canning of cranberries is dominated by these two organizations, particularly the larger one.

A marketing order could regulate the grading by law in such a manner that many of the independents would not be able to market their fresh fruit in the normal way and would have to seek out processing outlets. These outlets are not readily available outside of these two cooperatives. Thus, a marketing order could have the effect of eliminating many of the independent operators and forcing them to seek out the security of one of the larger cooperatives in order to find a market for the berries graded out of the ordinary channels by provisions of an order. With this situation existing in the cranberry industry, a marketing order could put an end to some of the small and independent businesses. This does not seem to be consistent with the American idea of free enterprise or the democratic principle of protecting the minorities.

The issues connected with this legislation and with marketing orders have never really been put to the growers. I have been told by several people including some of those in favor of this legislation, that a marketing order would be turned down by a grower vote anyway. I believe this to be the case, for I have talked with a number of growers in the State of Wisconsin and have not found any outrightly favoring this procedure. I have heard of a few who are apparently at least in favor of the enabling legislation. However, it must be remembered that those who are promoting this idea have been at work for many months, whereas the opposition has made no attempt to organize as yet. We should like to defeat the idea at this stage rather than have the legislation passed and be put to the expense and effort of developing the opposition at a later stage.

In support of this legislation it has been said that the cranberry industry needs some grading standards. It is true that this would be helpful as a working basis in marketing. However, these are already in the process of being established, and this will be accomplished very satisfactorily without the necessity of any enabling legislation or any marketing order.

Sincerely,
B. C. BRAZEAU.

WILLIAM HUFFMAN, Jr.,
Secretary-Manager.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield myself 10 additional minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. ARENDS. Like all Members of the House, I have deep love and affection for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NICHOLSON], but I have had the opportunity to study this. Just recently a gentleman from my district who was former president of the National Canners' Association as well as of the Illinois Canners' Association, talked to me about this and he is quite afraid of what this might lead to eventually if it should be passed, and I think he had justifiable reason for believing as he does. Therefore I find myself in the position of opposing this legislation as it is here now before us under a suspension.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MILLER of California. Is not this equal to giving a green light to the setting up of a monopoly in the whole canning industry if you let them get by with this particular thing to the detriment of the people? Would it not establish a precedent to monopolize other facets of the canning industry?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. There is no question about that because other producing areas with different commodities have come before our committee and have tried to be included under the processing end of the marketing order law, and our committee has refused to permit them to come in.

I think this bill ought to go back to our committee for full and complete hearings on it and the implications in connection with it.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman from Wisconsin made the statement a moment ago that a rule had been granted by the Committee on Rules. I am not aware that any rule had been granted on this bill. I am certain that if a rule was granted it was not at the request of the chairman of the committee. I am quite sure the gentleman was mistaken about it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think the gentleman must have been in error. I am not aware of any rule having been granted.

Mr. MILLER of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. MILLER of Maryland. If this legislation were passed, might it not set an example that would be very embarrassing later on with respect to other fruits and vegetables and result perhaps in a great injustice done to our whole canning industry?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It would become exceedingly difficult to refuse others after we let one commodity get in, and I am not against cranberries.

Mr. BOYLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BOYLE. I hope the gentleman is not going to put too much faith in an indictment. I think we generally know that an indictment is scarcely of any probative value. Without going into the controversy as to the merits of this bill, I think we can generally agree that an indictment is not proof of the facts alleged.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Well, I would hate to have anybody's friends indicted.

Mr. ALLEN of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ALLEN of California. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman in his statement.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself with the gentleman from Minnesota in this matter. I feel that the Wisconsin canners feel as he does about it.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] has correctly stated that while this bill seems quite innocuous, there is a principle involved which could do great harm to the canning industry and to the vegetable growers of the country. The simple fact is that this legislation would make it possible for the creation of a monopoly by those who are producing and processing cranberries.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a matter involving cranberries alone. It cuts across the whole canning industry. Under existing law, cranberry growers have the right to have a marketing order in the marketing and production of fresh cranberries. This bill would give them control over the processing of cranberries throughout the country. If such a favorable advantage were given to them, this industry would be in a position to dictate the price not only of cranberries under a market order but also for the processing and sale and quantity of fresh cranberries that goes into processing all over the country. I do not believe that we, today, should make such an eventuality possible.

I am informed that if the bill is approved it would, as I have already stated, make a monopoly possible and under existing conditions this monopoly would be controlled by two canners who already have a monopoly of 90 percent of the production of canned cranberries. This body should be fully advised of the possibilities which exist if this bill is written into law. I trust it will be defeated, notwithstanding my very great affection for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NICHOLSON].

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish also to associate myself with the viewpoint that has been expressed by the gentleman from Minnesota. I am inclined to feel that there is protection at the present time for the producers of cranberries. But this goes a step forward and the opening of this door can lead to a very great deal of fear and possible detriment to the general canning industry. Therefore, I would be opposed to this bill for the reasons the gentleman has given and those I have just given.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself with the gentleman from Minnesota on this matter. I believe he has made some very important points.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, in conclusion let me say that the test here is whether you favor monopoly in a particular line of activity or you are against it. If you are for a monopoly in cranberries and in the production and the processing of cranberries, then you should vote for the bill. If you are opposed to that, then you should vote against the bill.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES. The committee has approved this bill and the Department of Agriculture has approved the bill. I do not understand the gentleman's objections. Many other items are already included in present legislation. I do not understand why olives and grapefruit are allowed and cranberries denied the same opportunity.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am sorry I have not made myself clear to the gentleman.

Mr. BATES. Is it not correct that the Department of Agriculture is in favor of this bill?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I believe so, but the Department of Agriculture might also be in error in their judgment as to the merits of this bill.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I wish to associate myself with the gentleman's viewpoint.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, this bill is more important than it seems, and it is unfortunate that it should appear under suspension of rules in the closing hours of the session, so that it cannot receive the attention of the membership that it deserves. Very briefly, the bill exempts from antitrust provisions marketing agreements for processed cranberries. This means most of the market, because most cranberries are now processed. What happens under the proposal is that if two-thirds of the producers, by number or by volume, agree to a marketing order and 50 percent of the handlers likewise agree, everybody is bound by the agreement, and the marketing agreement is thereby exempt from the provisions of the antitrust law. You will note that the language "by number or by volume" means that one large grower could pretty much control the situation, even though a number of small growers might be opposed.

Mr. Speaker, it may well be that some growers may favor this legislation, although they have not told me so, and I do not think it would ultimately be to their benefit. Every conversation or message that I have received from my district opposes the bill. I have not been able to find a list of those favoring it, because another vice of the present proceeding is that we are going forward without having printed hearings on the bill available to us.

The canners and processors of cranberries are all opposed and, of course, it is not in the interest of consumers.

I especially object to this type of proceeding. This bill was introduced in the House on January 12, 1956. During all the intervening months, no action whatever was taken on it. It is a poor proceeding to attempt to jam it through in the closing hours with 40 minutes of consideration and no hearings available.

The sponsors of the bills, of course, are the National Cranberry Association, who are already in legal trouble as a result of monopolistic practices. These practices force the small independents to pay much higher prices, and makes it difficult if not impossible for them to compete. I have a memorandum which indicates as follows:

> The processing industries, canners and freezers, have vigorously opposed these efforts because they know that the controls provided for in the marketing law were not designed for crops for processing or adapted to canned or frozen fruits or vegetables. Processors also know that the proposed controls would adversely affect the growers of these commodities. The controls could take away the grower's freedom of choice in making up production schedules, limit his activities to historical patterns, and ultimately price his product off of grocers' shelves.
> Canners and freezers likewise know that unnecessary production and marketing controls adversely affect consumers by increasing the price of processed fruits and vegetables and by limiting the selection of quality, grade, size, and variety. Most important, the complete absence of any need is a compelling reason for opposing artificial and arbitrary production and marketing controls over canned and frozen fruits and vegetables. The fact is that farmers and canners and freezers have worked out their economic salvation without the necessity for Federal Government intervention.

A marketing order can control quantity and quality, limit production, allocate available fruit, limit supply for each consumer market, and generally apply a system of controls which is contrary to our whole system.

I am persuaded, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is clearly not in the public interest, and I hope it will be defeated, although I have my doubts since the Democratic leader of the House has come out strongly in favor of it.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBESON].

Mr. ROBESON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a high regard for the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts and I have equally an effectionate regard for him.

I happen to represent a district in which are located a great many canners and I share the concern of the gentleman from Minnesota regarding this bill. I also represent a great many people who like to eat a cranberry or two on their turkey. I think we should give more consideration to the merits of a bill of this sort. As of the present time, I am opposed to it and there seems to be a great deal of opposition among the people, whether there is opposition among their Representatives or not. I think we better come back and consider the merits of the bill and what it is we are voting for. I do not know whether this would create a monopoly or not. However, I am not in favor of monopolies if that is the intent of the bill and, therefore, I express opposition to the measure.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to speak in favor of the bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts, a long time speaker of the house there, a distinguished member of that legislature. He is accused here, and without reason, of doing something he should not do, promoting a monopoly for the cranberry boys, and an indictment is handed out. Now, if this is true, I will say to my colleague, as much as we favor your bill, I do not want to go to jail over the thing. I am worried to death about this monopoly issue. I own a few acres of land, and they put wheat and corn on it. Only last week I got a notice from the Department of Agriculture—I have a friend who does the work on the farm; I just pay the losses—that I must sign up if he or I want to grow some wheat. Who is running that monopoly on the production of wheat? My heart bleeds. Now they want to take in cranberries, which goes well with turkey along about Thanksgiving and Christmas, and turkeys are cheap now. I do not take any stock in that monopoly argument. What are you afraid of? A year ago you were afraid of the Communists in Russia; now you are afraid of the cranberry growers. Think of it. There will be a monopoly here if this bill goes through. That is the talk. Of course it will not get through the Senate. And, if you let the cranberry growers continue to grow and make a little something, then the rest of the fellows, the blueberry growers—we have those in my district—and the blackberry growers and the red raspberry and the black raspberries and all the other raspberries—laugh if you want to—will be telling us what to eat because they will have a monopoly. I do get confused. I have been frightened half to death in the last 6 months and longer, to learn what is going to happen to our country here if we do not give other nations everything they want. And then these three neutralists, I think they call them—did you see that cartoon in the Tribune yesterday, the pigs in the pokes, where we spend all this money for those three nations which are now neutrals? I want to say to my good friends on the Republican side and the farmers who had so much legislation in their behalf, and most of which they did not, do not, want.

May I ask my colleagues who are so fearful of monopoly—why is it that I cannot grow and sell what I wish on the 2 or 3 acres I own? Just who has a monopoly of growing wheat? It does not seem to me they ought to come in here and be squawking about monopoly. I wonder, too, all of you, why so many got up and expressed such great affection and respect for the gentleman from Massachusetts, paid him so many compliments, why they now are disposed to cut his throat on the ground that he is promoting a monopoly. It does not sound right to me.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAVIN].

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, it is quite well known that I am not a farmer nor am I an agricultural expert. However, I listened for weeks on agricultural legislation; confusion compounded on confusion that no one can readily understand any legislative proposals whether on cranberries or wheat. I listened to the bleeding hearts for the little farmers; they have had their say for many weeks and all were interested in the results as it concerns their own respective districts. Now my very good friend from Massachusetts, whom I greatly admire, has a little problem that concerns cranberries, so all the agricultural sections of the country move in on him. I note that my colleagues, who represent wheat, corn, cotton, soybeans, peanuts, butter, cheese, or whatever their districts represent, are alert and ready to champion the cause for the products grown in their respective districts. So, what is the matter with my friend presenting his case for cranberries? The way his proposal has been challenged it would appear the Members are indignant that he would even mention cranberries.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAVIN. I decline to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota. All I want to say to my friend from Minnesota is that you are sometimes wrong. I have listened to you for years. I listened to the gentleman from out in Minnesota tell the House that if you put colored margarine on the market, you would ruin the butter business; put colored oleo on the market and the butter business would be finished. Yet, the facts are that you were wrong; it may be that you are wrong today about the cranberry business. The facts are that the butter business has not gone to pieces, it has increased in volume, and we are consuming more butter now than we ever did. So, maybe the cranberry growers want legislation to protect their industry as does every other branch of our agricultural life. I will support the legislation of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN there were—ayes 119, noes 62.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, on this I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. COOLEY and Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 127, noes 58.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TAX ON ADMISSIONS

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9875) amending the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that the tax on admissions shall apply only with respect to that portion of the amount paid for any admission which is in excess of $1, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Line 6, strike out "$1" and insert "90 cents."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that the tax on admissions shall apply only if the amount paid for the admission exceeds 90 cents."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has amended H. R. 9875. As you will recall that bill which was passed by the House on July 21, 1956, increased the exemption from the Federal excise tax on admissions from 50 cents to $1.

The Senate amendment which goes to the level of the exemption reduces the exemption granted under the House bill from $1 to 90 cents. The Senate report indicates that this action was taken because it was felt that exemption of 90 cents is sufficient to provide relief for the small theaters who are in the most need of relief and to cut the revenue loss to be expected from the bill. It was estimated that the revenue loss which would result from the House bill would amount to $70 million. As a result of the Senate amendment, the revenue loss which can be expected under the bill is $60 million.

I suggest that the House agree to the Senate amendment.

MONEYS RECEIVED FROM NATIONAL FORESTS

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 3436) to provide that sums paid to States from moneys received from national forests may be used for governmental purposes other than for the benefit of public schools and public roads, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Speaker. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask for some explanation on this bill? In my State, the public schools receive a good deal of their money from this source, and I would like to get some justification for taking away this money at this time.

Mr. COOLEY. It does not take away any funds from the schools. It provides for an additional use that the money can be used for. But, I would prefer to yield to the author of the bill, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN].

Mr. HORAN. On February 2 of this year, I introduced this bill. Since 1908, we have been returning to counties where stumpage is cut, 25 percent of the forest receipts. In 1908, and there was then a great need for schools and roads, a rider on the appropriation bill for that year enacted into law and specified that that money had to be spent for schools and roads and for no other purpose. Then in 1911, the Watershed Act, known as the Weeks Act, included the same proviso. It was also inserted in the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Land Acquisition Act. But since that time, Federal and various State laws have made it possible for the counties, even the poorer counties to take care of their schools and roads. There are many of them in my own district and many of them in Pennsylvania and northern California. Some of your poorer counties cannot balance their budget for other governmental purposes. This does not require any appropriation or anything of that sort. They have been getting this money for about 50 years. This merely allows the county government which is some of the best government that we have in this country because it is home folks, to balance their county budget.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. If I understood the gentleman correctly, the individual counties will still be getting the same amount of money, but they will be allowed to use it in their own discretion rather than be compelled to spend it only on schools and roads?

Mr. HORAN. That is right—for schools, roads, and other governmental purposes.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. But presumably, the purpose of this is that they want to convert from schools and to other uses. Is that correct?

Mr. HORAN. Many of the counties are very well fixed as far as roads and schools are concerned, but they are hard put to it to balance the other parts of their budgets.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw by reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I object to consideration of H. R. 3436. The facts concerning this bill should, I believe, be clearly recorded. H. R. 3436 was first introduced on February 2, 1955. Except for an executive meeting, no hearings were held on it in a year and a half. Although hearings were scheduled for June 29 of this year, I have been unable to learn that they were in fact held. Certainly the Office of Education in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare was not heard; yet it has a crucial stake in this matter and should have been an indispensible witness.

On July 25, this bill was suddenly reported and placed on the consent calendar and, the very next day, was called up. I objected and will continue to object to its consideration under these circumstances. Even the committee report is not yet available. I do not believe that the committee had a report from the Department of Agriculture. I know that it had no report from the Budget Bureau or the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. In fact, discussions are presently going on between Agriculture and HEW, in an attempt to reach some conclusions as to the merits of this bill. And although there has been no official word, it is my clear understanding that HEW does not favor this legislation.

All of this, of course, concerns only the manner in which the bill has been handled. Far more important are its merits—or rather lack of merits. Under present law, every State in which there are national forests receives 25 percent of the total revenues from these lands for specific use for schools and roads. In my own State of Oregon, these funds are, by statute allocated to the counties on a basis of 75 percent for roads, 25 percent for schools. In Washington, no specific division of the funds is required by law, though efforts are being made to enact such a statute. In Oregon, schools received over one and a half million dollars from this source in 1954. In Washington, schools received $1,229,000 in 1954, $1,617,000 in 1955. Clearly, these are a substantial and important source of help to our hard-pressed schools.

This bill now proposes to make these funds available to the counties for general governmental purposes. Every school official I have talked to—and they are numerous—is vehemently opposed. Every one of them says that, if this were done, the schools would simply lose out. Local property taxes and State taxes bear the bulk of school costs, but each county bears the burden of county government. Understandably, county commissioners would be powerfully influenced to use this money for county expenses. They could then shift virtually all the school costs to the local community and the State. To pass this bill would mean that the schools would lose these desperately needed funds.

A few years ago, a similar provision of law gave to schools in Oregon counties an earmarked share of revenues from the so-called O and C lands in Oregon. An Oregon Senator, since defeated, pushed through a bill like this one, making those school funds available for general county use. What was the result? In almost every case, the schools suffered. One county took the money from the schools and spent it instead on a new courthouse. In another county, the superintendent of schools tells me that, since the law was changed, schools have received absolutely no money from this previous source of funds. Our former Senator may have been willing to sacrifice the schools in this way; I am not.

The Washington State Commissioner of Education has advised me that, contrary to statements made on the floor of this House, Washington's schools badly need this money. Every school official I have talked to in Oregon says the same thing—and says further that if this bill goes through, they will lose this revenue.

I am not unmindful of the problems our counties face in trying to meet their costs of Government. I am not unsympathetic to their needs. As a citizen, I will give them my wholehearted support in any wise program to meet these problems. But this is emphatically not the way to do it. It is a false and foolish solution to rob our schools in order to pay for our courthouses. In this prosperous country, our schools are already inexcusably starved for funds. Is it really true that we must sacrifice our children still further, take money from their schools to meet our other obligations of Government? I do not believe it. This is asking our children to bear our burdens for us. It is just plain wrong, and no amount of argument will make it right.

The people closest to this problem are the local school people in our States and counties. They are the ones who, every day, have to face this terrible problem of trying to give our children a decent education without enough money to do the job. To show how they feel I would like to include here the telegrams I have received just since this bill came up today:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose there is any objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS TO ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 11709) to amend Public Law 506, 84th Congress, second session, to increase the authorization for appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission for acquisition or condemnation of real property or any facilities, or for plant or facility acquisition, construction, or expansion, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 101 of Pub-Law 506, 84th Congress, 2d session, is hereby amended by striking the figure "$295,495,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the figure "$319,595,000."

SEC. 2. Section 101 (c) 2 of Public Law 506, 84th Congress, 2d session, is amended by striking the figure "$15,900,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the figure "$25,000,000."

SEC. 3. Section 101 (c) of Public Law 506, 84th Congress, 2d session, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection, reading:

"10. Project 57–c–10, amended reactor development project, $15,000,000."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second is considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 11709 is a bill to amend Public Law 506, 84th Congress, 2d session, enacted earlier this year, to authorize an increase in the Atomic Energy Commission appropriation for fiscal year 1957, of $24,100,000. Public Law 506 authorized $295,495,000.

This increase in appropriation must be authorized in conformance with section 261 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended.

Appropriations hereby authorized would be used for "acquisition or condemnation of real property or any facilities, or for plant or facility acquisition, construction or expansion, and for other purposes."

Subsequent to the enactment of Public Law 506, the Atomic Energy Commission determined that additional appropriations would be needed to carry on expanded activities on two highly important research and development programs.

One program is a recently initiated, high-priority undertaking requested by the military. It will be necessary for the AEC to construct new laboratory facilities on a modest scale at two of its important weapons research laboratories. In addition certain facilities, including instrumentation, must be constructed at one of its test sites. This activity is estimated to cost $9,100,000.

The second important program, requiring additional funds is the important civilian reactor development program. The AEC has determined that it will need an additional $15 million during fiscal year 1957 to finance its research and development commitments already made to private industry. Under its current civilian power reactor development program, the AEC also envisions the possible necessity of constructing fuel element fabrication and reclaiming facilities, and to undertake additional development work in cooperation with private industry if any such new proposals are made.

I would add, at this point, the above-mentioned $15 million requested by AEC to design and construct new types of power reactors was requested by AEC subsequent to the submission of its original fiscal 1957 budget. It has no relationship to the accelerated civilian power program proposed in the legislation considered by the House last Tuesday (H. R. 12061).

It is vitally important to the AEC that this authorizing legislation be passed. As you recall, the second supplemental appropriation bill passed by the House last Tuesday night contained a proviso appropriating the $24,100,000 required for this program and authorized by this bill and subject to the passage of this bill. If this bill fails to pass neither the Senate Appropriations Committee nor the conferees can approve the appropriation of this money.

The legislation subcommittee of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy heard testimony from AEC witnesses justifying this increased authorization. The joint committee has favorably reported out H. R. 11709 and recommends that the bill do pass.

I feel I can speak for all of my colleagues on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy in urging immediate favorable action on H. R. 11709.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM], has stated the facts with reference to this bill. There are no requests for time on this side.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, as amended?

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

House Resolution 589 was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. There are a great many bills with Senate amendments. I think they can go over until tomorrow. Unless we get along with some of the rules which have been granted, it will be impossible to get these bills considered in the House. Tomorrow will be too late.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAWSON].

PAYMENT OF TRAVEL AND TRANSPORTATION COST FOR PERSONS SELECTED FOR APPOINTMENT IN CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES AND ALASKA

Mr. DAWSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 11515) to amend section 7 of the Administrative Expenses Act of 1946, as amended, to provide for the payment of travel and transportation cost for persons selected for appointment to certain positions in the continental United States and Alaska, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the Administrative Expenses Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 808, as amended, 5 U. S. C. 73b–3) is further amended by inserting "(a)" after the section number and by adding at the end thereof new subsections as follows:

"(b) Appropriations for the departments shall be available in accordance with regulations prescribed by the President, for expenses of travel of persons selected for appointment to positions in the continental United States and Alaska for which there is determined by the Civil Service Commission to be a manpower shortage and for expenses of transportation of their immediate families and their household goods and personal effects and for advances of funds to the extent authorized by section 1 (a) and (b) of this act, from their places of actual residence at time of selection to their first duty station. Such travel expenses may include per diem and mileage allowance for persons selected for appointment as provided for civilian officers and employees by the Travel Expense Act of 1949, as amended. Travel and transportation expenses may be allowed whether the person selected for appointment has been appointed or not at the time of such travel. However, the travel and transportation expenses authorized by this subsection shall not be allowed unless the person selected for appointment shall agree in writing to remain in the Government service for 12 months following his appointment unless separated for reasons beyond his control and acceptable to the department or agency concerned. In case of violation of such agreement, any moneys expended by the United States on account of such travel and transportation shall be recoverable from the individual concerned as a debt due the United States.

"(c) Appropriations for the departments shall be available in accordance with regulations prescribed by the President for expenses of travel while away from their homes or regular places of business of persons who are found qualified to perform in positions for which there is determined by the Civil Service Commission to be a manpower shortage and who are invited by an agency or department to visit it for purposes connected with employment. Such travel expenses may include per diem in lieu of subsistence and mileage allowance as provided for civilian officers and employees by the Travel Expense Act of 1949, as amended.

"(d) The authority of the Civil Service Commission to determine for purposes of this act positions for which there is a manpower shortage shall not be delegated. The provisions of subsections (b) and (c) of section 7 of this act shall expire 5 years from the date of their enactment into law."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAWSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, as amended?

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING CONVEYANCE OF THE WILMINGTON, N. C., RESERVE SHIPYARD

C., in exchange for certain lands to be conveyed by the North Carolina State Ports Authority to the United States, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to convey to the North Carolina State Ports Authority all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to so much of the lands to which the United States has title on the date of conveyance comprising the Wilmington (North Carolina) reserve shipyard, subject to the general laws of the United States, and subject to the provisions and reservations set forth in this act, said lands being located in New Hanover County, N. SEC. 7. The conveyance authorized in section 1 shall not be consummated until an appropriation has been made pursuant to the authorization in section 6 hereof.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GROSS. I demand a second so we can have just a word of explanation on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection a second is considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. May I ask the gentleman whether this is one of the bills that was on the Consent Calendar this morning?

Mr. BONNER. It was one that was passed over. I asked myself that it be passed over so that it could be considered in this manner.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill briefly?

Mr. BONNER. Yes. At Wilmington, N. C., the Maritime Commission has one of the standby reserve shipyards. The city of Wilmington has grown up around this shipyard. A 7-mile track running through the city supplies the shipyard. The port of Wilmington has grown a great deal. The State port authority offers to give the Maritime Commission more land at the site of the reserve fleet, than there is in this standby yard.

The committee employed an expert builder, an engineer, in fact, the engineer who built this yard, to go down and survey the property and ascertain whether or not it was a fair and proper exchange.

The engineer reported back to the committee—and it is in the hearings—that you could not build modern ships at this shipyard because there was not enough depth in the property and there was not enough available property around it to take care of material; and the spur railroad track could not supply the shipyard with material were it in full operation and also supply the industrial area that has grown up around the shipyard.

Mr. GROSS. May I ask the gentleman if this bill was previously objected to and passed over without prejudice?

Mr. BONNER. No; but since the gentleman has asked that question I would like to give some other facts about it.

The bill contains a proviso that the city will pay some money to the Federal Maritime Commission if it is found there is a difference in the values of the properties to be exchanged and that that should be done.

The committee went down to look at this shipyard. Its present condition is deplorable. It would have to be rebuilt from the ground up.

I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. TOLLEFSON].

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee has called attention to a committee amendment providing that if after appraisal there is found to be a difference in value of the property in favor of the Federal Government that the State shall reimburse the Federal Government for the difference.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The questions is: Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT OF 1938

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill S. 3956 to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "American Samoa Labor Standards Amendments of 1956."

SEC. 2. Section 6 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (2) in subsection (a), and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following new paragraph:

"(3) if such employee is employed in American Samoa, not less than the applicable rate established by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with recommendations of a special industry committee or committees which he shall appoint in the same manner and pursuant to the same provisions as are now applicable to the special industry committees provided for Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands by this act. Each such committee shall have the same powers and duties and shall apply the same standards with respect to the application of the provisions of this act to employees employed in American Samoa as pertain to special industry committees established under section 5 with respect to employees employed in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands. The minimum wage rate thus established shall not exceed the rate prescribed in paragraph (1) of this subsection."

SEC. 3. Section 13 of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection (e):

"(e) The provisions of section 7 shall not apply with respect to employees for whom the Secretary of Labor is authorized to establish minimum wage rates as provided in section 6 (a) (3), except with respect to employees for whom such rates are in effect; and with respect to such employees the Secretary may make rules and regulations providing reasonable limitations and allowing reasonable variations, tolerances, and exemptions to and from any or all of the provisions of section 7 if he shall find, after a public hearing on the matter, and taking into account the factors set forth in section 6 (a) (3), that economic conditions warrant such action."

SEC. 4. Section 16 of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection (d):

"(d) In any action or proceeding commenced prior to, on, or after the date of enactment of this subsection, no employer shall be subject to any liability or punishment under this act or the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947 on account of his failure to comply with any provision or provisions of such acts with respect to work performed in a possession named in section 6 (a) (3) at any time prior to the establishment by the Secretary, as provided therein, of a minimum wage rate applicable to such work."

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, I fully support and I am happy to see this worthy bill come to passage in the Congress. The work being done in Samoa for the development of a sound industry and to raise the economy of American Samoans does credit to our Government and to the private enterprise devoted to the task. It would only be proper, however, to point out that the Congress has not solved a most pressing problem for which H. R. 11799 was designed. I sincerely hope that all interested groups and particularly organized labor, the Department of State and the Department of Defense will come to a satisfactory agreement in the intervening months before the new Congress assembles. If they do so, legislation can be speeded in the next Congress and I am certain that there can be substantial agreement amongst the members of the Committee on Education and Labor.

The passage of S. 3956 clearly indicates the confidence of this Congress in the good faith and in the high standards of operation and cooperation being displayed by all concerned in the continued improvement and development of those who live in American Samoa.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider and a similar House bill (H. R. 11799) and H. Res. 600 were laid on the table.

AMENDING CIVIL AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Resolution 602 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, upon the adoption of this resolution, it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R.

8902) to amend subsection 406 (b) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] and pending that yield myself such time as I may consume.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, as the reading of the resolution indicates, this is an open rule providing for an hour's general debate on the bill H. R. 8902 to amend subsection 406 (b) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 as amended.

The purpose of this bill is to assist subsidized air carriers in buying new aircraft. It provides that in determining the subsidy element of rates to be paid to air carriers for the transportation of mail, the Civil Aeronautics Board shall not take into account net capital gains realized by the carriers from the sale or other disposition of depreciable property used in their normal operations provided that the net gain so realized is reinvested in other equipment within a reasonable time to be determined by the Board.

The bill does not affect the taxability of capital gains realized by the air carriers.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, all I know about this bill is what I have heard here today. However, after extensive hearings in the other body by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as I understand it, the committee reported it unanimously. The bill then went to the floor of the other body and with the entire membership present it was passed unanimously there.

It came to the House and it is my understanding that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce here voted it out practically unanimously, with the exception of one Member.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON].

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I have always understood that we should not refer to actions in the other body. In the course of trying to place facts before the Members of this House I have refrained from doing that and I am not going to violate that rule at this time, even though reference has been made to a vote there and to an alleged attendance of "the entire membership" being present, other than to state flatly that neither assertion is correct.

May I add that there was nothing like unanimity of opinion in the other body on the essential amendment which I hope may be passed upon by the House, an amendment suggested by the Bureau of the Budget, which has the complete and wholehearted endorsement of the General Accounting Office, the Comptroller General, the Vice Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, and also the endorsement of our colleague, the then Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, Hon. Ross Rizley. It is true two other members of the Civil Aeronautics Board have supported this bill but, I submit, with very little persuasiveness.

I do not intend to impose on the House here today with any detailed argument pro or con with reference to the bill. It is now 13 minutes past 3 o'clock. We came in this morning at 10 o'clock. Last night I sat on this floor and heard the statement made that this bill would be called up before any other legislative business. You know what the present situation is.

I regret deeply there are not more Members present to express their own convictions in the Committee of the Whole as to this particular measure, because, in my honest judgment, it is a windfall of the worst kind. It is discrimination on discrimination and if it is passed here over the protest of every department in the Government, we will all live to regret that action. Yet, considering the kind of a program we have had to face this week, certainly those who are not here now cannot be criticized fairly.

I am sorry that there are only 30 minutes on each side to debate the complex and difficult issues in this matter, but perhaps that is not unusual, because if you will ask one of the boys to bring you the hearings on this bill you will find at the back end of a hearing labeled "Civil Air Policy" there are a few pages devoted to this bill. If you examine those hearings and ask some questions, I do not think my colleagues on the subcommittee will dispute the fact that they were under certain pressure the morning of the hearing.

I want to pay tribute to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER]. Yesterday he took this floor and admitted that the membership of this House voted on a bill without knowing what they were doing. He admitted that the amendment he offered had been hastily drawn; that the error had not been discovered at the time, and he said: I regret this mistake exceedingly.

And, this is the significant thing I want to repeat to the few of you who are here at this time:

> And, while it illustrates the difficulty of legislating in this hurried fashion in these dying days of this Congress, I must take full responsibility for the error.

And, that is characteristic of that gentleman. He is willing to stand up and take the responsibility publicly for an unfortunate incident yesterday afternoon. It is in the RECORD of yesterday at page 14461, rollcall 119, 92 for and 299 against. And, he added:

> Therefore, the vote just taken was not a fair test of the sentiments in this House on the public-housing question.

We should, and I know we do, respect and honor that sort of complete honesty which always characterizes the gentleman's conduct here, even when we disagree with him on an issue before us.

I submit to you that on this matter which does not have the support officially of a single agency of the Federal Government but has the active opposition of people who have wide experience, who have established reputations of competency, who know what they are talking about should receive something more than 30 minutes consideration on a side, particularly when I happen to be the only one from the committee, as far as I know, who is going to speak in opposition to this bill and to this rule. I assume my colleagues and my friends on the committee will want all their time, and they should have it. But surely who have a right to know the reasons for opposition.

This is not a pleasant position I have this afternoon. I do not enjoy it. I would infinitely rather prefer to have avoided coming to the floor and taking issue on this matter, but I cannot escape that duty and I will not try to do so. I do not care whether there are 1, 2, 3, 5, 10, or 50 people on this floor who may vote in opposition to this proposal or for the amendment I want to submit to you. Now, if a point of order is made, possibly it will not be before you, but I shall offer it. I think we have as much right to consider a serious suggestion of the Bureau of the Budget as to this kind of a bill, divorced from technicalities, as the other body has.

There are a lot more things I wish I had time to say about this bill. But we are confronted with a strict time limitation. While I think that is most unfortunate, we must do the best we can to understand the issues pro and con and the clear, cold facts. If we can do that, this bill will not pass here.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HESELTON. Is it in order for me, unless I obtain the consent of the gentleman from Mississippi, to offer an amendment to the rule?

The SPEAKER. The only way the gentleman can offer an amendment is if the gentleman in charge of the rule will yield for that purpose and for that purpose only.

Mr. HESELTON. May I inquire whether the gentleman would permit me to offer an amendment which would extend the time 30 minutes?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's silence indicates refusal.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, this bill was considered by the Subcommittee on Transportation of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and agreed to unanimously by the subcommitte. It was brought to the full committee. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON] had a very urgent call somewhere else at the time the vote was being taken, and the vote was unanimous without him. The gentleman has filed a minority report to this bill, which he has the privilege of doing, of course, and he has the privilege of feeling as strongly in the matter as he would like.

But the bill itself arises because of certain language contained in the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 which has been interpreted both by a majority of the Civil Aeronautics Board as it was then constituted and the Supreme Court differently from what I believe was the original intention of the Congress and certainly the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

There is one member of the committee present who was a member at the time the Civil Aeronautics Bill was passed, but that language is as follows:

> After saying that the Civil Aeronautics Board in fixing mail pay and subsidy for air carriers shall take into consideration the need of each such carrier for compensation sufficient together with all other revenue of the carrier to enable such carrier to maintain and continue development of air transportation to the extent and of the character and quality required for the commerce of the United States, and the Postal Service and the national defense.

In a case which was brought up on an entirely different subject but affecting that portion of the act the Supreme Court held that—

> Income from all sources such as the sale of flight equipment must be counted in determining the all-other-income provision referred to.

The Board had taken the position that it could disregard for this purpose that part of the income which the carrier received from the sale of its routes. That is in the Supreme Court case. The Board's purpose in doing so was to safeguard the incentive for future voluntary route transfers. However, the Court said there was no justification in the law for this position of the Board.

The Board had prior thereto permitted the sale of flight equipment—not only permitted it, they could not stop it—but any profits that might arise from the sale of flight equipment were considered in a time of open rates—that is, when rates were not fixed to be a part of the other income, but during closed rate periods when the rate was set—that such capital gains from the sale of assets were not considered as other income. The Board believes it is necessary for them in view of this decision of the Supreme Court to open the rates of subsidized carriers and consequently to leave free until another determination has been made this question.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. Then this bill provides that when they sell outmoded equipment that money shall be considered as capital gains and not as income for tax purposes?

Mr. HINSHAW. No, it is the profit from the sale, not the sale itself.

Mr. MASON. Yes. The profit from the sale shall be considered as capital gains and not as income.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is correct.

Mr. PATTERSON. After the tax is paid.

Mr. HINSHAW. After the capital gains tax has been paid. It has nothing to do with the tax being paid.

Mr. MASON. No, but this substitutes capital gains for the profits on the sale instead of income gains.

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes, not profits from operation.

Mr. MORANO. If the gentleman will yield, provided, of course, that the money is reinvested.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is exactly what I was going to say.

May I add to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], provided that the funds realized as profit should be reinvested in other similar equipment within a reasonable period of time.

Mr. MORANO. That is the point I wanted to make.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. In order that we can clear up this point so there will be no misunderstanding about it, there is no subsidy here for any capital gain for any other provision which they provide. This bill merely provides that when airline companies have capital gains from the sale of obsolete or secondhand equipment, when applied to the purchase of new equipment, their subsidy will not be reduced as the result of that transaction.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is the effect of it.

Mr. HARRIS. It in no way changes the capital gains provision.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is correct. It in no way changes that provision.

The companies affected by this act are Alaska Airlines, Pacific Northern Airlines, Continental Airlines, Northeast Airlines, Pan American Airlines, Panagra Airlines, Braniff Airlines, 13 local service carriers which I shall not name, 3 helicopter carriers which I shall not name, and about half a dozen local Alaska carriers, and the Hawaiian carriers.

The ones it does not affect at the present time are American Airlines, Eastern Airlines, TWA, United Airlines, Western Airlines, and for the time being Northwest and Delta. I say for the time being because they have been off subsidy for a very brief period and might have to go back on again.

These airplanes which have a value of something like $900 million total will become reduced in value, but on the other hand there is a very strong market at the present time for secondhand airplanes. Their values on the market are much higher than was anticipated at the time. As a matter of fact, it is possible to get more for an airplane than the original cost even after it has been used up, so to speak, through 8 or 10 years of use. There is a reason for that which I shall not go into just now, but on the other hand that is why the capital gains are rising.

The reason why the bill is necessary is that all of these companies are ordering new equipment. The sale of these airplanes and the money realized from them net is expected to be applied to the purchase of new airplanes. There is $1,600,000,000 worth on order of these great jets and turboprop airplanes. Approximately 375 of the 4-engine aircraft that are affected are a part of the Reserve Civil Air Fleet of the United States Military Establishment. We have provided for certain conversion moneys through the defense budget, and these airplanes are all available on 48 hours' notice to the United States Government. We are not required to purchase airplanes by our appropriations in this Congress because these airplanes are being paid for and being used in commerce and the pilots and crews and so forth are all available free to the people of the United States in the event of any emergency.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. MASON. Why is it that the bill applies only to certain airlines and not to all airlines?

Mr. HINSHAW. Because it only applies to the certain airlines that are still under subsidy.

Mr. MASON. In other words, it applies to the subsidy airlines, but not to those that are not receiving a subsidy.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is right. The rich airlines can do anything they want to do with their capital gains. But it is the subsidized airlines that the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Supreme Court would take the money away from and make it apply against this subsidy.

Mr. MORANO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. MORANO. Is it not true that the fleet of airplanes, which the gentleman just referred to represents an element in our national security and represent an overseas fleet?

Mr. HINSHAW. Of course, there is a great element of our national security involved here.

Mr. MORANO. And it represents a very important element in this fight for economic penetration which is being carried on by the Soviets.

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes, sir; as a matter of fact it is expected that the Soviet Government will come out very shortly, as the British Government has, with the Vickers Viscount and offer an Ilyushin or something like that, a big turbojet transport on the world market.

Mr. MORANO. Exactly. Does that not mean, while I am one of those who believes that, perhaps, Russia will never drop the hydrogen bomb on us and that she would rather fight us in the air by peaceful economic penetration, that that is the way they can do it by winning the air with these jets?

Mr. HINSHAW. That is right. This is a highly meritorious measure and should be adopted.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY] and I ask unanimous consent that he may proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the United States Coast Guard for the very remarkable performance of its search and rescue service in connection with the collision this morning of two great ocean liners, the Italian Line Andrea Doria and the Swedish vessel Stockholm. It has been my privilege to have been very closely identified with the Coast Guard since I have been a Member of the Congress. In my opinion it is one of the most efficient agencies of the Government. It has a magnificent record of service and certainly in this catastrophe it has lived up to its highest traditions.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield.

Mr. CANFIELD. I, too, am thrilled by the way the Coast Guard responded to last night's S. O. S. On a lesser scale, however, it can be said and it should be said that the United States Coast Guard is engaging in sea and air rescue work daily and nightly. "Semper Paratus" is the Latin motto of the Coast Guard. That means "always prepared." The Coast Guard last night lived up to the highest tradition of that motto and we have many, many reasons to be proud of this dedicated service.

Mr. GARY. I thank the gentleman. It was a remarkable performance. I think the United States of America can be proud of the very fine service rendered on this occasion.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I want to add my congratulations to the excellent job that was done by the United States Coast Guard in connection with this collision. I had occasion last night to be awakened and I was advised at 3 o'clock in the morning that the mayor of Philadelphia and his wife were aboard the Italian liner. I was in contact with the Coast Guard all through the night and I cannot praise them too highly. The mayor of Philadelphia has made a telephonic broadcast from the Ile de France and he has the highest praise for the excellent job done by the Coast Guard, and everybody in connection with the rescue.

Mr. GARY. I thank the gentleman. Other services as well as commercial and private vessels did cooperate but I mention particularly the United States Coast Guard because it was the directing agency and it deserves great credit for its performance.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I only want to take a minute or two of the little time that is left before adjournment in order to put my colleagues on notice that in the other body an attempt is being made to increase at this time the number of immigrants that this country admits annually under regular immigration quotas. This attempt is being made while only a few hours have gone by since the Senate passed S. 2663, a bill designed to provide assistance in certain economically depressed areas. In that bill, it is stated that this country suffers from substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment.

One of the States most painfully affected by unemployment is the State of Pennsylvania. The coal regions present an appalling picture of mines caving in, unattended buildings collapsing, homes being ruined by lack of money to keep them in good repair—and above all—of miners living on a gradually diminishing pittance provided by public and union welfare funds.

Within the current decade, immigration to the United States has by far outnumbered the quotas established by the Congress. This country has admitted since the end of the war well over half a million refugees and displaced persons, in addition to immigrants reaching us from all corners of the world both under the quota and outside of the quota. Our nonquota admission of immigrants exceeds twice the number of immigrants entering under the quota. The liberal provisions of the law admitting outside of the quota all natives of independent countries of the Western Hemisphere, and all wives and children of United States citizens, regardless of their place of birth, has made our entire immigration quota simply a basis from which we operate. Immigration from Mexico was in the past fiscal year 5 times higher than only 4 years ago and it is rising rapidly in the current fiscal year.

There is now before the Senate a bill, H. R. 6888, which passed the House last year. Certain desirable amendments were recommended to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary by my colleagues on the House Committee and by myself. It is hoped that these amendments, which do not endanger the security, the economy, and the national welfare of this country, will be adopted. But a very dangerous action has developed in the other body. Dozens of amendments have been proposed to the bill H. R. 6888, and each of them tries to emulate the other one in an attempt to wreck our quota system.

It is impossible to state with any degree of accuracy at this time how many more immigrants would be permitted to come to the United States under the amendments piled up in the other body. It is unthinkable that the House would go along with a policy designed to pile up unskilled immigrants on top of unemployed workers walking the streets of our congested urban centers. I am certain that my colleagues in the House who are familiar with the situation in their districts, as I am with the situation in my district and State, would join me in rejecting the amendments providing for a numerical increase in the total immigration to this country.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take this opportunity to commend the United States Coast Guard for their outstanding rescue work in the collision between the Andrea Doria and the Stockholm off Nantucket, Mass., which is in my congressional district.

Through the years, the small Coast Guard stations, cutters and air-sea rescue units have performed innumerable feats of bravery along the coastline in my district. They have saved the lives of hundreds of fishermen whose boats have been wrecked in storms off our coast.

The rescue work of the Coast Guard personnel in this latest sea disaster is unsurpassed in bravery, and I am doubly proud to be a member of the Board of Visitors to the Coast Guard Academy.

AMENDING AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, I must oppose this bill unless certain amendments are accepted. There has been a lot of discussion for and against it, but not much explanation of it. Let me try to describe what this bill does, although I am certainly not an expert in this field or on the committee.

All these years under the Civil Aeronautics Act, we have had certain ground rules, by which subsidies for airlines are figured.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield to my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. In view of what the gentleman said a few moments ago, I assume he is not opposing the rule?

Mr. JUDD. No, I am not now opposing the rule. The only reason I am speaking now is that the rule provides only 1 hour's general debate on the bill and there may not be time then. I appreciate the gentleman's yielding me 5 minutes.

In order to encourage aviation in our country and help the airlines, especially the smaller ones, to get started, our Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 laid down the policy of paying subsidies to try to ensure a return of about 8 percent on capital investment. The subsidy for each line is figured every year, and to determine what the line has to have in order to be able to attain such a return, the CAB has to figure out what the operating revenue of the line is, how much it has earned from its flights, and, as has already been explained "all other revenue," as the act describes it. That has been held by the Supreme Court to include profits made, or capital gains, on the sale or other disposition of old equipment or other property that is used or is useful in its normal operations.

As the gentleman from California has pointed out, after taking depreciation on their equipment, they can now sell the old planes at a high price, sometimes above original cost. Thus they can sometimes make an enormous profit in the form of capital gains. This bill does not affect the taxes they must pay on such capital gains; it merely changes the ground rules by which the subsidies are figured.

It would amend section 406 (b) of the Civil Aeronautics Act so that in determining subsidies for air carriers for transportation of mail, the CAB shall not take into account capital gains realized by the carriers from the sale of depreciable property used or usable in the carrier's normal operations, provided that the net gain, after capital gains taxes are paid, is reinvested in similar property—that is, new and presumably better planes.

These old rules have worked well. Our airlines have made spectacular growth under them. Most of the lines, all of the larger ones except about two, have already managed to get off subsidy. Now we come along and propose in this bill to change the ground rules in the middle of the game, so that the ones who are not off subsidy are to get a second dip into the Treasury. That is what it amounts to. They would not have to deduct their capital gains from subsidies received. Their profits from sale of depreciable property would not be considered as revenue in figuring their subsidy.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman is partly right and partly wrong on that. They have changed today and what they have done for a matter of 2 years. There originally was no such thing. In these 2 years the capital gains have been applied on open rate operations but not on closed rate operations.

Mr. JUDD. I recognize that fact.

Mr. HINSHAW. It has been about half and half.

Mr. JUDD. But the further fact is that this amounts to a tremendous windfall for the airlines that are not being subsidized—I mean for the lines that are still on subsidy. It in a sense penalizes the ones that are off subsidy and rewards the ones that are still on subsidy.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The gentleman is entirely wrong when he says this is a windfall to the people not on subsidy.

Mr. JUDD. I corrected it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is entirely incorrect.

Mr. JUDD. I corrected my original misstatement. I said it is a windfall for the ones that are on subsidy. That is the reason for my opposition.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I disagree with the gentleman, but I will get some time and explain it.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, it is urged that this bill must be passed so that the companies will have greater incentive to modernize, to get new equipment, and so on. What are the companies going to do that are not on subsidy when they have to buy new equipment?

For example, Pan-American is still on subsidy. It has ordered, so I understand, some $260 million worth of new equipment. If this bill is passed it will enable Pan-American to get a much larger subsidy from the Government, because it will not have to take into account in figuring its need for subsidy, the profits from the sale of its old equipment, which may run up to $100 million. Under present rules those profits would be deducted from the amount of subsidy otherwise payable. Under this bill it could keep all the profits for purchase of new equipment and claim the whole subsidy besides.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. No, I am sorry I cannot yield at this time.

TWA has to compete over some of the same routes with Pan American. TWA is getting and would get no subsidy at all. But Pan American would get a larger Federal subsidy than now because it would not have to include as revenue the money it has made as capital gains from the sale of its depreciable property.

It seems to me that to be fair and equitable, either TWA should get back on subsidy or that Pan American should get off subsidy, if airlines hereafter are to be able to disregard in figuring subsidies their capital gains from sale of their property.

The Department of Commerce was asked to estimate what would have been the effect if this bill had been law on the books the last 5 years. It estimated that the Government—the taxpayers, you and I—would have had to pay out $22 million more in subsidies than we did; and that $17 million of it would have gone to one company, Pan American.

There is an even worse result than increased payments to lines now on subsidy. If you pass this bill why should any of them ever again try to get off subsidy? Of course, they would want to stay on subsidy indefinitely.

Under this bill if an airline is on subsidy and sells its equipment at a considerable profit, it can deduct that profit from its income, or not figure it in its income, and thus get a subsidy of the total amount it is estimated to need, not counting that profit. It seems to me that is unfair. We should not change the ground rules in the midst of an operation under which most of the airlines have managed their affairs very well. Most of them are off subsidy. Let us encourage the rest of them to get off subsidy too.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, frankly, I do not know too much about this legislation, though I have carefully read with much interest the enlightening debate had in the other body on July 9.

This bill was most carefully considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the other body, it was debated at great length. It passed the Senate 52 to 22—more than 2 to 1. That debate was not only interesting, it was enlightening. Then when it came over to the House from the other body it was carefully considered by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and with the single exception of the gentleman from Massachusetts, the bill was approved by the House committee.

It is my understanding that this legislation will enable a lot of the little lines—some of the larger ones, too—those mostly in need, to sell old equipment that has become obsolescent or obsolete, that they can take that money and apply it on new equipment, bring their planes and equipment up to date without having to be charged with capital gains on the funds they derive from the sale of old or wornout equipment.

We all have a great deal of pride in our Air Force and our commercial airlines. I do want to bring out one point. In time of emergency, when we get into war—we have gone through this experience before—we have depended a great deal upon our commercial airlines, not only for certain equipment, for transportation purposes and all that, but for the pilots and the crews, the mechanics as well as the pilots and navigators, who contributed much to the defense of our Nation in time of war. For the little it would cost it seems to me to be money well spent to pass legislation of this kind that would allow feeder lines all over the country, and some of the larger airlines, to sell old dilapidated or wornout equipment and to modernize their planes in order to keep this Nation strong, not only in a commercial sense in time of peace but as a defense in case we should become involved in war.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, will the distinguished gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ROONEY. Is not one of the facets of this subject the matter of the dignity of this country in its representation abroad insofar as our air equipment is concerned?

Mr. SHORT. I am glad that the gentleman brought out that very significant point.

Mr. ROONEY. Is it not to the best interest of the people of the United States to have our American airlines operating in international travel use the best in safe and modern equipment so as to compete with foreign airlines?

Mr. SHORT. There is no doubt about that. The gentleman from New York has traveled on every continent, he has visited our diplomatic posts abroad, and has had talks with representatives of foreign governments in practically every country he visited. I do not care whether it is Europe, Asia, Africa, or South America, it always gives me a little pride and satisfaction to hear these people in foreign countries look with great admiration at our great airliners abroad and with pride to the accomplishments of the United States.

Mr. MORANO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MORANO. Is it not also true that the foreign-flag airlines are completely backed by their governments and supported by their governments?

Mr. SHORT. That is right.

Mr. MORANO. Entirely.

Mr. SHORT. Entirely is my understanding.

Mr. MORANO. And our overseas airlines have to compete with that type of operation.

Mr. SHORT. They face more or less the same kind of competition that our maritime activities and our merchant marine do.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Is it not also true that when we have good equipment, money comes back to the Treasury through the transportation tax and the hauling of additional passengers in the airline service? I have been told that as much will come back through taxation by having good equipment as this would benefit any airline.

Mr. SHORT. That also is very true, and you should not overlook the safety factor—the lives that will be saved by having the most up-to-date and modern equipment to prevent the large number of accidents that we have witnessed in recent months.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include letters and editorials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, just to get the RECORD straight here for a moment, I want to refer to the statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota. The gentleman from Minnesota made a comparison between TWA and PAA with respect to a subsidy. Now, the difference is this. TWA has a very lucrative run, especially overseas. It operates between New York, England, France, Germany, Italy, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, and the Azores, while Pan American on the other hand has a run which is not lucrative at all. It flies from New York into the Congo, from New York into Iceland, into Norway, and during the bad seasons, naturally that route is not traveled at all. Another aspect that I think the gentleman should take into consideration is the fact that TWA, which you have taken as an example, also has the right of operation right here in the States, which is definitely lucrative. Surely the gentleman knows, using the airlines as much as he does, that it is impossible, for instance, on a weekend to get a reservation from Washington to New York or to Boston or Pittsburgh, and all of these other airlines which are not subsidized have these density routes. Certainly they are very lucrative. On the other hand, the smaller feeder lines that are coming in here, which are part of our great transportation system, naturally have to be helped.

Mr. DAWSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. DAWSON of Utah. Is it not a fact that by giving them this extra profit you are, in effect, increasing their subsidy? Why do we not keep this on a strict subsidy basis rather than letting them take this extra profit derived from the sale of obsolete equipment and building up their profits?

Mr. PATTERSON. There is absolutely no excess profit as far as the subsidized lines go.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. I think we should keep in mind that none of these profits derived from the sale of old equipment will be allowed unless all that money is spent for new equipment. It cannot be paid out in dividends. They have to take the funds that they derive from the sale of the old, obsolete equipment and invest all that in new planes—the latest, most up-to-date equipment.

Mr. PATTERSON. For instance, one of the lines running into Alaska would have to use the funds derived from the sale to possibly build a hangar, due to inclement weather, and other conditions that they have to operate under up there.

Mr. DAWSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, are they not buying this new equipment now, anyway?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not think they would be able to buy it unless they are given a lucrative run, or assistance in form of a subsidy if that is what the gentleman is referring to. The purpose of this legislation as I understand it, is to amend section 406 (b) of the Civil Aeronautics Act so in the determination of subsidies to be paid to air carriers the Civil Aeronautics Board shall take into consideration the need of each air carrier for compensation for the transportation and operation sufficient to insure the performance of satisfactory service. Further to continue development of air transportation to the extent demanded by our Government.

Another aspect of this legislation that might be overlooked is the one pertaining to national defense. In time of a national emergency our fleet of civil air transports could be employed in the matter of a few hours because of the modification of the new commercial planes that are now on order with Boeing, Douglas, and Pratt & Whitney. These 45 jet transport aircraft will supplement the Civil Air Reserve Fleet and will decrease the cost to our armed services of maintaining a standby arm of our Air Force.

If we are to lead the world in civil air transportation our carriers must receive assistance if they are to compete in world competition. They must be permitted to retain profits from the sale of equipment in the same manner as the domestic trunk route carriers.

The high level of profit of nonsubsidized trunk carriers is not an indication of greater efficiency than subsidized carriers, but rather the result of the Government granting them density traffic routes for which a subsidy is not required. A great many of our House Members who travel weekly between Washington, New York, Newark, and Boston realize that such domestic route carriers need no subsidy.

Further, Mr. Speaker, a criticism has been voiced that the bill is too broad in that it permits the carriers to reinvest in "other property similar or related in service or use."

The term "property" is defined as "depreciable property used or useful in the carrier's normal operations." If the carrier reinvests the profits from the sale of property in property other than that defined, such profits are subject to recapture and offset against subsidy. The term "property used or useful" is a term which has been the basis on which the CAB has determined the carriers investment base for computing the return element in mail rates since 1938. Under the terms of this bill it will continue to judge whether the carriers have properly invested profits from equipment sales.

Some terribly important and distressing news has recently filtered through the Iron Curtain: Russia is now building up a large commercial air force.

At this moment Russian slave laborers are toiling in factories to create this force. They are assembling the most modern jet engines known and installing them in more planes equipped with the latest devices for speed and comfort. They are being paid next to nothing for their sweat. And so within 2 years, according to reports, Russia will have the fastest and cheapest Air Force in the world, all at government expense.

What does this mean? First of all, it means that the United States, long respected as the greatest airpower in the world, may become a poor second. Unable to match the jet speed and comfort of the Red planes at their cheap labor costs, our great airlines will ground operations. Thousands of people employed in all the varied phases of the aircraft industry will become unemployed. A great fountain of wealth will be turned off. Our leadership and prestige in the free world will be crushed. Communist propaganda will be able to spread all over the world.

Most important, our military defense will be gravely imperiled. Not many people realize how vitally commercial carriers are needed to transport troops and equipment in times of crisis. In the event of a crisis in the Middle or Far East, for instance, thousands of American soldiers and massive piles of equipment would have to be moved long distances immediately. Otherwise, local Red aggression would be in complete control before we could make a first line of defense.

Right now, however, our military planes can transport only one airborne division to such an area in time to be of aid. We must have a sizable commercial force of the type Russia is now building to move our men and equipment in time. Otherwise, all other great defense preparations will sit helplessly on American shores, while Red carriers pour in troops and equipment to enslave millions of freedom-loving peoples.

In short, the Russian buildup means one thing—a much larger commercial air force is needed on the home front. At the moment our great commercial airlines lead the world. They are the largest, fastest, and most efficient in history. The Russian carrier menace, however, threatens to undermine this leadership and as a result the whole free world.

So we must aid our airlines in their hours of need because alone they cannot compete with Russian Government-supplied slave labor. We must build up a reserve supply which can be used as carriers of troops and equipment in crucial times. Our airlines must continue to receive increased subsidies to meet the Red threat.

Furthermore, this reserve can be used very well in peacetime. It will not sit rusting in musty hangars at the taxpayers' expense. It can, and must, be used in peace, to transport military troops and equipment to all destinations. If so used, not only will more men be trained in the use of these carriers, but the cost to the taxpayer will be greatly reduced.

An increased commercial air force is not only essential for defense reasons, but represents millions saved monthly in tax dollars. Since our airlines cannot accomplish the needed increase by themselves due to competition, I strongly urge the retention and increase of Government subsidies to help them meet this dangerous Red threat. Each dollar of subsidy we pay will save millions of free world lives and millions of the taxpayers' money.

ANSWER TO A MEMORANDUM CONCERNING H. R. 8902

Recently a representative of a certificated air carrier distributed a fallacious document which, if followed by Congress, would place H. R. 8902 in great jeopardy. In the belief that Congress wants to have available a rebuttal to this memorandum, a rather detailed answer is necessary.

In quotations are the arguments advanced in the incorrect memorandum. Factual answers appear directly below each quotation.

Claim 1:

"H. R. 8902 or S. 3449 will permit subsidized airlines to place all profits from the sale of equipment into a separate account for the purchase of new equipment and these profits could not be taken into consideration in determining the airlines' subsidy needs."

Answer: Subsidized carriers may retain profits after payment of capital-gains taxes under H. R. 8902 only if within a reasonable time such profits are reinvested in other property used or useful in the carrier's normal operations. This bill would aid the subsidized carriers in narrowing the competitive financial gap between them and the nonsubsidized carriers. These carriers, even though their profit level has been substantially above that of the subsidized carriers, have always been permitted to retain their profits from equipment sales to aid them in their financing of new equipment.

In other words, if an airline which receives $10 million a year in subsidy should realize a profit of $50 million from the sale of equipment, it would be permitted to place the entire $50 million in a separate account toward the purchase of new equipment and still claim $10 million in subsidy.

Answer: The nonsubsidized carrier is even better off than the subsidized carrier, in that there are no restrictions on the manner in which the nonsubsidized carrier may use its $50 million. If you were to follow the implied reasoning of the author of this statement, then the passenger and cargo rates charged to the public by the nonsubsidized carriers should be reduced to reflect the profits which these carriers receive from the sale of flight equipment. Such ratemaking is not recommended as a ratemaking principle nor is it believed that any ratemaking body for public utilities, railroads, buses, or airlines could justify returning to the public profits realized from the sale of flight equipment, in the form of reduced rates. This is just what the author of the above statement would recommend for the subsidized airlines. Having been paid a reasonable subsidy determined to be so by the CAB, for a service rendered, he would now have the CAB confiscate the value of the subsidized airlines assets when they most need them. The scale of justice would not be in balance.

Claim 3A:

Since such profits have been used to reduce Government subsidy in the past, that procedure could not be followed under H. R. 8902 or S. 3449.

Answer: This statement is just not true. Subsidized carriers operating under closed rates retained profits from equipment sales during the entire period from 1939 to 1954 and it has been only during approximately the last 2 years that the CAB changed its ratemaking policy to recapture these profits.

Claim 3B:

Therefore, Government subsidy payments would be increased, at least for the next 2 or 3 years.

Answer: Mr. Harmar Denny and Mr. Chan Gurney, members of the Civil Aeronautics Board, in testifying before the Aviation Committee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee which is sponsoring H. R. 8902, have this to say regarding the above statement:

Argument against enactment of these bills is advanced on the basis that the United States Government may as a result of the enactment be obligated to make increased subsidy payments to the airline industry. Conceding that this may be so for a few years, it is our opinion that the investment will pay off in the long run because of the greater profitability of our carriers when assured of leadership in world aviation. Admittedly, this is a matter of judgment. But it is a relatively safe judgment to assume that our carriers will do substantially better when equipped with the finest equipment in the world and in sufficient numbers than they will if the equipment programs are restricted by lack of Government support at this time. We believe that, in the long run, these bills will be of material assistance to the subsidy carriers to become self-sufficient.

Claim 4A:

If H. R. 8902 had been in effect for the last 5 years, the total benefits that would have been realized by the airlines would have amounted to $21,900,790. Of that amount, Pan American would have received $17,288,000, while 47 other airlines would have been eligible to share in the remaining $4,612,790.

Answer: It is not difficult for a reader of this memorandum to conclude that the writer will resort to any means at his command to smear Pan American and to defeat this bill. The bill was supported by all the subsidized carriers which include the local service carriers, the helicopter operators, the territorial carriers, the international and overseas operators, and the entire civil transport industry, including the nonsubsidized carriers with one exception—Northwest Airlines, which has its harpoon sharpened for Pan American and is responsible for the above statement. The writer of this statement well knows, that without capital gains from the sale of flight equipment it will be impossible for subsidized carriers to carry out the financing of their reequipment programs. The above statement has cited figures from the minority report as to the amount of capital gains which the Board has taken into account during the 5 years 1951–55 to support an argument that the bill would benefit only Pan American World Airways. Look closely at the list of companies in this part of the report. The vast majority of the carriers listed are local service and territorial carriers. During the period from 1951 to 1955 the workhorse of their operations was the DC–3 twin engine airplane. During this entire period there was no suitable replacement aircraft available for purchase, and it was necessary for them to retain for their growing service all of the aircraft in their possession. Under these circumstances there would, of course, be no sale of flight equipment and hence no equipment sales profit available for the CAB to use to apply to the reduction of subsidy.

Referring again to the figures in the minority report, you will see nothing to indicate whether these carriers sold equipment and retained profits under the Board's policy of permitting carriers to retain profits while operating under closed rates, which policy was in effect prior to 1954. The truth of the matter is that these figures merely demonstrate that certain carriers which were on subsidy during the 1951–55 period were also on open mail rates, and that they sold flight equipment with the firm hope that they would be able to convince the CAB that the profits realized should be retained by the carriers in order to finance the purchase of new equipment during this period.

Pan American, from 1952 through 1955, added to its operating fleet some 45 DC–6B's, 3 DC–6A's, and 7 DC–7B's. It has turned out that Pan American's sale of flight equipment in order to make funds available to purchase this new equipment was a grave mistake as the financial benefits of such sales has inured entirely to the United States Treasury because of the CAB's erroneous policy of confiscating such profits during this period. This historic record of the amount of equipment sales profits which have been taken from the carriers to reduce subsidy is of no relevance in determining who will benefit from the legislation we are here considering for the future. Many of the local service carriers placed orders for new equipment which will cost them between $500,000 and $600,000 per aircraft, and others are considering such orders, and will eventually be required to place them, if they are to continue to develop their services. How can any one say that these small carriers with an average net worth of only $800,000 will not benefit from the sale of their DC–3 fleets in the financing of the purchase of their replacement fleets? Without the benefit of the profits from flight equipment sales many of them will be unable to finance either by borrowing the necessary funds or by marketing their equity securities. All carriers will benefit from this legislation and should be put on the same footing with the right to dispose of equipment when they see fit and to retain the proceeds to reinvest in new equipment.

However, since the bigger airlines have planned large reequipment programs in the near future, the benefits would easily amount to huge windfalls, especially in the case of Pan American.

Answer: Equipment sales profits are no more a windfall to subsidized carriers than to nonsubsidized carriers. The profits which come from the sale of flight equipment in this present period of inflation, or any other period, are the rightful property of the subsidized carriers, just as they are for the nonsubsidized carriers, and have resulted not from anything either the carrier or the Government has done, but are the result of economic forces and inflation. In all industry economic factors of inflation and deflation must be faced. The increase in value of old flight equipment, and the profits realized during inflation or losses incurred during depressions under this bill are for the account of the subsidized carriers which assume the risk. There is no windfall here, but rather a just treatment of the subsidized carrier's property.

Claim 5:

Benefits to be derived from the bills by all airlines, except Pan American, would be negligible because the smaller airlines' subsidy requirements are not as high, they do not have as much equipment for sale at this time, and they will not realize a very big profit when it is placed on sale.

Answer: The true facts are these: Out of some $33 million of subsidy paid in 1955 Pan American received only $1 million. The remaining $32 million went to support the national interest routes of the local-service carriers, the helicopter operators, the territorial carriers, and a few foreign and overseas carriers.

The present-day value of the aircraft fleets owned by the subsidized carriers, other than Pan American, is estimated at $100 million. The author of the above statement does not regard the profits which might be derived from the sale of this equipment as important to the smaller airlines in the financing of their reequipment program. The value of the fleets of the local-service carriers alone in today's market is some $15 to $20 million. This amount can be compared with the total net worth of these companies of only $10,500,000. Permitting these carriers to retain profits from equipment sales would more than double their net worth, triple or quadruple their borrowing power to provide for the financing of new equipment, and would vastly improve their position for financing through equity securities.

Claim 6:

Subsidy-free airlines will not benefit from the passage of either H. R. 8902 or S. 3449, but instead, will be penalized indirectly.

For example, Pan American, which stands to gain the most, has on order new jet airplanes costing in excess of $260 million. In selling its old equipment it will realize a profit up to, or perhaps more than $100 million. Under H. R. 8902, Pan American, in addition, would receive its complete subsidy requirement amounting to millions of dollars. Trans World Airlines, one of its competitors but much smaller in size, must also purchase new equipment if it is to compete effectively. Since TWA operates subsidy free it would receive no Government assistance in financing. Therefore, the Government, in effect, will be giving Pan American, one of the biggest United States carriers, additional financial assistance to compete with a smaller carrier that stands on its own and does not drain tax dollars out of the Federal Treasury.

The effect of H. R. 8902 would be even more discriminatory in the case of Northwest Airlines which competes with Pan American in the Pacific. Pan American's Pacific revenues alone, over its exclusive central Pacific route, amount to nearly $60 million annually, while Northwest's total international revenues amount to only $21 million. Thus, Northwest, operating subsidy free, must also obtain comparable jet equipment to meet the competition, but it must buy its planes without the additional financial benefits that its competitor, which is many times its size, would receive under such legislation.

Answer: Our heart goes out to poor TWA and Northwest which are members of the domestic trunkline group which operate the most lucrative domestic routes and in the year 1955 earned some 10.5 percent on their investment. Such earnings compare with the earnings of the subsidized foreign and overseas carriers of only 4.6 percent. Pan American competes with TWA in the Atlantic and Northwest in the Pacific. Pan American requires no subsidy in either of these areas on the routes which are competitive with these two American competitors. Subsidy is provided only to support those routes which though not economically self-supporting are operated in the national interest. These include the routes to Iceland, Scandinavia, and Africa in the Atlantic area and to Australia and routes in the Far East in the Pacific area.

One should not lose sight of the fact that Northwest and TWA required subsidy until a year or so ago. The aircraft which these carriers will sell to help finance their requirement program were aircraft which were used during the period in which these carriers were receiving subsidy. Profits from such sales for Northwest and TWA are no different than the profits which the present bills would permit the subsidized carriers to retain on the sale of their equipment.

Claim 7:

In case there is a need for legislation of this type for local service carriers and other small airlines, perhaps it could be accomplished by eliminating any big carrier with annual operating revenues in excess of $50 million or even $100 million. Such a limitation would give aid where aid might be needed, but would prevent any of the biggest United States carriers from gaining an even bigger advantage over its smaller but subsidy-free competitors through Government assistance.

Answer: We are considering here legislation dealing with the appropriate treatment of gains on the sale of flight equipment by subsidized air carriers. What is difficult to understand is how anyone can maintain that the principles embodied in this bill are right for an airline with gross revenues of $49 million and wrong for one with gross revenues of $51 million.

One of the glories of this country is that, unlike some others, we do not have different rules of law for different people. We have the same rule of law for everyone. This has been true of our aviation legislation in the past, and we must keep it true in the future.

The memo says the bill should not apply to subsidized carriers with gross revenues exceeding $50 million. What does this mean in plain English? At the moment there is only one such carrier—Pan American World Airways, Inc. The amendment might just as well say that this bill shall apply to all subsidized airlines except Pan American. That is precisely its effect.

Discrimination of this sort is indefensible. Grant that Pan American is now a large company, but it did not start that way. It started in 1927, with a dozen World War I pilots each putting up $25,000, and many long years elapsed before it had revenues of $50 million. It got those revenues by tackling jobs first in South America, then across the Pacific, and finally across the Atlantic, which no one else wanted to tackle at the time, and performing them to the satisfaction of its customers and to the credit of its Government. Pan American is a typical American success story of starting small and growing big, through hard work, under the free enterprise system.

There is no airline whose ability to finance new equipment is of greater importance to the United States. Pan American conducts essential national interest service to parts of the world in the Middle East, in Africa, and in the Orient, in which the United States has the most vital interest. Unlike our domestic airlines it has to compete against foreign-flag airlines, solidly backed by their governments and paying their employees half the American standard of wages or less. It is vital that such a company should always have the very best equipment. Last fall Pan American took the lead in ordering jet transports, the first American built, from the Boeing Airplane Co. in Seattle, the Douglas Aircraft Co. in Los Angeles, and the Pratt-Whitney Engine Co. in Hartford, thereby triggering a flood of orders to our American aircraft and engine builders which now exceeds $1 billion. These airplanes ordered by Pan American and other American flag lines will keep our air transportation in the forefront in time of peace, and would be of inestimable value to the national defense if emergency should occur. Pan American now has the job of financing these orders. Pan American needs what this bill provides just as much as does the feeder airline which is transforming its fleet from DC–3's to F–27's, and it is just as important for the country that it have this.

It is said that if this legislation had been on the books in the past, a large share of the benefit would have fallen to Pan American. This is due in part to the fact that the feeder airlines were simply not able to sell equipment since they had no available replacement for the DC–3. It is due also to the fact that the CAB kept Pan American on an open mail rate much longer than it did other lines. It is due in part to the simple fact that Pan American provides such a large share of the international service where subsidy is required because of the through traffic and intense foreign competition.

STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS COMMENDING PAN AMERICAN'S ORDERS FOR JET AIRCRAFT

Donald A. Quarles, Secretary of the Air Force: "I am delighted to learn that the Boeing and Douglas Companies teamed up with Pratt & Whitney Aircraft have contracted with Pan American World Airways to build and deliver to them a great fleet of modern, long-range jet transports capable of operating anywhere in the world.

"These aircraft will use much of the technical knowledge which has resulted from our efforts to build superior air weapons as well as many engines and other accessories which have been developed as part of our jet Air Force buildup.

"We are naturally pleased that peaceful purposes will be served by these developments.

"This large commercial order which follows satisfaction of our military requirements make three positive contributions to our efforts to maintain our Air Force at all times qualitatively superior through an age of peril.

"1. The civil operator's emphasis on capability coupled with our emphasis on performance will result in a better product at lower cost.

"2. As each of these airplanes will become a part of the Civil Air Reserve Fleet, our emergency lift capacity will be greatly increased at no cost to the Department of Defense.

"3. These large orders just placed by Pan American will strengthen the airframe, engine and accessory industries on which we rely for the development and production of improved bombers and fighters. A strong and vigorous industry is essential to our national security. Commercial aircraft production properly planned will increase the competence and decrease the cost to our armed services of maintaining a dynamic aircraft industry."

Ross Rizley, Chairman, CAB: "Pan American's pioneering-built jet transports will have a significant contribution to make to the commerce, the postal service, and the national defense of the United States. Pan American, Boeing, Douglas, and Pratt & Whitney are to be congratulated on ushering in the jet age and bringing benefits of jet transportation to the public. Such implementation of congressional policy in developing air transportation should now assure continued world leadership for the United States flag.

"The magnitude of this order is best demonstrated by the fact that it is larger than the entire aircraft investment of all United States airlines in 1938, the year the Civil Aeronautics Act became law."

Reuben B. Robertson, Deputy Secretary of Defense: "The Department of Defense is pleased to learn of Pan American World Airways' decision to purchase a fleet of 45 jet transport aircraft from the Boeing Aircraft Co. and Douglas Aircraft to be powered by Pratt & Whitney jet turbine engines.

"The three military services rely, as they have in the past, on the civil air carriers to supplement the available military transportation in times of emergency. These new fleets of jet transports will be a welcome addition to our reserve.

"The great potential lift that these new ships provide as a result of their speed and range should make it possible to more effectively support our overseas forces at no added cost to the taxpayer."

The June 16 issue of Time and Tide published this item:

A journalist who interrogated men of all grades within the BOAC as to how it came about that Pan American Airways, with more than twice the number of aircraft of the BOAC and with twice the work, manages with less administrative staff, got the reply:

"Ours is a nationalized industry with masses and masses of paper work—while Pan American is a private enterprise and has to show a profit; so it streamlines."

This might well serve as an epitaph on nationalization.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD].

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am going to try to explain the way I understand this matter for the benefit of the Members of the House who have not digested this minority report. I want to ally myself with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON] and the gentleman from Minnesota, Dr. JUDD, in the position they are taking. I want to draw an analogy which is as follows: Let us take a truckline in your district. That truckline is operating under a subsidy from the United States Government and gets a chance to sell a truck for $2,000 that it has been using. The truckline owner has depreciated it down to a thousand dollars. That leaves $1,000 of capital gains. He pays 26 percent on his capital gains. But under the subsidy arrangement $1,000 would be subtracted from his subsidy. So this is a bill to give a double subsidy to these poor little airlines. If the Members will turn to page 5 of this minority report they will see a list of those who would have received benefits had this law been in effect since 1951. They are: Pan American, $17 million plus; Braniff, $1½ million plus; Delta $1½ million, approximately; and Trans-World $1,295,000. So the little airlines will get about $4 million. Pan American would get $17 million under this bill if this proposal had been in effect since 1951.

Mr. Speaker, every man in the United States who is in business, when he sells some of his equipment for more than the figure to which he has depreciated it, or more than he paid for it, pays a capital-gains tax on it. That is what these people should do. In addition to paying a capital-gains tax on that equipment and getting out on the basis of not having it charged against their subsidy, they are also getting a subsidy from the United States Government.

The man who has a capital gain in private business has to pay the capital gains tax. That is that. But why should not the subsidy of these airlines be reduced the amount of the capital gains if they sell some of their equipment? Why should the taxpayers give them not only the subsidy but the additional capital gains to add to their capital plant investment without going through the regular mill of income tax payment?

Mr. Speaker, if you will get the minority report that Mr. HESELTON has, you will see that a former Member of this House, the Honorable Ross Rizley, now a Federal judge, took the same position that Mr. Joe Adams on the Board took and Mr. HESELTON and Mr. JUDD are taking; that is, that this present formula should not be disturbed and that a gift should not be given to these people. It says in the minority report that there would have been a $21,498,000 gift given during the last 5 years, but if you set this precedent, how many hundreds of millions of dollars will be given in the next 10 or 15 or 20 years? I say, let the CAB formula stay as it is. Let these people have their capital gains on any equipment which they can sell at a profit, above the depreciated price; let them pay capital gains on that just as I have to do in my business and everybody else has to do. Otherwise, let it be subtracted from the amount of the subsidy that the Government would otherwise pay them, and then they will be on a fair and square basis with the rest of the airlines of the country, and they will not get the additional advantage that the airlines which are not on subsidy do not have. The airlines that are not on subsidy today have to buy their new equipment just the same as these people.

Let me explode this myth about being ready to go to war. Every young man in this country is also ready to go to war, too, to protect the Government as well as the equipment that we have. The railroads and trucklines and in effect the people and all resources are available for call if the national interest demands it.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 184, nays 178, answered "present" 1, not voting 69, as follows:

The doors were opened.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8902) to amend subsection 406 (b) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8902, with Mr. WALTER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I hope I may have the attention of my colleagues for a few minutes in order to try to clear some of the atmosphere. I have heard the rumors and the talk going through this Chamber during the rollcall on the rule. I have heard it as it has passed from one lip to another, passing the word around as to what they interpret this bill will do. That is the reason I ask, as sincerely as I ever asked my colleagues in this House, to listen to me for just a few moments.

I have, in my experience, as I know you have, tried to understand what is in a bill when we bring it to this House for consideration. The fact that some feel, because the word has been passed around, that this is a bill designed for a particular company or a special group makes me feel that I should say to you that this bill is designed to help all airline companies on subsidy, all airlines that serve the public, that serve the people of the United States and throughout the world provide the safest and most efficient air service that is possible. This is not a bill designed for any one group or individual.

As the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW], a member of the committee, said during the debate on the rule, this bill will apply to all 13 local service air carriers operating throughout the United States. That is No. 1—and I want to get it straight. It is designed to help local airlines service carriers who are on subsidy serving the people in the more rural areas of the country, continue to provide efficient and safe service to the public. Braniff, Continental, and what are the others? Mr. HINSHAW, you have them there.

Mr. HINSHAW. Northeast, Allegheny, Alaska, Pacific, Continental, a half dozen local carriers in Alaska, plus the foreign carriers, Pan-Am, Panagra, and Braniff.

Mr. HARRIS. All of these are carriers who are operating under the provisions of the Civil Aeronautics Act. All of these are carriers that are trying their best. They have a good record, notwithstanding the fact that we have had some terrible air tragedies, but the overall record is exceptionally good.

This bill is to permit these carriers to apply the capital gains they realize from the sale of old, dilapidated, second-hand aircraft and equipment to the purchase of new aircraft in order that they may give safe and more efficient service to the public without having it taken away from them in open-rate hearings before the Board by the reduction of their subsidy, which is for the purpose of operation.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I heard the list read and I wondered about this. There is one foreign carrier of ours that I know about, TWA. The reason they are not on the list is that they are not on subsidy?

Mr. HARRIS. They are not on subsidy. That is the reason they are not on the list.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The gentleman was recounting a few moments ago the local service carriers that are involved in this legislation. Would the gentleman care to have me read them?

Mr. HARRIS. All 13 of them in the country are involved. They touch every district and every State in the United States.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have a list of them which I will furnish the gentleman to put in the RECORD if he cares to do so.

Mr. HARRIS. Perhaps we had better take the time to read them so everybody will know who they are: Allegheny, Bonanza, Central, Empire, Frontier, Lake Central, Mid-West, Mohawk, North Central, Ozark, Piedmont, Continental-Pioneer—you know they merged—Southern, Southwest, West Coast, and Wiggins.

All are small, local-service airlines.

Mr. Chairman, when the Civil Aeronautics Act was passed in 1938, section 406 (b) contained this language:

> The need of each * * * air carrier for compensation for the transportation of mail sufficient to insure the performance of such service, and, together with all other revenue—

Now, remember those words—> of the air carrier, to enable such air carrier under honest, economical and efficient management, to maintain and continue the development of air transportation to the extent and of the character and quality required for the commerce of the United States, the Postal Service, and the national defense.

Under the section the Board has administered the program as they thought was intended so that capital gains that might be realized from the sale of property and equipment would not be included as income or as a part of their operating expenses to work so as to reduce their subsidy.

Two years ago, in 1954, the Western Airlines had a case which went to the Supreme Court.

The question there involved was the sale of an air route. The Board determined, as was its policy, that capital gains should not be used as the term "all other revenue" and, therefore, it was not to be applied to their operating expense in connection with their operations. Therefore, it was not to be taken away from them on their subsidy payment.

The case went to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court decided that the Board's interpretation was not within the intent of Congress and, therefore, even though the words "all other revenue" had been so interpreted by the Board, the Court said then it must be interpreted that any capital gains an airline company received must be considered in the operation of the company as a part of all other revenue. And as a result, their subsidy to that extent must be reduced. Now what this bill does, and I say to my good friend, the gentleman from Minnesota, that this bill does not affect the taxable feature whatsoever. It does not reflect on any air carrier that is not on subsidy because—let us get this part of it straight right now—when an air carrier that is not on subsidy—TWA and Northwest, for example, but Northwest may very well be on subsidy if they get the route across from Minneapolis to Anchorage—but if they have capital gains from the sale of their equipment, they can apply it to the purchase of new equipment or actually pay it out in dividends.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to my distinguished friend.

Mr. KEARNS. Is Allegheny Airlines included in this?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield just for an observation?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Actually, what this bill is doing is changing the present situation where we give them money with one hand and then take it away from them with the other.

Mr. HARRIS. In one sense, it can be so construed, but what it means is this: We are in a jet age today where these more expensive planes are coming off the assembly lines. They are big jet operations costing $5 million and $6 million. Local airline services are trying to develop a prototype plane by which they can serve the people of the country safely which will cost $500,000 and $600,000 each. If they do not have some way by which they can meet the high cost of this equipment, we will be endangering the traveling public.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. HESELTON. The gentleman referred, and I know fairly, to the Western Airline case. I examined the records in that case. Is it not a fact that the Western Airlines Co. received a route and never flew it? Then they sold it to United Airlines and they had approximately $1.5 million or $2 million of profit and involved in this some of the money was for the sale of slot machines.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not go into the case that carefully. I was merely using the Western Airline case because it was the case that has brought about this dilemma, the sale of equipment was not involved at all. It was an entirely different point of consideration. And then by dictum "all other revenue" regardless of what the source is brought under the decision. That is the reason today the Board must, in construing the Supreme Court decision, provide that the subsidy be reduced to the extent of the capital gains even though it is applied to the purchase of new equipment.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. I notice the Bureau of the Budget originally opposed H. R. 8902 and then made a suggestion that the bill be amended. Is your bill, as amended, to conform to their objection?

Mr. HARRIS. No; well let me explain that very briefly. They came to us with a recommendation. The recommendation was in opposition to the bill. Then our subcommittee held hearings. And do not let anyone think that we did not go into it thoroughly. We do know something about it, notwithstanding the inference earlier this afternoon.

Here are copies of the hearings which we held, complete hearings available to you.

Then the subcommittee reported to the full complete. When we took it up in the full committee we got another letter from the Department, a supplemental letter, in which they changed their prior recommendation and recommended an alternate proposal.

Then we sent the bill back to the subcommittee in an effort to try to comply with what they recommended as nearly as possible. We could not comply, because virtually what they wanted was to make a loan to these subsidized air carriers and have it pay out over a period of 7 years at an 8-percent interest rate. That was ridiculous in my opinion.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ROONEY. As one who for over the past 10 years has served on the Appropriations subcommittee dealing with appropriations for the CAB and airline subsidies, and as one who has had some little to do with the separation of airmail pay from subsidy money and who through the years has had a part in the substantial reduction of airline subsidies, I voted for the rule and I am going to vote for this bill. I think this is simply the question of giving the airlines some incentive to get new equipment. If the proceeds of the sales of their present equipment were to be given to the stockholders of the companies I would not go along on this bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Neither would I.

Mr. ROONEY. But under the terms of this bill, and I have made a careful study of this matter, the proceeds of the sales of this equipment are to be used solely for the purchase of new and similar equipment.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, and consequently to provide safe and more efficient service to the public.

If these companies that are on subsidy are not permitted under this program to purchase this new equipment it will put them at a disadvantage; and, certainly, with all carriers that serve the public—and that disadvantage will be to the extent that they will not have new equipment, they will not have the safe equipment, they will not be able to go on the market and purchase high-cost new equipment. The inflation we have had over the past several years has "propped up" the cost tremendously. And it will further inure to the benefit of the nonsubsidized carriers as against the subsidized carriers. To that extent we will be endangering, in my opinion, the safety of the people who travel by air.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman explain to the Committee that the airlines do pay the tax on the capital gains.

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, certainly. I stated that awhile ago. There is no tax feature involved.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. So the Government is not going to lose at all.

Mr. HARRIS. No.

Mr. JUDD. Except by paying the high subsidy.

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COUDERT. Is it not true that in acquiring the latest and best new equipment, specifically, the jet equipment, the great lines and the small lines are going to have to rely upon the credit and go to the banks and borrow money?

Mr. HARRIS. They must.

Mr. COUDERT. And will not the failure of this bill adversely affect their credit situation and discourage the purchase of new equipment?

Mr. HARRIS. Failure to pass this bill will mean they will have to take it out of their operating revenue; and let me tell you the local service airlines have not paid a dividend, they have not made altogether a million dollars in 1955. How they can stay in business if we are going to treat them in this manner I do not know.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. Would the gentleman accept an amendment that would exclude from the benefits of this bill airlines that have a gross revenue of over $50 million, and thereby confine it to the small companies that everyone wants to help?

Mr. HARRIS. I doubt if that would be in order because the bigger airlines carry many more people than do the others, and I do not think it would be in the best interest and the safety of the flying public.

Mr. JUDD. But the gentleman knows that if this bill had been the law for the last 5 years the little companies would have got only $400,000; the big companies would have got $22 million and one of them would have got $17 million. The gentleman does not dispute that, does he?

Mr. HARRIS. It was the law until 2 years ago when the Supreme Court decided otherwise.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. PATTERSON. I would like to say at this point in the debate I think Aer Floet, which is the Russian line, is going to be subsidized. It is going to be in real competition with our lines and every other line in the world.

Mr. HARRIS. I know there is keen competition in the transport field in this country, the keenest competition I know of in any industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I know that there is involved here in addition to what we have heard around as to the competitive element of some company, that if we pass this bill it is going to put "me" in less favor than somebody else. Now, that is the fact behind the scene. I know many of you have had the memoranda which has been sent around by one of the companies, the one company that I know of opposing the bill.

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yeld to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. With regard to these local airline carriers, is my understanding correct that to a large extent they are flying DC–3 equipment, which is no longer being manufactured?

Mr. HARRIS. They have not been manufactured for many years. We have been unable yet to develop a prototype plane they could get economically out in the market because they have not the money. We are trying to say you can add to it with the sale of this equipment.

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. If my understanding is correct, because of the difficulty of even getting replacement parts, these local airlines will soon be called upon to replace their airplanes. If this bill is not passed, would we not in effect be putting a premium on flying airplanes which would eventually become unsafe? If we defeat this bill would we not in effect be encouraging these carriers to transport our citizens in obsolete equipment?

Mr. HARRIS. Our committee has been trying to develop a prototype plane in the last few years. We have some coming on but it is going to cost money.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. ROBERTS. Does not this legislation also involve the national defense aspect?

Mr. HARRIS. Of course, it does involve the national defense aspect because they have to use old antiquated equipment. When these new planes are flying through the air at the rate of several hundred miles an hour you have to have the kind of equipment you can depend on if you are to have safe travel in the air.

I know there is a lot of feeling about this in some instances as to a windfall, but I am telling you in all sincerity it is a responsibility that we ought to understand. We should know what is involved here because the future safety of millions of people who travel by air is involved and I just do not want any of them traveling under unsafe conditions.

Mr. CARLYLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. CARLYLE. Is it not true these companies that receive this benefit were given a permanent certificate in the last few years?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, in the last Congress. The Congress certificated all 13 carriers in order for them to receive this benefit.

Mr. CARLYLE. Until that time they had to get a new certificate every 2 years?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes. Some of them were operating on a temporary permit.

Mr. CARLYLE. And there are feeder line companies involved?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes.

Mr. Chairman, your Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce recommends the adoption of H. R. 8902. The effect of the bill is to permit the subsidized airlines to use any profits they make from the sale of their obsolete equipment and property as part payment for the acquisition of more modern equipment and property. The principle embodied in the bill is one which has been followed in the past by the Civil Aeronautics Board except when the particular capital gain is made during the time when the Board is reviewing the subsidy rates of the carrier which realized the capital gain.

Unfortunately, in the case of some carriers these periods of review have been extremely long.

Recently, however, the Board has raised a question as to whether it should not utilize all capital gains made by the carriers to reduce the subsidy to which they would otherwise be entitled under the Civil Aeronautics Act, thus forcing the subsidized carriers to use the capital gain to pay their operating expenses rather than to finance improvements in their equipment and facilities. This question having been brought to the attention of your committee and the corresponding committee in the other body, it became clear that the policy question involved was of sufficient importance and urgency to require consideration and decision by the Congress. The matter has now been studied by both committees, and a bill similar in principle to the one now before the House has been passed by the Senate.

The issue of policy is a reasonably simple one. Should the subsidized airlines be permitted to reinvest any capital gains made upon the sale of their obsolete property and equipment, after payment of the necessary taxes, or should they be required to use those gains for the payment of their ordinary operating expenses? After extensive hearings and careful consideration, your committee has reached the conclusion that the subsidized airlines should be permitted to use the capital gains thus made in the provision of capital improvements. There are many compelling reasons for the committee's decision.

First. The subsidized airlines must be permitted to utilize their capital gains in this fashion in order to prevent discrimination between the subsidized airline concerned and its nonsubsidized competitor. At the present time a large part of the air-transport system operating within the United States receives no subsidy from the Government. Under existing law, these nonsubsidized airlines, which in general are the larger and older airlines, are permitted to use any profit they make from the sale of their old equipment as part payment for the purchase of new equipment. If a subsidized airline cannot do this, and is required to use its capital gains for operating expenses, it is thus forced to finance entirely through bank loans or other outside sources. Thus, the competitive disparity between the older and stronger nonsubsidized airline and the newer and weaker subsidized airline is increased, and the possibility of the latter eliminating the necessity for subsidy is reduced.

Second. If our international airlines are not permitted to use their net capital gains in the acquisition of new equipment they are placed at a further competitive disadvantage with their foreign-flag competitors. Our international airlines compete with airlines which are largely government-owned and financed. While it has been the policy of the United States to have its airlines operated under private ownership and through private financing, we must recognize that this imposes upon our airlines a competitive handicap. If they cannot use their net capital gains as a part payment for new equipment, we increase this handicap, contrary to the public interest.

Third. The policy of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 is designed to encourage our carriers to operate the finest and most modern air transport equipment available. This policy is maintained in the interest of providing for the shipping and traveling public the best air transport service available, and of providing for the military forces a fleet of the most modern and efficient transports as an auxiliary for the national defense. Any policy which forces an airline to utilize any profit it makes from the sale of old equipment for the payment of operating expenses impairs the incentive of that airline to sell its old equipment and buy new.

Fourth. Not only does this policy impair a carrier's incentive to dispose of the old equipment, but in many cases it would make it impossible for the carrier to acquire new equipment except at exorbitant rates of interest. As the Members know, the air transport industry of the United States is preparing for its most revolutionary development. The industry has committed itself to purchase more than $2 billion worth of operating property and equipment by 1960. This includes 199 jet transports and 224 turbo props. The local-service airlines have placed orders for about 30 new and modern aircraft to replace the DC–3's which they have been operating during most of the 10 years of their existence. Our territorial carriers are promoting the development of new aircraft designs which will improve their services in the territories, particularly under the difficult conditions presented in Alaska. In providing for these new developments the carriers are following precisely the policy laid down by Congress in the Civil Aeronautics Act. The financial burden which will be imposed upon the airlines by these developments is perfectly obvious, since the total investment of the airlines in 1955 was only $1,400,000,000. Part of this development is being provided by the resources of airlines which are not now subsidized, but the subsidized airlines must participate equally. It would be contrary to the public interest, and contrary to the policy of the Civil Aeronautics Act, to deprive these carriers of the use of gains they make on the sale of their old equipment for the financing of this new development.

The carriers which will be affected by this legislation fall into four major categories:

First. The local-service airlines. As the Members know, the local-service carriers are those carriers which have been established during the past 10 years whose efforts are devoted to providing service to the smaller communities throughout the Nation. Your committee is proud of their record of achievement during these 10 years. There is no group which makes such earnest efforts to provide a good service to their communities, or who make such strenuous efforts to operate their airlines with maximum efficiency in order to reduce the subsidy paid to them. By any standards, the amount of that subsidy is being reduced. However, their efforts to eliminate or reduce much further the subsidy burden will be thwarted unless they can acquire new and more efficient aircraft. A number of new aircraft have been ordered. They cost approximately $540,000 each, as contrasted with their present DC–3's, which cost in the neighborhood of $125,000. The idea of preventing these carriers from utilizing any book profits they may make from the sale of their old equipment for the purchase of new seems to me to be plainly contrary to the public interest.

Second. The second class of carriers are those serving our Territories, particularly Alaska. Here again we have a class of subsidized carrier which has been struggling with inadequate equipment. They are small airlines, and those of us who are familiar with the scope and character of the service they provide are proud of them, too. Any governmental policy which thwarts their efforts to improve their service through better equipment is a bad one, and the Congress should prevent its adoption.

Third. The third group of carriers are our international carriers, whose responsibility it is to maintain American-flag service all over the world against foreign competition, which is heavily subsidized and largely government-owned. This country is fortunate in being able to say that its international air transport system is the finest in the world, notwithstanding the effectiveness of the foreign competition which they face. It is among this class of carriers that reequipment requirements are the heaviest burden in terms of dollars. They must be equipped with jet transports. They cannot maintain their position in the absence of the most modern equipment, and no obstacle should be placed in their path toward the achievement of those ends.

Fourth. The fourth class of carriers are the newest. Our helicopter operators in three metropolitan centers have been authorized by the Civil Aeronautics Board to conduct helicopter services. Their contribution to more efficient and convenient transportation within these congested areas is just beginning. They are heavily subsidized at the present time, by reason of inadequate equipment. No matter how hard they work, no matter how efficient they become, no matter how much traffic they carry—they cannot reduce subsidy substantially without improved helicopters. They are in the process of developing and buying these new helicopters. They, also, must be permitted to use the capital gains from sale of their old equipment to make a part payment on the new.

The House will wish to know the effect of the establishment of this policy upon the amount of subsidy that must be appropriated by the Congress each year for the maintenance of these various classes of carriers. Your committee is prepared to answer this question. We reached the conclusion, as stated in our report, that this bill would, over a period of years, permit the reduction of subsidy. After studying the efficiency of the equipment presently available to these carriers, as well as the efficiency of the equipment which could be designed and acquired, it was perfectly plain that subsidy would be reduced. We also reached this conclusion on the basis of the past experience of the entire industry. As is well known, airline fares are one of the few prices which have not increased during the past decade. This record has been established notwithstanding an increase in the average airline paycheck by some 135 percent, and the cost of other things the airline must buy by some 90 percent. In spite of these increases in the overall costs of airline operation, the domestic trunklines have been able to reduce their unit costs from 31.13 cents per available ton-mile in 1946 to 26.25 cents. This is a 16 percent reduction. This reduction reflects the successive additions of more modern airplanes—the DC–4, then the DC–6, then the DC–7, and the various developments of the Constellation aircraft. With the increased efficiency of those aircraft came unit cost reductions, notwithstanding increases in overall costs. We can expect the presently subsidized airlines, through the acquisition of more efficient equipment, to achieve these same results, and with them corresponding subsidy reductions. As I have pointed out, in many cases no reductions can be anticipated in the absence of new equipment.

While your committee was convinced of the necessity of permitting subsidized carriers to invest their capital gains in new equipment, it considered that this should not be left to the discretion of the carriers. These carriers are subsidized, and it was considered necessary to treat them differently in this respect than a nonsubsidized business. A nonsubsidized business is free to take its capital gains and devote them to any purpose it sees fit, but it was your committee's opinion that this discretion should not be allowed the subsidized airlines. Consequently, it was provided that if a subsidized airline fails to invest these gains in new property or equipment within a reasonable time after the gains are realized, the gains will be used to reduce the subsidy to which that airline would otherwise be entitled. It will be the responsibility of the Civil Aeronautics Board to administer and enforce this provision.

Mr. Chairman, I commend this bill to the favorable action of the House. It only writes into law a principle by which any thrifty person or corporation should be guided, and that is that your capital should not be used to pay your daily expenses. It should be used to acquire new and improved capital assets.

A criticism has been voiced that the bill is too broad in that it permits the carriers to reinvest in "other property similar or related in service or use."

The term "property" is defined as "depreciable property used or useful in the carrier's normal operations." If the carrier reinvests the profits from the sale of property in property other than that defined, such profits are subject to recapture and offset against subsidy. The term "property used or useful" is a term which has been the basis on which the CAB has determined the carriers investment base for computing the return element in mail rates since 1938. Under the terms of this bill it will continue to judge whether the carriers have properly invested profits from equipment sales.

CAB MAIL RATES

Open rate period: Period of time necessary to complete all the steps in the rate-making procedures—Public hearings, briefs and oral arguments before the Board. This period may extend over a period ranging from a year to 10 years. Pan American's Atlantic division rate case extended from 1946 to 1953 and was settled finally in 1956.

Rates during open rate period: Rates during open rate periods are established on the basis of actual revenues received during the period, actual expenses incurred less any items of expense which the CAB decides are not justified and a return on actual inivestment at 7 percent. As the CAB has construed profits realized from the sale of equipment, during open rate periods, as "all other revenues" such profits are included in revenues and thus are applied to reduce subsidy. Hence all profits from equipment sales realized by Pan American during the period 1946–53 were used to reduce subsidy. During open rate periods carriers are paid on the basis of "temporary rates" which are in effect payments on account, and are adjusted upward or downward when final rates are determined.

Prospective rates: These rates are made for future periods and are based on estimates of revenues and expenses for such future period. Normally the investment base on which return is computed is taken as the investment at the date at which the rate is effective. For prospective periods the rate of return which the CAB has found to be reasonable is 8 percent for domestic operations and 9 percent for international and overseas operations. The difference in rate of return (7 percent as compared to 8 and 9 percent) is to reflect the fact during operations under prospective rates the risk of making a return is entirely with the carriers, while rates made for open rate periods are theoretically supposed to provide a 7-percent return on a "cost plus return" basis. In practice no carrier ever realizes a rate of return even approaching this level during open rate periods.

LOCAL SERVICE AIRLINES

H. R. 8902 is of particular importance to the local service airlines because of the currency of its timing. Five years ago it would not have had a fraction of the importance to the local carriers that it has now because 5 years ago there was no prospect that the local carriers would in the near future commence a new equipment program and there was indeed no really suitable DC–3 replacement upon which to base such a program.

Today, however, the situation is quite different. The DC–3's have now passed the 20th anniversary of their initiation into scheduled flight service. (By coincidence this anniversary fell on the 80th anniversary of Custer's last stand.) There is now at least one suitable new airplane approaching a production status and numbers of used but modern postwar equipment are becoming available for purchase by the local carriers. The next 5 years will undoubtedly witness a major reequipment of the local airlines with both newly designed and used modern aircraft if H. R. 8902 becomes law.

The local service airlines have no extensive capital resources of their own with which to finance a reequipment program. As a matter of fact, as of December 31, 1955, the combined earnings of all 13 local service carriers for the 10 years in which the industry has been operating amounted to a deficit of $326,000. They were, in other words, $326,000 in the hole. The earnings record of the industry has been a most discouraging one so that the flotation of equity capital in major amounts will be extremely difficult unless the benefits of H. R. 8902 become available to the industry. The principal financial resource of every local carrier is, in fact, its flight equipment, and every local carrier will rely principally on the proceeds of the sale of its present flight equipment to finance new and modern aircraft. If the proceeds of the sale of old equipment are confiscated by the Civil Aeronautics Board under mail-rate policies which regard those proceeds as a chargeable setoff against mail pay, then the only resource readily available to the local airlines for financing new equipment has been torn away from them.

Most of the local airlines bought their DC–3's as war surplus and paid approximately $50,000 or $60,000 per aircraft; this is the equivalent of about $3,000 per passenger seat in the aircraft. Inflation and the general development of the air transport market has raised the current worth of even these old aircraft up to more than twice such a purchase price, but new aircraft suitable for local service, such as the "Friendship" transport being developed by Fairchild Aircraft & Engine Co. and already ordered by some of the local carriers, will cost a minimum of $600,000 per plane or about $15,000 per seat. These modern aircraft will have relatively higher earning capabilities than the old DC–3's, and they will certainly be able to pay for themselves over a period of operation in the expanding local air transport business, but money must be available as at least a downpayment on them. As previously pointed out, the only readily available source of such a downpayment is the proceeds of sale of the old units of the local service fleet, and H. R. 8902 thus becomes the immediate pivot point of the whole reequipment program of the local carriers and of the financial progress expected to issue from such reequipment.

THIS BILL WILL BENEFIT ALL CARRIERS, NOT ONLY A FEW

The claim has been made that the benefits of this bill would go to only a few airlines, and primarily Pan American Airways.

This just is not a true statement of the facts. The bill was supported by all of the subsidized carriers which include the local service carriers, the helicopter operators, the territorial carriers, the international and overseas operators, and the entire civil air transport industry, including the nonsubsidized carriers. All subsidized carriers are in the same boat. Without capital gains from the sale of flight equipment, it will be almost impossible for them to carry out the financing of their re-equipment programs.

Figures from the minority report have been cited as to the amount of capital gains which the Board has taken into account in the past, to support an argument that the bill would benefit only a few. I would like to have you look closely at this list. The vast majority of the carriers listed are local service carriers and territorial carriers. During the period 1951 to 1955, the workhorse of their operations was the DC–3 twin-engine airplane. During this purchase, and it was necessary for them to retain for their growing service all of the aircraft in their possession. Under these circumstances there would, of course, be no sales of flight equipment and hence no equipment sales profits available for the CAB to latch on to for us in reducing subsidy.

Looking again at the figures set forth in the minority report, you will see nothing to indicate whether these carriers sold equipment and retained profits under the Board's policy of permitting carriers to retain profits while operating under closed rates, which policy was in effect prior to 1954. The truth of the matter is that these figures merely demonstrate that certain carriers which were on subsidy during the period referred to were also on open mail rates, and that they sold flight equipment with the firm hope that they would be able to convince the CAB that the profits realized should be retained by the carriers in order to finance the purchase of new equipment during this period.

Pan American, from 1952 through 1955, added to its operating fleets some 45 DC–6B's, 3 DC–6A's, and 7 DC–7B's. A comparison of the cost of flight equipment as shown on Pan American's balance sheet in its annual report at December 31, 1951, with its balance sheet as of December 31, 1955, shows a net increase in flight equipment of some $69 million. It has turned out that Pan American's sale of flight equipment in order to make funds available to purchase this new equipment was a grave mistake as the financial benefit of such sales has enured entirely to the United States Treasury because of the CAB's erroneous policy of confiscating such profits during this period. This historic record of the amount of equipment sales profits which have been taken from the carriers to reduce subsidy is of no relevance in determining who will benefit from the legislation we are here considering in the future.

Many of the local service carriers have placed orders for new equipment which will cost them between $500,000 and $600,000 per aircraft, and others are considering such orders, and will eventually be required to place them, if they are to continue to develop their services. How can anyone say that these small carriers will not benefit from the sale of their DC–3 fleets in the financing of the purchase of their replacement fleets? Without the benefit of the profits from flight equipment sales, I am sure that many of them will be unable to finance, either by borrowing the necessary funds or by marketing their equity securities. The figures cited in the minority report are of no relevance in determining who will benefit from this legislation in the future. All carriers will benefit and should be put on the same footing with the right to dispose of equipment when they see fit, and to retain the proceeds to reinvest in new equipment.

BENEFITS TO AIRLINE FINANCING

The Civil Aeronautics Act provides that the Board fix mail rates—including subsidy where required—to permit the carriers, under honest, economic and efficient management, to maintain the type of service required to further the commerce, postal service and national defense.

The Board fixes the rates of return to the subsidized carriers, and can make such adjustments as it finds necessary, in either direction, with the opening of a rate case on the initiative of the Board itself, or the carrier in question.

Subsidy rates for future periods have in the past been fixed by the Civil Aeronautics Board on a basis designed to provide the domestic airlines with approximately an 8 percent return on their investment, and the international aircarriers with a return of some 10 percent. This latter amount has recently been reduced to 9 percent. In both instances, the carriers were permitted to retain capital gains on the sale of flight equipment during these future periods when they were on closed rates. However, the Board has frequently been unable or unwilling to handle rate cases expeditiously, and therefore, carriers kept on an open rate for greatly extended periods of time have had their subsidy reduced by the amount of capital gains. The rates of return, at best, have not been excessive, and some question has been raised as to whether they have been adequate. Stocks of the subsidized carriers are selling generally below their book value, and many of them have experienced serious problems in obtaining equity capital.

The Aviation Securities Committee of the Investment Bankers Association of America, in a report dated June 24, 1954, stated:

When the Civil Aeonautics Act was passed in 1938, the primary purpose of the act was to encourage the sound development of air transportation in the United States. For many years the act was regarded as an exceptionally fine piece of legislation, and it has been most effective in accomplishing its major objective. In recent years, however, the interpretation of the act appears to have taken on an increasingly restrictive character, to such a degree that, in our opinion, the carriers operating services requiring Government financial support are not receiving the income necessary to enable them "to maintain and continue the development of air transportation to the extent and of the character and quality required for the commerce of the United States, the Postal Service, and the national defense."

We believe that investor confidence in the air transportation industry is at one of the lowest points that it has been since the Civil Aeronautics Act was passed in 1938, and and we believe that prompt action by the administration and the Congress is needed to restore investor confidence in this essential industry.

WILL ULTIMATELY REDUCE SUBSIDY REQUIREMENTS

It is difficult to say with any degree of precision exactly what the short term cost of this bill will be in subsidy requirements. Nonetheless, there are good reasons to believe, as the committee stated in its report on this bill, that the ultimate effect will be to reduce subsidy requirements. This, as has been pointed out previously, is confirmed by the experience of the air transport industry in being able to reduce its unit costs as new and more economical equipment has been acquired. It is largely for this reason that the average air fare today stands just about where it did in 1938—which means that, in terms of 1938 dollars, fares have actually been reduced over 50 percent. This has not been the case with other transportation fares. My information is that the average airline pay check has increased some 135 percent in this same period, and that the cost of the things which airlines must buy to operate their business has almost doubled, as represented by a better than 90 percent increase in the consumers' price index from 1938 to 1955.

From 1946 to 1955, the domestic trunklines have been able to reduce their available ton-mile unit costs from 31.13 cents in 1946, to 26.25 cents (16 percent reduction) at the end of 1955, according to CAB Form 41 reports. This reduction reflects the successive additions of DC–4's DC–6's DC–7's and Constellation aircraft to the fleets of the domestic trunklines. There is no reason to doubt that similar reductions will be possible for other carriers when they acquire more suitable aircraft. This, in turn, will mean lower subsidy requirements.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to commend the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS] for the very splendid and spirited statement he has made on this bill now before the House. I can readily understand the feeling that he has shown in presenting this matter to the House, for the reason he knows that the House Committtee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has given this matter very careful consideration. Copies of the hearings are here in the House and readily available to anyone who may desire to see them. The hearings will show that the committee went out of its way to examine this question from every standpoint. The best that I can say in favor of the legislation is the fact that after that careful study had been made and hearings held, by the committee, the committee reported the bill unanimously with one exception. That individual is as sincere as any of us who voted for the bill but unfortunately he was not present when the vote was taken by the committee, and thus my reason for saying that it was unanimous with one exception.

Let us bear in mind, that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of this House that has had jurisdiction over the question of aviation for these many years, and has provided a splendid record of accomplishment, is the committee that has made a study of this question, and through the hearings it developed to the satisfaction of every member of that committee, with the exception of one, that this legislation was necessary and would be helpful in strengthening our air service. I do not know of anything that is more discouraging than to be a member of a committee that has given the study to a matter such as this and then to realize, through no fault of its own, but through lack of understanding on the part of a good many Members who voted against the rule without knowing as fully as they should, what really is at stake. The fact is that a whispering campaign has been carried on throughout this House on both sides of the aisle against this bill. All sorts of statements that cannot be substantiated have been made. A close study of this proposed legislation will reveal that this bill if adopted will be one of the finest and most helpful things that could be done to improve flight equipment and is certain thereby to provide a higher degree of safety, more efficient equipment for use in time of emergency and enable our air transportation to operate more efficiently and thereby sooner be taken off of subsidy.

I certainly hope that the membership of the House will check with the members of the committee who have made a study of this matter in order that they may get the real story that underlies the adoption of this bill by the committee by almost a unanimous vote.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KLEIN. I am very happy the gentleman from New Jersey made that statement. There are all kinds of rumors around. Many, many of the Members are misinformed, and I agree with the gentleman. We heard much of the testimony, and the committee reported this bill out almost unanimously, and I hope also that all Members will vote for this bill.

Mr. QUIGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUIGLEY. I have just taken his advice, and I checked with two members of the committee who are sitting near me, and both of them are opposed to the bill. They explained they were not present when this so-called unanimous consent vote was taken, except one.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I suggest the gentleman talk to somebody who was present and attended the hearings and who knows something of what is in the bill.

Mr. SIEMINSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SIEMINSKI. I voted for the rule and I shall vote for this bill. But, I hope when our time comes you will not forget the individual taxpayer on this basis, that on every tax dollar it is estimated Uncle Sam now takes in, corporations pay 19 and we pay 31 cents. There should be a more balanced spread with less gap.

Mr. WOLVERTON. This bill does not in any way adversely affect that situation.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HESELTON. My good friend has twice referred to a vote that was unanimous, except for one. I do not want to leave any misapprehension. I wish he had mentioned my name, because I was the one. There has been reference to a whispering campaign. I have not whispered about this. I placed in the RECORD every available piece of information I could in a special order, because I wanted the Members to have it. I think my friend will agree with me, and I am sure that another member of my committee will agree, that I left the committee hearing because I did not want to oppose the bill in view of the position the rest of the committee had taken.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I think the best answer I can make to the gentleman is the fact that when I did refer to him I referred to him as one who was as sincere in his viewpoint as those with opposite views. My high regard for him is such that there could never be at this or any other time any intention on my part to in any way, directly or indirectly, say anything that would be discourteous or disparaging to the gentleman, because I have such a high regard for him. I value his friendship and consider him one of the most sincere, conscientious, and able Members of this House.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time for such disposition as he may wish to make of it, to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON].

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much the courtesy of my friend from California [Mr. HINSHAW]. It is utterly impossible for me and would be for anybody else in the few minutes available to meet fully the arguments that have been presented so ably by the gentleman from Arkansas, my friend, the chairman of the committee. However, I am going to try to hit the high spots.

This is windfall legislation of the worst character. I do not believe it is intended as such by the members of the subcommittee or the full committee. That it is windfall legislation is not my opinion alone; that is the opinion and it is in the record expressed by the Vice Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board. Everyone could see it who chooses to read it. That is the judgment which was expressed. He was joined by a former colleague of ours, who was then Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Honorable Ross Rizley, now a member of the Federal bench.

It does remain an indisputable fact that the Bureau of the Budget is opposed to this legislation. I took the precaution to ask them after the amendment had been adopted if they were still opposed, and they said they were. That, too, is a matter of public record. The General Accounting Office, through Mr. Campbell, expressed opposition before the committee and went into detail as to why that agency was opposed to it. I took the precaution of asking him, following the action of the committee, if he still remained opposed to the legislation as it was amended. I placed his letter in the RECORD and it is available to all Members. He said flatly he was opposed. The fact remains that there is opposition from every Federal agency involved.

There is support individually by 2 members of the Civil Aeronautics Board, and I submit that support is heavily outweighed by the compelling reasons for the opposition which has been expressed fully and publicly.

Why is it described as windfall legislation? Well, because the Department of Commerce presented a tabulation as to who would have obtained the benefits of this bill had it been on the books during the last 5 years. That is in the minority report which is available at the desk if anyone is interested. It occupies 1 full page, page 4 of the minority report.

The sheer fact is that four airlines would have received $21,498,000 in unjustified double subsidy out of the $21,900,790. Those are not my words, they are not my figures, but the figures of the Department of Commerce submitted to this Congress.

A great deal of concern has been expressed as to what would happen to the feeder airlines, the smaller airlines. The sheer fact is that these four big airlines, Pan American with $17,288,000; Braniff, with $1,515,000; Delta, with $1,400,000; and the International line of Trans-World, before it went off subsidies, with $1,295,000, would have been the chief beneficiaries. As I recall the figure, 29 other airlines—it is all in the RECORD—would have received nothing under this bill. Some of you are served by airlines which are off subsidies—American, Eastern, National, Capital, Delta, Northwest, TWA, and United, and others. Mr. Chairman, they will not receive 1 penny if we pass this bill. They have had initiative and foresight and ability enough to take themselves off the Federal Treasury, off the taxpayers' shoulders and no specious or fine spun arguments presented by apologists for subsidies can contradict that fact.

Only yesterday afternoon Capital announced that it was purchasing some 14 new modern jet airplanes for $53 million, on top of 15 turbojets for $15,400,000 more not out of the Federal Treasury but out of funds they have earned. You will not find any lobbyists for that line outside this Chamber with cups in their hands crying about their weaknesses. These lines have demonstrated their independence and their success. Some smaller airlines have gone out and borrowed money ranging from $650,000 up to $2, $3, and $4 millions, not out of the Federal Treasury but from the record of their own earnings and their competence in the business world, as examples of those who show what private enterprise can do and do not spend time and money whining about their lot and scheming to get more and more handouts.

The people who have received the benefit of the most subsidy over the years are the people who are insisting most vocally that they should receive this additional benefit, and they are in large measure among the large airlines of this country. The official figures which I have show that as of July 18 of this year 32 airlines have received $502,915,000 of subsidy from the Federal Treasury. Pan American World Airways, Inc., has received $219,768,000. But it wants more and is working desperately to get it.

It has been pointed out by the General Accounting Office and the Bureau of the Budget that this is depreciation piled on depreciation, that these aircraft have been fully depreciated in many instances. But what they want is double depreciation. That is the sort of thing you are confronted with under the terms of this legislation. Whether it is intended I do not have any idea but you must draw your own conclusions.

The suggestion has been made that safety is involved, the suggestion has been made that these airlines are trying to get rid of old, dilapidated equipment and that somehow or other they are unable to do it. I asked the Vice-Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board to tell me what the situation was. On page 13422 of the RECORD of July 18 is a table he furnished. The depreciated cost as of December 31, 1955, of all the aircraft involved was $127,005,000, but the estimated market value was $228,895,000, more than double. Pan American's depreciated loss was $79,147,000; the estimated market value was $130,200,000. No wonder it wants this bill.

The aircraft are being sold all the time. The profits are being realized all the time. Yet they want to go into the Federal Treasury and ask the American taxpayer not just to pay single subsidies but to pay twice, to pay a double subsidy.

If I thought this had any effect whatsoever on the equipment proposition, on the modernizing of equipment, which could not be accomplished without further demands on the overburdened taxpayers. I would not be here before you making this statement.

Some suggestion has been made that there are some airlines interested in opposing this bill because they are in competition. Why should they not be interested? All they want is a decent break without handicaps imposed by unwarranted legislation. That is true.

Who are those airlines who will not receive one single, solitary dollar or penny out of this bill? American, Capital, Caribbean-Atlantic, Delta, Eastern, National, Northwest, Trans World, United, Western, American Air Export & Import, The Flying Tiger Line, Riddle Airlines, and Slick Airways. I submit we should respect them and their interest in free and fair competition.

So you can see that in spite of all the fine and emphatic words presented in favor of this legislation, there is offered a very serious question as to whether we should endorse it at this dying hour of this session. I hope in the very few minutes you have, you can examine the facts. If you can, the decision here tonight will not be in doubt.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COUDERT].

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, I have the warmest regard for my friend from Massachusetts. I was a little surprised, however, to find that his objection to this bill seems to stem very largely from the fact that one particular carrier would be a substantial beneficiary of this bill. He neglected, however, to advise the House that this one particular carrier is the only certificated carrier that competes only in the world market with subsidized foreign-operated companies, often by governments, to wit, Pan American World Airlines. The others like American and Eastern, that he named, have large and profitable domestic markets. Perhaps they can afford to continue without subsidies. Perhaps they can afford to acquire these new $6 million jets in place of the $2 million piston planes now in use. Pan American Airlines has, as I recall it, made contracts for hundreds of millions of dollars of jets which obviously means its credit is of the utmost importance and that this bill is of great importance to it as well as other lines that have to go to the banks for credit to purchase new equipment. In my humble judgment this bill is necessary for lines which intend to keep equipment up to date and who may have to go into the credit market for the funds to buy new planes of the most modern kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MACK].

Mr. MACK of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think it is very important that the members of the committee today understand exactly what we are trying to do. The Subcommittee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce studied this problem for nearly 3 months. We studied it in previous years and, I believe, the committee is familiar with the problem confronting us today. The arguments against this legislation remind me of the man who put vitamin pills in his drink because he wanted to build himself up while he was tearing himself down. That is exactly what the opponents of this bill are trying to do. They say they want to subsidize the local service carriers that go into the remote sections of our country, but they do not want to let them apply their capital gains in the purchase of new equipment. And, in so doing, you are cutting the throat of all the local service carriers in the country. You will not have to worry about having an Allegheny Airlines or an Ozark Airlines, if you do not pass this legislation. The suggestion has been made that we guarantee loans to the local carriers so that they can get the financial assistance that is necessary to carry on their very vital work. The gentleman from Massachusetts has mentioned some reports or some estimate that was made over the past 5 years concerning subsidies and the fact that the larger carriers had gotten the bulk of the benefit. Well, that has been true over the past 5 years, but that will not be true over the next 5 years. The local service carriers today are using equipment which was produced 20 years ago. It is worn out and some of it is even approaching the dangerous stage. It is necessary for every local service carrier in the country to purchase new equipment today because the DC–3 which was built 20 years ago no longer will do the job and even if it would do the job, it would probably cost more money to operate the DC–3's than it would to operate and carry the additional payload in a Martin or a Convair.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACK of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. The gentleman from Illinois is a very distinguished, experienced, and fearless flier himself. He is talking a lot of hard sense. He mentioned the Ozark Airlines. That is one of the small feeder lines serving communities in Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, and maybe 1 or 2 spots in Indiana. They have mostly old DC–3's, as the gentleman has just pointed out.

Unless they can replace that equipment soon they will simply have to go out of business, and the people in a lot of these fairly good-sized towns will be denied service that they so sorely need.

So, from the standpoint of safety and economy and numbers, bear in mind that to replace these planes costs 2 or 3 times as much as the others.

I want to compliment the gentleman on the fine statement he is making, and I hope the Members of this House will pass this legislation that passed the other body by a vote of 52 to 22, more than 2 to 1, after long exhaustive hearings, after most enlightening and elevating debate over in the other body on the 9th of this month, and which has been seriously considered not just today or yesterday, or a month ago, but for 3 or 4 months by the able Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of this House.

Mr. MACK of Illinois. I thank the gentleman, and I want to tell you that if we do not help these little local air carriers we are going to cut down the total revenue of the trunk carriers, the domestic carriers all over the country, because they will lose a great deal of passenger traffic fed into their terminals by these local lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 4 additional minutes.

Mr. QUIGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MACK of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. QUIGLEY. My question is this: If these local feeder airlines are stuck with this old, wornout, dilapidated equipment, these 20-year-old DC–3's, how are you going to sell them to make all this capital gain?

Mr. MACK of Illinois. I may say to the gentleman that there just happens to be a market for these DC–3's. There is a market in contract carrying and there has been a great expansion in the executive type use of aircraft in this country, an expansion that has amazed us.

Mr. QUIGLEY. But if the DC–3's are not safe for commercial passenger-carrying how can they be safe for the use of the executives of companies?

Mr. MACK of Illinois. I might say to the gentleman that these airplanes can be reconditioned for cargo aircraft and other uses but I hope the gentleman is not going to force Allegheny Airlines to carry passengers in these dilapidated, wornout, 20-year-old DC–3's indefinitely.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACK of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I just say to the gentleman that there is a peculiar situation in the matter of aircraft at the present time, apparently a temporary situation, but there is a tremendous demand for second-hand aircraft, a tremendous market, and the craft are selling for a good deal more than they sold for 4 years ago because of the demand.

Mr. QUIGLEY. But I do not see how, if they are not safe for commercial traffic, they can be considered safe for individual use.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACK of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. I wish to call attention to another facet of this replacement program that we should not lose sight of and that is that most of these new planes will be built in this country by Pratt-Whitney, and Boeing on the west coast, and others, and it will create many jobs for our American people and take care of our little manufacturers and subcontractors.

Mr. MACK of Illinois. I thank the gentleman.

I wanted to cover the question of capital gains, but it appears I won't have time. However, I think that the statements that were made regarding capital gains were very, very misleading and were not entirely accurate. Under this bill, capital gains would be applied.

We want to take the subsidized airlines and give them the same opportunity to exist as the nonsubsidized airlines have today, and I believe that this is a very sound proposal.

Mr. FRIEDEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACK of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. FRIEDEL. Is it not true that the subsidized airlines will have to use this money for new equipment where the non-subsidized airlines can pay it out to their stockholders in dividends?

Mr. MACK of Illinois. That is exactly correct. This bill will apply only to the subsidized airlines.

Our airline industry today is faced with one of the biggest reequipment programs that we have ever seen.

This year the airlines of this country have on order 308 piston-powered planes, they have on order 244 turboprop planes, they have on order 156 jet-type commercial transports, a total of 708 planes costing over $1 billion.

I want to mention that in 1946 your DC–6 that was used by the commercial airlines cost $587,000. Today they cost $1,494,442. That is three times what they cost in 1946. The Convair in 1947 cost $134,640. It now costs $600,000.

This is legislation to keep these people in business.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD on the bill under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORANO. Mr. Chairman, we are considering here legislation dealing with the appropriate treatment of gains on the sale of flight equipment by subsidized air carriers. What is difficult to understand is how anyone can maintain that the principles embodied in this bill are right for an airline with gross revenues of $49 million, and wrong for one with gross revenues of $51 million.

One of the glories of this country is that, unlike some others, we do not have different rules of law for different people. We have the same rule of law for everyone. This has been true of our aviation legislation in the past, and we must keep it true in the future.

Opponents say the bill should not apply to subsidized carriers with gross revenues exceeding $50 million. It has been suggested that an amendment should be offered to accomplish that purpose. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] made that suggestion. What does this mean in plain English. At the moment there is only one such carrier—Pan American World Airways, Inc. They might just as well say that this bill shall apply to all subsidized airlines except Pan American. That is precisely its effect.

Discrimination of this sort is indefensible. Grant that Pan American is now a large company, but it did not start that way. It started in 1927, with a dozen World War I pilots each putting up $25,000, and many long years elapsed before it had revenues of $50 million. It got those revenues by tackling jobs first in South America, then across the Pacific, and finally across the Atlantic, which no one else wanted to tackle at the time, and performing them to the satisfaction of its customers and to the credit of its Government. Pan American is a typical American success story of starting small and growing big, through hard work, under the free-enterprise system.

There is no airline whose ability to finance new equipment is of greater importance to the United States. Pan American conducts essential national interest service to parts of the world in the Middle East, in Africa, and in the Orient, in which the United States has the most vital interest. Unlike our domestic airlines it has to compete against foreign flag airlines, solidly backed by their governments and paying their employees half the American standard of wages or less. It is vital that such a company should always have the very best equipment. Last fall Pan American took the lead in ordering jet transports, the first American built, from the Boeing Airplane Co., in Seattle, the Douglas Aircraft Co., in Los Angeles, and the Pratt-Whitney Engine Co., in Hartford, thereby triggering a flood of orders to our American aircraft and engine builders which now exceeds $1 billion. These airplanes ordered by Pan American and other American flag lines will keep our air transportation in the forefront in time of peace, and would be of inestimable value to the national defense if emergency should occur. Pan American now has the job of financing these orders. Pan American needs what this bill provides just as much as does the feeder airline which is transforming its fleet from DC–3's to F–27's, and it is just as important for the country that it have this.

It is said that if this legislation had been on the books in the past, a large share of the benefit would have fallen to Pan American. This is due in part to the fact that the feeder airlines were simply not able to sell equipment since they had no available replacement for the DC–3. It is due also to the fact that the CAB kept Pan American on an open mail rate much longer than it did other lines. It is due in part to the simple fact that Pan American provides such a large share of the international service where subsidy is required because of the through traffic and intense foreign competition. I am proud to say that I represent the district in which the able, competent, and farsighted president of this company lives. He is Juan Trippe, of Greenwich, Conn. I hope the bill will pass as reported by the committee without amendment.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER].

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, this debate has gotten into the situation where, I think, it needs to be simplified. Let us look at some of the realities involved. I want to emphasize two or three things about which there seems to be some misconception.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a tax bill. This does not affect the tax basis for any of this money which is received as capital gains in any way. It does not affect that at all. If any impression has been gained in any of this debate that it does affect the tax matter, that is certainly erroneous.

Next, I want to emphasize what has been said that this affects only subsidized lines. It has no effect whatever upon lines that are off subsidy. That is important when you talk about these various airlines. Certain of them are prosperous enough and have good enough routes and enough traffic that they do not require any subsidy from the Federal Government. Some of them have not such profitable lines and those are paid subsidies.

The third thing I want to emphasize is that actually this whole situation has arisen only in the last 2 years. It has arisen by reason, as some of us view it, of a misinterpretation of the intent of the Congress with respect to the original law which was passed in 1938 respecting civil aviation. In the original Civil Aeronautics Act in 1938 "all other revenue" was never meant to mean funds from sale of assets. The effect given to that phrase by the Civil Aeronautics Board and the courts can be rectified by this bill. I hope it is enacted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BEAMER].

Mr. BEAMER. Mr. Chairman, it is very vital that we remember in these closing days of the 84th Congress it is very apt that we rush through legislation and sometimes, as has happened in the discussion of the rule on this bill, we listen to misinformation and misrepresentation. Unfortunately something happened in the discussion on the rule and the vote on the rule, because I feel confident that many people voted against the rule only because they thought there was something sinister about this particular legislation. Now, there is nothing sinister about it. There is only one thing that I would like to speak on. If you are interested in the little fellow, if you are interested in the 13 small feeder lines, if you are interested in carrying on the advancement of air transportation, and all types of transportation, you will want to support this measure. The large companies, particularly 2 or 3 large companies, are going to benefit, but I say to you not in the same proportion and not in the same percentage that the small companies will benefit. I like to think of the small companies serving my State of Indiana, parts of Illinois and Ohio and Michigan. You can multiply that situation by all the States, and these smaller companies are the people who today are in a pinch. These are the ones that would like to buy new equipment; these are the ones that would like to improve their service in order to render better service to their local communities.

We have passed legislation to permit the building of better airports, and we are going to have better transportation of all types if we can pass this bill, which is strictly a new accounting system. That is about all it is. It is not giving any more money to any one company than the amount to which it is entitled. May I suggest, too, that some of these big companies to which we have been referring are the people who have pioneered in the field of aviation, and they are also the people who today are conducting certain air routes that are not at all profitable. These are money-losing air routes, but, at the same time, they are rendering a service to the community and to the Nation. It is in this general interest that I support H. R. 8902.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H. R. 8902, a bill which has received very careful consideration by our committee. The bill reverses what I consider to be a very unfair accounting practice of the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the bill will be passed by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Chairman, it is easy to receive and to pass on misinformation. It is easy to receive and to pass on rumor of misinformation and hence lead the Members astray in their consideration of a measure of this sort. There comes no windfall to anyone in this legislation. There is no giveaway; no windfall. And, I say that because of this: These subsidized carriers, the carriers that are still subsidized, are the only companies in the United States that cannot make a capital gain and keep it, under the rules of the Civil Aeronautics Board adopted pursuant to a Supreme Court decision. The reason they cannot keep it is because the Civil Aeronautics Board is requiring them to credit that capital gain against subsidy payments received by them. Let us take the large carriers that are not on subsidy. They can make capital gains to suit themselves and either keep them, reinvest them in airplanes, or pay them out in dividends. No one has challenged that statement, and I ask anyone who disputes that to rise and say so. That is a fact. The only carriers who are required to credit capital gains back are the subsidized carriers, the very ones who need it most. They are the ones who need it.

I really think we ought to agree to this bill. We have had long consideration of it in our subcommittee, as to what to do to benefit the subsidized carriers and get them off subsidy so they will not need subsidy any more. This is one of the ways to get them off subsidy and aid them to get new aircraft which will operate cheaper per-seat-mile so they can get off subsidy.

Another thing that the Civil Aeronautics Board is attempting to do is to grant them routes which are profitable. I hope that is understood.

I have much more that I could say, but I should like to yield to anyone who has a question that I might answer at this time, because I am sure that Members have questions.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. The carriers that are not on subsidy have to spend their money to buy new equipment—and it is money that they do not get as handouts from the Government—they have to spend it for new equipment in order to stay in business. That is what they are doing.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would like to point out to my friend that unsubsidized are unrestricted.

Mr. JUDD. Why, of course.

Mr. HINSHAW. At the present time.

Mr. JUDD. And the ones who are still on subsidy want all those benefits that the others have earned by getting off subsidy, plus a larger subsidy. Why do they not get off subsidy and then they can get the same benefits? That is the inducement for them to get off subsidy.

Mr. HINSHAW. They would be very happy to do it, to get off subsidy, if they could.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SCRIVNER. I have been trying to work out in my mind just exactly what we are faced with here. We have certain airlines in this country, some of which are subsidized by Federal funds and others which are not. My understanding is that back in 1939 we passed a law relating to subsidies and how the payments should be based; is that correct?

Mr. HINSHAW. That is correct.

Mr. SCRIVNER. And in figuring out what they should get, the question came in of other revenues. Then it was a question of applying that law to all of them, and the Supreme Court, 2 years or so ago, in a decision interpreted "other revenues" in such a way as far as the subsidized carriers were concerned, but it did not apply to the unsubsidized lines.

Mr. HINSHAW. It did not apply to them.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Because they were not subsidized.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is right.

Mr. SCRIVNER. And what you are doing now is saying that in 1939 we passed a law, and we meant what we said in 1939, regardless of what the Supreme Court said that we intended to say.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is right.

Mr. SCRIVNER. And in doing so this other income or "other revenues" is to be interpreted the same for subsidized lines as for unsubsidized lines.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman is 100 percent correct, and I wish every Member of the House could understand it as he does.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLYNT] to close the general debate.

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Chairman, let me try to make this unmistakably clear to everyone who is listening to the debate on this bill: This bill in no way affects the tax liability of any airline company for any capital gains or losses which it may incur in the sale or disposition of air-transportation equipment and similar property. As a matter of fact, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce could not bring in such a bill if it so desired. That is exclusively a matter within the jurisdiction of another committee of this House. This goes only to determining "other revenue" in connection with the ratemaking clause of title IV of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended.

Title IV of the Civil Aeronautics Act provides for air-carrier economic regulation. Section 406 deals directly with the setting and fixing of rates for the transportation of mail. Section 406 (a) gives to the Civil Aeronautics Board the authority to fix rates. Secton 406 (b), with which we are concerned today, simply defines the ratemaking elements which the Board must take into consideration in determining the rates to be paid by the United States Government for mail which is transported by the various subsidized airlines affected by this section.

It provides, and it provides wisely, that the Board may fix one rate for the transportation of mail by carrier A and, if the economic condition of that company in the judgment of the Board so authorizes and justifies it, it may set an entirely different rate for carrier B.

All of us hope that the time is not far removed when every airline in this country can be taken completely off subsidy. I say to this Committee as sincerely as I possibly can that the passage of this bill by this House and enactment of it into law will be a step forward into removing every officially operated airline in America from subsidy.

The only purpose of this bill is to restore what was the law before the Supreme Court of the United States rendered a decision which changed the law without going into the full intent of section 406 (b), which defines the ratemaking elements in arriving at the amount of subsidy. This bill will simply rewrite the intent of Congress.

It is my understanding that the amount of profit which an airline company can earn before going off subsidy is up to 8 percent for domestic operations and 9 percent for overseas operations. Whenever the net profit of any airline exceeds the figure of 8 percent on the invested capital of that company, then the subsidy ceases to exist. I think it will be a step forward toward saving the taxpayers' money, toward taking all these airlines off subsidy, to enact this bill into law.

I want to make one more point, that in this day of modern air transportation, the more economical, efficient, and safe air transportation equipment an airline has the better service it will be able to give to the air-traveling public, the safer the transportation they will have, and the more reasonable the rates for air transportation will be to those who use these airlines.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee will approve this bill and that it will pass by an overwhelming majority.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 406 (b) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, be amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"In determining all other revenue of the air carrier, the Board shall not take account of losses on the sale or other disposition of property, nor of gains on such sale or other disposition provided that the proceeds shall, within a reasonable time, be reinvested in other property similar or related in service or use."

SEC. 2. This act shall be effective with respect to gains or losses realized on or after January 1, 1956, whether or not the Board shall have entered a final order taking account thereof.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That section 406 (b) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended (49 U. S. C. 486), is amended by inserting '(1)' after '(b)' and by adding at the end thereof the following:

"'(2) In determining "all other revenue" of an air carrier for the purposes of paragraph (1), the Board—

"'(A) shall not take into account any loss on the sale or other disposition of property, and

"'(B) shall not take into account any gain on the sale or other disposition of property, if the net gain (after applicable taxes) is (within a reasonable time to be fixed and determined by the Board) reinvested in other property similar or related in service or use.

For the purposes of this paragraph, the term "property" means depreciable property used or useful in the carrier's normal operations.'

"SEC. 2. This act shall be effective with respect to gains or losses realized on or after January 1, 1956, whether or not the Civil Aeronautics Board shall have entered a final order taking account thereof."

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HESELTON: Page 2, line 11, strike out all of lines 11 through 22, inclusive, and insert in place thereof the following:

"(2) In determining all other revenue of the air carrier, the Board shall not take into account the net gains (after any losses and expenses resulting from the disposition of flight equipment) derived from the disposition of any flight equipment of such carrier, if (A) such carrier notifies the Board in writing that it intends to reinvest in other flight equipment the proceeds derived from such disposition, (B) such proceeds, less all applicable taxes, are placed by such carrier in a funded reinvestment reserve immediately upon the receipt thereof, and (C) within a reasonable period to be determined and fixed by the Board, such proceeds are actually reinvested in other flight equipment by such carrier.

"(3) Hereafter in determining that portion of the carrier's mail rate which is payable by the Board (which portion is hereinafter referred to as 'subsidy') the Board shall compute such carrier's depreciation expense and return on investment after first deducting the net gains not taken into account in determining all other revenue of such carrier from the original cost to such carrier of the flight equipment in which such net gains have been reinvested.

"(4) In the event the Board determines that the carrier no longer requires subsidy, there shall be deducted from all subsidy to be paid to such carrier after the effective date of this amendment, or there shall be otherwise recovered from such carrier, an amount equal to the total net gains not taken into account in determining all other revenue of such carrier minus the total amounts by which such carrier's depreciation expense has been reduced on account of and solely by the application of paragraph (3) above. (Such amount shall be determined as of the date the carrier no longer requires subsidy.)

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The amendment, Mr. Chairman, goes far beyond the scope of this bill. It not only has to do with subsidy payments, but the effect of it would be a loan from the United States Government to the air carriers on a repayment basis of 7 years. Furthermore, it goes beyond the scope of subsidy requirements to the extent that it affects air carriers after they go off subsidy and provides a formula whereby "the total net gains not taken into account in determining all other revenue of such carrier minus the total amounts by which such carrier's depreciation expense has been reduced on account of and solely by the application of paragraph (3)."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard?

Mr. HESELTON. Just briefly, Mr. Chairman. I realize it would be advisable for me to concede the point of order since I have sought the advice of a gentleman whom we all respect, the Parliamentarian of the House. However, I have given him a memorandum in connection with it. I am not going to impose upon the Chair or the House to refer to it in detail. I would like to refer, however, to a ruling of John J. Fitzgerald, which is to be found in Cannon's Precedents, section 2993, which seems to me to go to the heart of the matter. It is as follows:

An amendment to a section which is relevant to the subject matter and which may be said to be properly and logically suggested in the perfecting of the section and the carrying out of the intent of the bill would be germane to the bill and thus is in order.

There are other precedents. Whether it is in point or not, I would regret that any doubt might not be resolved in favor of the germaneness of the amendment since it does so directly affect the bill and since it is obviously the sort of amendment that may well be considered and is considered by committees and by the other body all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts extends beyond the scope of the language contained in section 406 (a) at lines 13 and 14 of the committee amendment.

The language therein contained is very narrow in its scope and applies to one specific phase of the operation.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts extends beyond loss on the sale of property, the matter contained in the amendment; therefore, the entire amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is not germane and the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HESELTON to the committee amendment: On page 2, line 16, strike out the word "property" and insert the word "aircraft"; and in lines 18 and 19, strike out the words "property, similar or related in service or use" and insert the words "new and modern aircraft."

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, the bill as reported by the committee has the word "property" in it in line 14. It does not refer to aircraft which have been discussed this afternoon at length.

"Property," I suppose, is anything owned by anybody; in other words, anything to which a person has title.

In the Western Airlines case which has been referred to in the debate, the property included a route that had never been used by the airline which was certificated and was sold at a large profit to another airline. It also involved certain assets and privileges, in fact, it involved coin machine privileges which I understand were quite profitable.

The district court of appeals here in the District unanimously rejected the effort on the part of the Western Airlines to have that excluded as part of their other revenue in determining the amount of subsidies they should receive. The Supreme Court affirmed this decision.

Further than that, of course, if this is a tenable proposition, the words of the bill as reported by the committee requiring reinvestment should be changed.

The amendment I have suggested, and I certainly will not belabor it, is that we confine ourselves to the sale of aircraft if we are going to pass this bill and that we permit this particular allowance to be made only if there is a reinvestment in new and modern aircraft. In that we do not open the door to the sale of hotels which are held by some airlines and to other classes of property; that we confine ourselves exclusively to the sale of these so-called dilapidated aircraft which have increased in value over a hundred percent in the last few years according to the CAB. If that is what we want then I submit the amendment is in order and without this amendment the bill could increase the subsidy without justification and should be rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman, Is this language similar, or the effect of it similar, to the provisions of the bill that passed the Senate?

Mr. HESELTON. I do not know. I developed the amendment independently because I wanted to confine this. I do not know what the Senate did.

Mr. HARRIS. May I ask the gentleman another question, and it might be pertinent. Would the gentleman support the bill if his amendment is adopted?

Mr. HESELTON. Absolutely not.

Mr. HARRIS. May I say to my friend that it was not my intention to embarrass him. I asked the question not to be facetious. I was honest and sincere in my question.

Mr. HESELTON. I know that and I never meant any suggestion otherwise. The gentleman is one of my finest friends, I hope and believe. I honor and respect him. But I do want to perfect bad legislation even if I cannot vote for the revised version.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I can assure my good and warm friend the feeling of friendship he expressed is mutual. I will have to oppose the amendment under the circumstances because, as an example, every airline in the country that operates has to have not only aircraft but they have to maintain hangars, they have to have some place of operation, they have to have a place for maintenance. In many instances it is necessary to make changes and improvements. In instances they may sell old equipment of that kind and of that nature. If that is true, I do not see why there would be any difference in the treatment of an air company that owns a rather extensive hangar and equipment. It is necessary to maintain the new type of aircraft coming in. In 1959 and 1960 we are going to have these new aircraft coming in, different from all aircraft we have today. They are going to be the jets that cost $5 or $6 million and they are going to have to have new equipment, new ways and methods of maintaining and taking care of them, just as essential as the aircraft itself.

I am not for the application of this to hotels that the gentleman mentioned before. That is the reason we amended the bill after we received the alternate recommendation of the Budget Bureau. We used the term in the bill, that is "used and useful in aircraft service." That is what our bill contains. We had our staff to work it out. We wanted to eliminate this questions of hotels, restaurants, and other properties that might become involved. What we are interested in here is permitting the aircraft companies to use the sale of their old equipment as in use now and when they have capital gains therefrom, to apply on the purchase of new equipment and those things necessary for the operation of that new equipment.

Mr. Chairman, from this viewpoint the gentleman's amendment is unsound and I would ask that it be defeated.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think there has been too much misinformation around here or any rumors that I have heard which were not justified. There is some difference of opinion on definition of terms. The gentleman from California says this is not windfall legislation, that it does not give any windfall to the airlines on subsidy. What it gives is what I would define as a windfall; but if anyone does not like that word, let us call it an extra bonus. If we vote to allow an airline hereafter to keep all the profits it makes out of the sale of its old equipment on which it has taken depreciation to a point below the sale price, and then to keep its full subsidy, too, if that is not an extra bonus I do not know what to call it.

Under the present ground rules, a line's net profits from such sales are counted as a part of its revenues in computing the amount of its subsidy. It gets a net subsidy of whatever is left after the amount of such capital gains is subtracted from the total amounts necessary to give it an 8 percent return on its capital investment.

The plea has been made that the subsidized airlines must have this bill in order to buy new equipment. But the unsubsidized airlines must buy new equipment, too. Are they not put at an unfair advantage?

May I ask why are some of these lines, especially the big ones, still on subsidy? Why does Pan American, for example, have to have such a huge subsidy year after year? It has been said it is because it has these less profitable routes, less lucrative routes to distant places around the world. In some cases there is certainly some truth in that argument. But it is not the whole story. Pan American has carried on some expensive practices that I think any of you who have kept track of the industry can understand.

For instance, after the Philippines got their independence, they established and tried to build up a line across the Pacific. They started out with one flight a week, with American crews and later two a week. Whatever service the Philippine Airline offered, Pan American doubled it. It finally forced the Philippine Airline to give up its Pacific run. It systematically overscheduled the route, even if some planes carried only 10 or so passengers. It could make up its losses from Federal subsidy. Repeatedly it has used such methods to try to run its competitors out of business, even American competitors. Because other companies are off subsidy, they cannot make up what they would lose if they were to overschedule, from subsidies on that route or routes in other parts of the world. That is one reason for Pan American's need for subsidy.

Mr. Chairman, the net result of this bill might not be to induce the companies to buy new equipment. But it certainly would provide an inducement for them to stay on subsidy forever. Why should they get off subsidy if they can have all of the benefits of being on subsidy and, under this bill, all the benefits of being off subsidy, too?

I do not think it is fair to those who have to buy their new equipment without subsidy, to give an extra bonus of their capital gains, after taxes, to those that still are subsidized.

And, furthermore, it is not fair to the taxpayers, because it is bound to increase the amount the taxpayer has to pay in subsidies.

The Department of Commerce is against the bill, the Bureau of the Budget is against it, the Comptroller General is against it, and half of the members of the CAB are against it. Why are these agencies that are especially interested in sound aviation against it?

I hope that, when the proper time comes, this bill will be recommitted for further study. I think you all know that the Department of Commerce and the CAB are already engaged, have been for the last 2 or 3 months, in a fresh study of this whole situation. If you examine the committee's own report, on page 6 you will find this letter from Secretary Sinclair Weeks, part of which I quote:

> We realize that there are problems facing all of the air transportation industry in terms of the capital needs arising from technological advances which must be implemented if we are to attain our goal of a healthy and unsubsidized air carrier industry in all respects. This problem is one in which the Government has a great interest and a real solution can come only from deliberate judgment based upon analysis of all factors involved and consideration of the needs of all of our air transportation, both subsidized and nonsubsidized. Problems such as these will not necessarily be solved merely by increasing the Government's potential subsidy obligations in a very limited area.
> We strongly urge, therefore, that these bills be set aside at this time and that the Board be permitted, and all due speed, to proceed to its investigation and to make its report and its recommendations.

Now, it seems to me that is the sensible and the wise thing to do.

Look what Mr. Adams, Vice Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, has to say:

> I strongly believe that the present method of awarding subsidy on the basis of the need of a particular carrier is abundantly fair to the carrier, prevents waste of Government funds, and contains adequate inducement to the carriers to maintain and develop the quality and quantity of air transportation required in the national interest.

Those are the very three objectives we want and which we are told this new bill is supposed to accomplish. But Mr. Adams says the present law is doing them well already.

Mr. Chairman, Why do we not send this bill back to the committee, and if these interested agencies do not come up with an adequate solution, recommend a plan that requires legislation, take it up again in January?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HESELTON. Was the request for this amendment or all amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment and all amendments thereto.

Mr. HESELTON. But not to another amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. But not to other amendments.

Mr. HESELTON. I thank the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD].

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield to me for an answer to a question that he asked?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HESELTON. The gentleman asked me a question that many people are interested in. I quote a letter from Mr. Adams, Vice Chairman of the Board as to what subsidy is. He said:

> It includes a reasonable profit element, after taxes, which now stands at 7 percent on the invested capital for a past period and 8 and 9 percent for a future period, depending on whether domestic or foreign operations are involved.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman. The gentleman has said that these domestic subsidized lines are guaranteed a yield of 7 percent and overseas lines a greater yield. The planes that would be sold at this time can be sold at a profit, the used planes, because there is a shortage of planes, and there has been a tremendous increase in the freight and the passenger load.

If they are sold at a profit, that profit, of course, after paying the 26 percent capital gains tax is offset against their existing subsidy to reduce the subsidy, to reduce what the taxpayers have to pay in the form of subsidy.

Airplanes are subject to call for national defense. So are the railroads, so are the truck lines, so are the young men and the young women.

As far as safety of passengers is concerned, if these planes are not safe, the CAB has regulations to keep them from flying. So let us not worry about the safety of these planes. If they are safe, they fly; if they are not safe, they do not fly.

The argument that it will help airlines to get new equipment is an obvious one. Of course it will. It would help truck lines, if applied to them. It would help me in my private business if I could get a favorable ruling, so that they would get a yield from more revenues and from the subsidy, too. It would give them the additional advantage of their capital gains as an offset against a reduction in subsidy.

This means that we are putting in a new formula. I go along with the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Weeks, with the Bureau of the Budget, and with the administration, as well as the Vice Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, when they say that this goes a little further than we want to go. Let us use the formula which we now have.

They talk about these lines as struggling lines. If you went out to buy one of them, you would find out what you would have to pay. You would have to pay plenty for them. If they need an additional subsidy, let us consider that case based on the merits of the case and not open the door to subsidies, willy-nilly, to all lines, whether they need it or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I think it is very regrettable that the gentleman from Minnesota, Dr. JUDD, elected to have so much to say about the practices of Pan American Airlines, which to him seem so deplorable. I do not know anything about the practices of Pan American Airlines. The last thing in the world I am interested in is trying to defend them. But I am very much interested in the requirement of airlines to purchase new equipment, because if the airlines, in order to keep abreast of the times, in order to serve the public, have got to keep investing enormous sums of money in new equipment, as they do, they need some help. The airlines have got to spend a great deal of money in the next few years, at least the long-distance airlines, for jet aircraft, and the amounts involved there are simply fantastic.

It seems to me that this proposed legislation is one of the best ways of getting the airlines to modernize their equipment. It will encourage them to serve the public better and better meet competition of foreign-owned airlines, which is certainly one of the major problems of our subsidized airlines that operate overseas.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HALE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HESELTON. Does the gentleman object to using the word "aircraft" instead of "property" and confining it to new and modern aircraft?

Mr. HALE. I think the gentleman's amendment is needlessly restrictive. It would probably be aircraft in most cases, but I can imagine that it would be in some instances, for example, spare parts. As far as hotels and so on are concerned, I would be perfectly willing to leave them out.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALE. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. I call the attention of the members of the committee to the fact that the committee in working out this amendment used the term "property used or useful in the carrier's normal operations." That is the language of the committee amendment, which limits it to the necessary property in connection with the operation of their aircraft.

Mr. HALE. The gentleman from Arkansas will recall with what very great care we discussed this very language in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUIGLEY].

Mr. QUIGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

I take this time to invite the attention of the members of the Committee to the particular line of argument that has been advanced by the proponents of this measure. They tell you in one breath that this bill is designed to aid the small, local feeder carriers, the kind of carriers that serve your community and mine if you are a typical Member of Congress. Then in the next breath they talk about the great equipment expansion program the airlines face in the next 5 or 6 years, and they start talking about $4 million, $5 million, and $6 million jets. If Allegheny Airlines has any intention of buying a $4 million, $5 million, or $6 million jet airliner, it may just as well abandon its idea of serving any of my constituents, because there just is not any place in the central part of Pennsylvania where it will be able to land such planes. There is only one airline that will really benefit from this bill because there is just one airline covered by this bill, that has any farflung plans for spending millions and millions of dollars to equip itself with jet equipment during the next 5 or 6 years. That, in my opinion, is the sole purpose behind the bill. It is brought in here in the closing days with the hope that in the confusion the thing will pass, and that it will be passed with many of us thinking we are helping the local small feeder airlines, when actually we are just passing out a great big bonanza, a great big windfall, to one big airline.

Mr. MACK of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIGLEY. I yield.

Mr. MACK of Illinois. Is the gentleman opposed to the purchase of Convairs? I understand Allegheny Airlines purchased some Convairs recently. I want to know if the gentleman is opposed to the improvement of the equipment.

Mr. QUIGLEY. Not at all. I hope they keep improving it. But, before Allegheny thinks about buying jets, they had better check the airports in the 19th District in Pennsylvania, or they may find they may not be able to land these fancy new planes.

Mr. MUMMA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIGLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MUMMA. I can give the gentleman some up-to-date information. I learned as late as last night and this morning that the Allegheny Airlines, which the gentleman mentioned, have purchased Martin 404's.

Mr. QUIGLEY. I am glad to have that latest information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GROSS].

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I note that Capital Airlines has ordered and is taking delivery on a substantial number of turboprop, British-made planes, and yesterday or this morning I noted in the papers that this airline has ordered 14 British Comet jet commercial airliners. I should like to know from some member of the committee whether Capital Airlines comes within the scope of this legislation.

Mr. HARRIS. Capital Airlines does not come under the scope of the legislation because it is not a subsidized carrier. It is out of subsidy.

Mr. GROSS. They are not a subsidized carrier?

Mr. HARRIS. That is right.

Mr. GROSS. They are subsidized through airmail contracts, are they not?

Mr. HARRIS. No; they are not subsidized. They have airmail contracts, but they get paid for their service.

Mr. GROSS. I am pleased to hear the gentleman say they are not subsidized because I do not want to hear of any airline in this country being subsidized directly or indirectly by the taxpayers of this country and then going over to Britain to buy their airplanes.

Mr. HARRIS. We have made very great progress in getting our aircraft industry off subsidy in the last several years. We are still making progress every year.

Mr. GROSS. We certainly have helped subsidize the British aircraft industry, and I hope we do not find out some day that we are also using the taxpayers' money to subsidize airlines that buy their planes in Britain or some other foreign country. I want them made in America.

Mr. HARRIS. I repeat again. That is not involved here at all and neither is the question of any tax paid by any company involved. That should be clearly understood. There is much misinformation on that point. No taxes are involved at all.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield.

Mr. VANIK. I have not heard anything about taxes not being involved in this bill. Were not its purposes supposedly accomplished by the quick depreciation and rapid amortization certificates which almost all airlines receive?

Mr. HARRIS. No; this does not change that policy at all.

Mr. VANIK. Then they get this in addition to the quick amortization privilege which almost all the airlines took advantage of?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. SISK].

Mr. SISK. Mr. Chairman, I certainly favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON] because if this bill should happen to pass, I certainly think we should restrict the type of equipment that is to be purchased under the terms of this bill to that type of equipment we have heard a lot of crying about here today—the great need for maintaining the finest and the safest aircraft. So, certainly, it is my hope that the gentleman's amendment will be adopted. Primarily though, I rise to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question. I listened here all afternoon. The question has to do with the reason for this bill being here. I appreciate the various arguments that have been made by the committee for the bill, but who asked for this bill? Who is in favor of this bill? Who wants the bill? I have not heard of anyone apparently outside the committee, and I might say I have the highest regard for the chairman as well as all members of the committee—it may be entirely justified but I have heard no one who wants the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I thank the gentleman for his comment. I might say that the Air Transport Association of America is the original sponsor of the legislation because of the Supreme Court decision of 1954 which the Board has invoked in its open-rate proceedings to reducing the subsidy and actually charging it out of the operations of the company.

Mr. SISK. Do I understand that that association is restricted to subsidized airlines only?

Mr. HARRIS. No—all airlines of the country are members of the Air Transport Association.

Mr. SISK. Do I understand that the gentleman means to say that all airlines in the country favor this particular legislation?

Mr. HARRIS. The association represents all the airlines.

Mr. SISK. Both subsidized and nonsubsidized?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes—and the local airlines conference which is composed of about 13 local airline services.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the bill and shall vote against it, but with the possibility in mind that it might pass, I hope this amendment is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MCCARTHY].

Mr. MCCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask one or two questions of the committee: Are there any airlines not now subsidized which will be subsidized following the passage of this legislation?

Mr. MACK of Illinois. No, there are no additions or no new airlines that would be included as a result of the legislation.

Mr. MCCARTHY. What do you mean by being included? If the revenue of certain airlines, as I understand it, rise above a certain point, they are not then eligible for subsidy payments; is that correct?

Mr. MACK of Illinois. That is true, but the Civil Aeronautics Board makes that determination.

Mr. MCCARTHY. That is at the present time. If part of their revenue at the present time is derived from capital gains, it means their revenue for the purposes of determining subsidy will be reduced by that amount and they would be eligible for a subsidy again?

Mr. MACK of Illinois. That is true.

Mr. MCCARTHY. And the effect of this bill is likely to increase the amount of the subsidies paid to the airlines.

Mr. MACK of Illinois. No, it is not.

Mr. QUIGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. QUIGLEY. I think you have to make some provision for the acquisition of new equipment, and believe that this is the best possible means of doing so.

Mr. BEAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. BEAMER. I think the gentleman's question can best be answered by saying that the chances are that the passage of this measure will help to remove certain lines eventually and more quickly from the subsidy they are presently receiving.

Mr. HESELTON. That opinion, of course, is completely contrary to the chairman of the CAB, who says that the Board has estimated that it will amount to $46,487,000 in fiscal 1957. This bill will substantially increase the amount of the subsidy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS] is recognized.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KEARNS. I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy in yielding.

I would like to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point and include a statement I made before the Civil Aeronautics Board in behalf of the Allegheny Airlines which is one of the feeder airlines in Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman.

(The statement referred to follows:)

Members of the Board and Mr. Brown, my name is CARROLL D. KEARNS. For the past 10 years I have served as United States Representative in Congress for the 24th District of Pennsylvania, consisting of Erie, Crawford, and Mercer Counties, and numbering well over 410,000 people.

My interest in the application of the Erie Municipal Airport Authority for an investigation as to the need of air transportation between Erie, Pa., and Detroit, Mich., is longstanding and is very natural inasmuch as I represent, among others, the city of Erie, the third largest city in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and one of the leading cities in diversified industry in the country.

Gentlemen, it is my firm conviction that Erie needs air service to Detroit in order to develop toward its proper position as Pennsylvania's Great Lakes port and the gateway to the west on the Great Lakes.

Erie can develop as it should only if it has behind it a market area which will ship and do business via Erie, instead of the already well-established and well-served centers of Cleveland, Ohio, and Buffalo, N. Y.

The cities of the Pennsylvania hinterland need to diversify their economy because their traditional industries of coal and oil are no longer adequate. In order to diversify new industry must be attracted, especially lighter industry, whose principal offices are in the Midwest. But these industries, particularly the ones supplying the vast automotive industry of Detroit, demand rapid air transportation—preferably nonstop—but in any event one-carrier service. And only one carrier can do this—Allegheny Airlines.

I appear before you this morning to request, therefore, that you give to Erie what it has never had before—a chance to develop as Pennsylvania's Great Lakes port. Cleveland has developed, Buffalo has developed—but Erie—never. The reason for this is basically topographical. The historical layout of the railroad system has never favored Erie. But now new highways are being planned and developed to handle the bulk cargo which will be going in and out of Port Erie.

Erie wants the chance to complement its highway system with one-carrier air service from the Pennsylvania hinterland to Erie, and then on out to Detroit, and west.

That is the gist of my appeal, gentlemen. I thank you for your courteous attention and for the opportunity to appear before you this morning.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired; all time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MACDONALD:

Page 2, in lines 14, 16, 18, and 19, strike out "property" and insert "flight equipment."

Page 2, strike out lines 20 through 22, and insert quotation mark at the end of line 19.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take much of the time of the House because we have just been through this same matter.

The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON] provided that this bill should affect only airplanes.

The amendment I suggest reads: "flight equipment."

I think even those among you who believe in this bill also know that this is a very loosely drawn bill in many ways. I call the attention of the membership to its provisions. It says that this tax benefit—no matter what else it is, it is a tax benefit—goes to "property." In other words, in subsection (b) it says that they shall not take into account any gain on the sale or other disposition of property—I will skip a few lines—"if reinvested in other property similar or related in service or use."

We who travel the airlines know what property it is that can be used by an airline. When we look at the definition further, starting in line 20 which defines this so-called property, it says:

For the purposes of this paragraph, the term "property" means depreciable property used or useful in the carrier's normal operations.

I do not think anyone in the House would dispute the fact that it is useful to have a restaurant at an airport or to operate a hotel where there are not adequate hotel facilities at or near the airport. I would like to ask some member of the committee whether or not there is any safeguard in this bill which would prevent an airline from setting up a corporation, selling the assets, the airplanes, to that corporation, then leasing back the equipment after they have taken full benefit of this tax allowance which we are giving them?

Mr. MACK of Illinois. I think it is well defined here and would exclude any possibility such as that. This provides that the proceeds from the sale of equipment must be reinvested in similar equipment which is used or useful in flight service.

Mr. MACDONALD. The gentleman goes back to "property used or useful in the carrier's normal operations."

Mr. MACK of Illinois. That is true. That is the wording. It is "used or useful in the carrier's normal operations" and it is intended that all of the money secured will be reinvested in flight equipment or similar equipment. They have to have a little bit of leeway to include the purchase of parts and certain facilities that are necessary.

Mr. MACDONALD. The gentleman in his answer to me uses the words "flight equipment." I take it he is supporting my amendment?

Mr. MACK of Illinois. I have given considerable study to the gentleman's suggestion and, personally, I am in full support of the intent of the gentleman's amendment. I certainly cannot speak for the committee with regard to his amendment. I will say, however, that it is limiting to a large degree the expenditure of this money.

Mr. MACDONALD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACDONALD. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. May I inquire if the gentleman can advise us as to what the definition of "flight equipment" would be? What would he intend it to include?

Mr. MACDONALD. If I am to believe the statements made by the gentlemen of the committee, it would be carrying coals to Newcastle for me to define "flight equipment."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

(By unanimous consent (at the request of Mr. HARRIS) Mr. MACDONALD was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. HARRIS. Here is what I am trying to get at, and I may say I am very much impressed with the objective the gentleman wants to accomplish. What I am trying to get at is supporting equipment that is necessary in maintaining aircraft, necessary to flight operations, and so forth, included in the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. MACDONALD. It would be.

Mr. HARRIS. Would the gentleman accept an amendment to his amendment including the words "flight and supporting ground equipment"?

Mr. MACDONALD. Support, referring back to flight equipment?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes.

Mr. MACDONALD. Yes, I would.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACDONALD. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman says flight equipment only. Would that make it impossible to include stands and so forth that go with the carrier's normal ground operation?

Mr. MACDONALD. No. If it was normal, say, as in Alaska, to use buoys and hangars which run into the sea, I certainly would include that. This is not a restrictive amendment in the sense that it is a restriction on property. I merely want to have it very clear that the House is passing only on flight equipment and not going into the broad field of what these airlines use as property when related as being used or useful in their carrying operations, because it now includes restaurants, hotels, and so forth.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If it does, it was not the intention of the committee to include it.

Mr. MACDONALD. No. I think the committee will readily agree with me in restricting this to flight equipment.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we have discussed at great length in the committee, as the gentleman knows, as to what is sought here and what we intend to do. No one in the committee wants to give a windfall to anyone who might take advantage because they have property they want to dispose of which has nothing to do with the operation of the airline. The gentleman recalls that very well.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am not a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. HARRIS. In our full committee we discussed it, too. I wonder if the gentleman would be willing to ask unanimous consent that his amendment be amended to include "flight equipment and supporting ground equipment."

Mr. MACDONALD. If the word "supporting" is descriptive and if it were clear what the word "supporting" was referring back to, I would accept it, if it meant ground equipment that deals with flight equipment, including gasoline tanks.

Mr. HARRIS. Maintenance, operation, and such?

Mr. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. HARRIS. That is what we are worried about.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is what I am worried about, too.

Mr. HARRIS. That is just as necessary as the aircraft that flies the air. If the gentleman would ask and obtain unanimous consent to include "supporting ground equipment," I will accept the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think we are all in accord with the purposes sought by this amendment. Some of us are in disagreement as to just how far the amendment goes, of course. I am wondering if on page 2, line 22, the insertion of the word "flight" after the word "normal" would not take care of this entire controversy.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MACDONALD. Will the gentleman accept this language, "only pertaining to air flight"?

Mr. HARRIS. Well, I do not think I could, because I do not know just what you mean by that.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am further trying to define your word "support," because I think anything that is used to aid equipment and to aid the passengers is a supporting measure in the use by the airlines.

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FLYNT. I should like to direct this question also to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MACDONALD] to supplement the question asked by the gentleman from Mississippi.

I think all of us are trying to achieve the same objective at this time. Would it meet the approval of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MACDONALD] to insert on line 22, page 2, after "normal" the word "flight", so that lines 21 and 22 as amended would read:

> For the purposes of this paragraph, the term "property" means depreciable property used or useful in the carrier's normal flight operations.

Mr. HARRIS. Would the gentleman be agreeable if we said "flight and ground equipment."

Mr. MACDONALD. I should think "equipment pertaining directly to flight equipment".

Mr. HARRIS. I think I understand what the gentleman has in mind. I think he has the same thing in mind we would all like to accomplish. Since it is going to be necessary to work this out in conference, if we get to conference, and since we understand what we would like to do, I am going to suggest that we accept the amendment.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 3 minutes.

Mr. CHUDOFF. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, then I move to strike out the last word and talk about something else.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I only intended to use 3 minutes, but so long as I cannot talk about what I wanted to, which I think would be of great interest, because for a long time I have been trying to learn what is the opposition to NIXON and why they did not want him as a candidate. I have not been able to learn except from some Democrats, until recently, when Stassen came along. I wished to explain to the House, if I could—I do not really mean explain; that is too presumptuous—but I wished to give to the House my idea of what Stassen was trying to get at and why he is against NIXON. But now somebody has objected to my speaking out of order, so I cannot do that and I will be forced to wait until a little later on.

Now I must talk about this motion to strike the enacting clause from this bill.

Mr. MORANO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MORANO. I did not understand the gentleman had offered a motion to strike the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The gentleman from Michigan sought recognition in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. MORANO. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the gentleman offer a motion to strike the enacting clause.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman should pay attention to the proceedings in the Committee. The Clerk has it.

Mr. MORANO. He did not read it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That is not my fault; maybe he did not think it was worthwhile. Does the gentleman want it read now?

Mr. MORANO. I should like to have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan sought recognition in opposition to the amendment. He was recognized for 5 minutes in opposition to the amendment and for no other reason. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MORANO. Mr. Chairman, in other words, I am correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I will concede the gentleman is correct. I understand, Mr. Chairman, I had asked permission to proceed out of order and somebody objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct; somebody objected.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. And then I sent to the clerk's desk a motion to strike the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not offer the motion to strike the enacting clause.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. In order that we may have orderly procedure, I shall offer the motion now and ask unanimous consent to withdraw it, and yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that course will be followed.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I should like very much to ask the gentleman if he does not believe it would be unthinkable not to have the Republican Party unanimously vote to nominate RICHARD NIXON the Vice President of the United States. It would be unthinkable and tragic not to reward complete loyalty and great ability with anything else. The President and the country need him.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I would be happy to answer, but I cannot do it now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MACDONALD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HESELTON to the committee amendment: On page 2, line 24, strike out "January 1, 1956" and insert "August 15, 1956."

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, this will be the last amendment I shall offer. It is preliminary to a motion to recommit I shall offer. It will also be the last few words I shall say on this bill.

The bill itself provides for an effective date of January 1, 1956. In my judgment, there is no justification whatsoever for that. Here we are on July 26 at 6:35 in the evening, and we want to legislate back to January 1, 1956. At least we should have the opportunity to legislate a bit ahead, assuming this bill is going to pass. I do not think it is.

I want to stress something the gentleman from Minnesota stressed, only I want to add to it. The reason I am offering a motion to recommit is this: This is in effect an effort to repeal the needs provision for a subsidy. The gentleman from Minnesota quoted Colonel Adams' statement before the committee, but beyond that I want to quote one more sentence or two that he used:

And yet, these bills would in effect disregard the actual need of the particular carrier seeking subsidy support by prohibiting the Board from looking at the profits from the sale of equipment—the very same equipment which through depreciation allowances already might have been paid for by the traveling public and the Government through its award of subsidy.

That is what I have been saying to you all afternoon.

I understood last night that this bill would be the first order of legislative business today, and look at the clock. I say this is no way for us to legislate, whether it is good, bad or indifferent. That is the basic reason why I am offering this motion to recommit, but there is another fundamental reason.

There is a pending proceeding before the Civil Aeronautics Board covering this very thing. Thirty-three of these airlines are parties to it. It was started in April of this year. On July 3 of this year a preliminary report was made. We have the whole situation in the hands of an administrative body. Colonel Adams says this, and it is the basis on which I will offer a motion to recommit.

I consider this kind of proceeding—

He is referring to the one that has been pending 3 or 4 months and will be finished by the time we get back.

I consider this kind of proceeding the best approach to the problem because it looks toward a policy consistent with the scheme of the Civil Aeronautics Act, fully supported by a complete economic record, and geared as closely as possible to the individual needs of the carriers.

I respect my friend who offered the amendment we just adopted, but if there was any perfect illustration of why we should not be asked at 20 minutes of seven, two nights before adjournment, to pass this legislation blindfolded, the example is right there.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, my very good friend for whom I have the highest regard, the author of the amendment, Mr. HESELTON, of Massachusetts, obviously has some pretty deep feeling about this matter, and he is entitled to his opinion and I respect it. I want that well understood, and he knows it. Apparently, he has some feeling, according to his statement a moment ago, and the manner in which he has expressed his views on this whole proposition of air subsidy. I know that he has had some feeling about it over the years. It is not new. It is not my fault. It is not the fault of the committee. It is not the fault of the leadership or the Membership of the House necessarily that we could not get to this bill until late this afternoon. It was scheduled for the first business under the rule, but there were conference reports and unanimous consent requests and there was other business, and it was necessary, and consequently I do not feel we owe him an apology for not getting this up until when we did this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, obviously his amendment is for the purpose of further confusion—that is my opinion—further confusing this whole matter. I realize it is pretty difficult sometimes to wade through the confusion and get to the facts. I want to read to you a letter or rather from a copy of a letter that was writen to Mr. HESELTON. It was under date of July 26, 1956. It is signed by Mr. John F. Floberg, Conference of Local Airlines—that is the local service airlines throughout the United States.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. HESELTON. Does the gentleman say I received any letter from Mr. Floberg at any time?

Mr. HARRIS. I have a copy of a letter and it is addressed to you.

Mr. HESELTON. I should think he would send it to me—but that is all right.

Mr. HARRIS. I assume the gentleman received it or it would not have been delivered to me. This is a copy and I assume the gentleman has the original. It is as follows:

CONFERENCE OF LOCAL AIRLINES,
Washington, D. C., July 26, 1956.

The Honorable JOHN W. HESELTON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HESELTON: I see on page 14575 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for July 25, 1956, that you yesterday stated on the floor of the House that there could not be produced "one scintilla of credible evidence that passage of this bill (H. R. 8902) will benefit anyone but Pan Am and its select companions in unwarranted windfalls, in depreciation on top of depreciation, in double subsidies. If Pan Am can do so, I will admit it and withdraw my minority report on this floor tomorrow."

You will recall that I testified as vigorously as I know how in favor of H. R. 8902 before the Interstate Commerce Committees of both the House and the Senate. I pointed out at that time that the local service airlines had 165 DC–3's, all of which were candidates for replacement by suitable modern aircraft. I likewise pointed out that the financial condition of the local service airlines was such that the only possibility of financing the downpayment on modern replacements would come from the profits that might be realized on a sale of the DC–3's.

Let there be no doubt that H. R. 8902 is the pivot point on which the reequipment programs of the local service airlines presently depend. Whatever the benefits of the bill may be to other large carriers, the enactment of legislation assuring the local service carriers of the availability of the capital proceeds of old flight equipment is essential if we are to forestall preservation of the equipment status quo which carriers with it preservation of the subsidy status quo.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN F. FLOBERG.

Here is a wire from Jess B. Bennett, assistant to the president of the Braniff Airways, Inc.:

JULY 26, 1956.

The Honorable JOHN W. HESELTON,
Member of Congress,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Braniff Airways is happy to respond to your inquiry as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday at page 14575, and to say that H. R. 8902 is not exclusively designed for the benefit of Pan American World Airways. Braniff Airways is presently facing an $85 million reequipment program covering turboprop and jet aircraft and will need every cent it can realize from the sale of its existing equipment to finance this huge undertaking. Passage of H. R. 8902 will materially assist in this effort. We strongly urge your support of this measure.

JESS B. BENNETT,
Assistant to the President, Braniff Airways, Inc.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HESELTON. Is that telegram addressed to me?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; it is.

Mr. HESELTON. Is it not peculiar that these people will give telegrams addressed to me to someone else without giving it to me? I would think they would have the common decency, if they are going to furnish some communication to be used in debate, to see to it that I got the communication addressed to me before it reached the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. Did the gentleman get this wire?

Mr. HESELTON. No.

Mr. HARRIS. I assure the gentleman I had no intention to take any advantage of him.

Mr. MACK of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I might say to the gentleman that I talked to the person who wrote this letter today. I was aware that the letter had been written. I inquired of him if it had been delivered or had been received by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON], and I understood that it had been directed, sent, and received.

Mr. HARRIS. The other point I want to make very clear that this legislation will do is that it will be of great help to the airline industry all over the country.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, all I can say is that if that letter was delivered the same day it was written it is the fastest delivery service that has been rendered since Summerfield has been Postmaster General.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JUDD: Page 2, strike out lines 11 and 12, and insert the following:

"(2) In determining for the purpose of paragraph (1) 'all other revenue' of any air carrier having total gross receipts (including amounts not included in all other revenue under the provisions of this paragraph) of less than $50 million during the previous calendar year, the Board."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. JUDD. I thank the gentleman but I do not think any point of order will apply because it is a restrictive amendment.

Mr. Chairman, much has been said about the desire to help the small feeder airlines, and we have just heard a letter and a telegram from the conference on local airlines and from the head of the largest of the smaller airlines.

If this bill is primarily to help the small airlines, my amendment provides an opportunity to demonstrate it. Now is the time to stand up and be counted and really help the small airlines. Because all this amendment does is to provide that the new rules shall apply only to those subsidized airlines whose gross revenues are under $50 million a year.

Most of these small feeder airlines now earn from 2 to 6, maybe some of them $12 million a year. Every one of the small feeders, plus Continental, Northeast, and Braniff are included within this limitation. If we want to help the smaller airlines, just vote for this amendment and then we will not need to kid ourselves that this bill is just designed to help the small companies. That will then be the fact.

Under this amendment the bill will give aid where the aid might be needed. I certainly am not opposed to helping the small lines, but I do not like to help them in a disguised form where they get in effect two subsidies, one hidden. The amendment will give greater help to the small lines to get new equipment, and it will prevent any of the biggest United States carriers from gaining an even greater advantage over their smaller and subsidy-free competitors.

Much has properly been said about the need of the subsidized airlines for adequate credit for their reequipment program. That is just as true for the unsubsidized as for the subsidized. If airlines that now receive a Government subsidy to guarantee them 8 percent return on their capital investment do not have a good credit background I do not know who does. I wish Uncle Sam would guarantee me 8 percent return on whatever business enterprise I might undertake.

I hope the Members will accept this amendment because this amendment will do what the bill was intended to do—help the small feeder lines.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I could not accept this amendment. It is just as necessary for the international carriers and the large carriers to be safe as it is for the feeder line carriers.

Mr. JUDD. When the gentleman goes home to Arkansas, what line does he ordinarily ride?

Mr. HARRIS. I ride the American Airlines.

Mr. JUDD. Is that a subsidized line? You seem to suggest that it is only safe to ride subsidized lines; or rather, that they must be subsidized if they are to have good, safe equipment.

Mr. HARRIS. American Airlines was developed on a subsidy.

Mr. JUDD. American, United, Eastern, TWA, Northwest, all of these lines are safe. They buy new equipment also, but they are not on subsidy.

Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman will admit, however, in selling any equipment of the Ameican Airlines and others that he mentioned, the capital gains that they receive from the sale of that equipment can be applied to the purchase of new equipment?

Mr. JUDD. Certainly it can.

Mr. HARRIS. It can also be applied to pay dividends to stockholders?

Mr. JUDD. Yes. That is one of the inducements to get off subsidy.

Mr. HARRIS. Then why penalize a carrier that is on subsidy?

Mr. JUDD. If you allow it to keep what it gets in the way of profits from selling depreciated equipment, and its full subsidy besides, you are rewarding it. Furthermore, it can use its capital gains to buy new equipment and turn around and pay dividends to its stockholders out of its operating revenues. It could pay not 8 percent but 10 or 12 percent under this bill.

Mr. HARRIS. No.

Mr. JUDD. It could.

Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman is in error because the Board determines what the percentage of return is and fixes what it shall be. The gentleman knows there has not been 8 percent made by any of these airlines.

Mr. JUDD. But they could exceed that under the bill. However, I do not want to get diverted from the main point. If you are interested in the smaller airlines you will accept this amendment.

It was said in either the letter or the telegram just read that not all of this aid would go to one big airline. No, not all; but more than 80 percent would go to one airline.

Mr. QUIGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUIGLEY. I am in full accord with the gentleman's position and I urge adoption of his amendment. This amendment would make a good valuable bill out of the legislation before us.

Mr. JUDD. This would also remove from it any shadow of suspicion and end the rumors that some have talked about hearing.

Mr. QUIGLEY. This will give help where the help is needed.

Mr. JUDD. And it will not put an extra burden on the American taxpayers to pay an additional subsidy to our largest airline.

Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman's amendment would say that all nonsubsidized air carriers and all subsidized air carriers except one would be permitted to have this?

Mr. JUDD. It would say that the little carriers that people have been bleeding about all afternoon are the ones that would get this special assistance.

Mr. HARRIS. Who would profit from this?

Mr. JUDD. There would be only one that would not profit? What is its gross revenue? Over $200 million a year?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. Chairman, may I say to the gentleman from Minnesota that I have the very highest regard for him. I feel as he stated he feels that subsidies should be eliminated and I wish they could be eliminated from all airlines including the airline to which he referred. I want to say that the amendment which the gentleman has offered not only has no legitimate and valid basis but it violates the principle of equal treatment of all citizens which has been embedded in the Constitution and laws of our country.

Mr. MORANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLYNT. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MORANO. Will not the gentleman agree with me that this amendment is not only discriminatory, it is arbitrary? Would not the gentleman also agree with me that perhaps this would punish a company that started out small and got big, then you attempt to punish and discriminate against that company for doing that? It is fundamentally against free enterprise if you get right back to the basic objective of the amendment.

Mr. FLYNT. The gentleman from Connecticut is eminently correct. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is punitive and discriminatory in its nature.

Mr. Chairman, we are considering here legislation dealing with the appropriate treatment of capital gains on the sale of flight equipment by the subsidized air carriers. The principles embodied in this bill are either right or they are wrong. The committee thinks they are right and I join with the committee in that opinion. I can understand some of the arguments to the contrary, but I cannot understand the arguments advanced by the gentleman from Minnesota, and I cannot agree with him. What I cannot understand is how anyone can maintain that the principles embodied in this bill are right for an airline with gross revenues of $49 million but wrong for one with $50 million.

Mr. JUDD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLYNT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. There are no airlines in the range of $50 million gross revenues, except one, that are on subsidy and thus affected by this bill. The others that will be helped by this bill run from about $20 million down to $2 million plus one line that has over $200 million revenue a year. If what the gentleman says is correct, then our whole graduated income-tax system is discriminatory and punitive because it certainly discriminates between taxpayers who earn $2,000 a year and those who get $200,000 a year.

Mr. FLYNT. But all taxpayers in the same category and the same bracket pay the same taxes, and are covered by the same laws and the same regulations.

Mr. JUDD. That is what I want to do with airlines.

Mr. QUIGLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, all the airlines in the same category get the same treatment.

Mr. FLYNT. Under the bill as drawn, they will. Under this, they will not.

Let us examine this amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Minnesota. In plain language it means simply this, that there may or may not be only one company covered by the amendment at this time, but the amendment might as well say that this bill shall apply to all subsidized airlines as well as Pan American. That would be clearly unconstitutional clearly discriminatory, and clearly punitive.

Mr. BEAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLYNT. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BEAMER. Would it not also, in your opinion, say to the people, if we are going to discriminate, we are also going to attempt to penalize the big companies and also attempt, by the provisions of this particular amendment, to keep the small companies smaller? No incentive would be given to the small companies to advance.

Mr. FLYNT. The gentleman from Indiana is exactly correct. And, I want to say that discrimination of the kind advanced by the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is absolutely indefensible. It is true that Pan American, the company to which the gentleman referred, is now a large company, but it did not start that way. It started in 1927 with a dozen or so World War I pilots each putting up a small amount of capital. They have gotten to where they are because of initiative, hard work, and perseverance under the free enterprise system in America, and I want every one of the airlines to have the same opportunity Pan American had when they started.

Mr. MORANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLYNT. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MORANO. The gentleman is making a fine statement. These 12 pilots put up $25,000 apiece to start Pan American. They were far-sighted, courageous, and they were real Americans, with the free enterprise system behind them. And, you cannot vote for an amendment of this kind to punish them for doing just that.

Mr. JUDD. I think the gentleman is making a fine argument for opposing the bill, because he says we should not have discrimination on the basis of income; yet this whole bill discriminates between those who allegedly have to have subsidy and those that are self-supporting. It is discrimination on the basis of income. Why should not a company succeed with so much Government help?

Mr. FLYNT. I think the success of any group under the free enterprise system depends upon the stamina and the hard work and the efforts they put into it. I ask that the amendment be voted down.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am on this committee, and I have listened to this debate for well onto 2 hours with a great deal of interest. I think it is unfortunate that the membership should get to this situation where you are in a fight on the floor of this House between two airlines.

Now, I know the gentleman from Minnesota in coming forward with this particular amendment is doing so because he is naturally favoring Northwest Airlines, which is in his own area, Minneapolis-St. Paul. And, I think we might as well say that, and I think the gentleman will probably admit that that is true.

The gentleman from Minnesota is on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and he ought to know that if there is anything that this country has to have it is an airline that circles the globe. I believe that we are the only country that has such an airline, and we need it very badly in our foreign relations. He will recall how disturbing the situation developed about a year and a half ago when it became a question whether India was going to let us continue to have bases there to keep this line around the world. It is true, if China had not gone Communist, Northwest would have acted and probably would have gone around the same route now as Pan American.

Let us put this up as a practical matter. If all Pan American had to do was to fly from the United States to Europe, it would be a profitable proposition, but they are flying in the Near East, in the Far East, in the most unprofitable places where practically all the profits that they make on their European operations are lost in the unprofitable areas. The result of it is that they have to have a subsidy. Northwest Airlines, for which the gentleman from Minnesota is speaking, has profitable domestic business with which to make money, and it has one of the most profitable overseas airlines in going through the northwest to Alaska and then to Japan. But that is as far as it goes, to Hong Kong. That is a profitable area to operate in. If it were to take in all the unprofitable areas which Pan American has to do, then I say it would also be on subsidy.

The reason I have brought this out on the floor of the House is that I think the Members of the House ought to be acquainted with what the issue is on this amendment. I have not said anything about what I am going to do on this bill yet, but I do think that the Members ought to know what the issue is that is being brought up through this particular amendment.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. The gentleman has brought up Northwest Airlines. Northwest has the north Pacific route to the Orient and carries about one-fourth of the traffic across the Pacific. The lush central Pacific route to the Far East through Hawaii is Pan American's exclusively. It carries three-fourths of the traffic. It earns on that route alone almost three times as much as Northwest does on all its international operations. I do not believe anyone need feel sorry for Pan American. Furthermore, Northwest buys its own equipment. It is off subsidy. Pan American is not.

Mr. SPRINGER. If Northwest flew the routes in the nonprofitable areas that Pan American has, it would be on subsidy, too. The gentleman knows that and every member of the committee knows it.

Mr. MORANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield.

Mr. MORANO. Would it not be consistent to vote against the bill and the principle involved in the bill rather than offer this kind of an amendment?

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am impressed with the argument that the gentleman is making now. I am also impressed with the fact that the gentleman said he does not know what he is going to do on this bill. I should like to ask him as one who sat with the committee during the hearings, and has sat with us through this afternoon, whether there is any great urgency in the matter of passing this bill at this time, in this session?

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I shall answer the gentleman as frankly as I can. I have flown, or I did fly one of these small routes in my particular area. If any of the Members have flown them recently, they have seen the equipment that they have. It is pretty bad. I assume it is safe or the CAA would not approve it. But I will say that it is bad.

Whether this is the solution or not, I am not going to say. But I do say that these airlines that I am talking about, particularly the small ones, are going to have to find some way with which to finance new equipment if they are going to have planes that are in good condition, instead of these old DC–3's.

I am not saying that this is the solution. But I am saying that it is a solution which the committee has offered, and the decision whether you want these small airlines to keep flying this old equipment for the present is one that you are going to have to make today.

Mr. BOLAND. Can the gentleman tell me about the orders that the small airlines are now putting in for jet engines or turbo-prop engines?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes additional.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, I think we have had enough debate on this. I think we ought to be permitted to vote, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request and let us proceed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I should like to answer the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mrs. BLITCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HARRIS. If the gentle lady will yield for the purpose of the unanimous consent request, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes, following the remarks of the lady from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. BLITCH. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise here to talk on the intricacies of this bill. Several hours ago, as it seems to me, we had a vote on the rule. Because of the fact that it is getting late in the session and I really knew so little about this bill I voted "no" on that rule which did not indicate whether I approved the pending measure or not. But now that the gentleman's amendment was offered excluding only one airline, it has brought about a bad situation, it seems to me.

I have the highest regard for the gentleman who offered that amendment, but I cannot let this moment go by without rising to defend the committee that is presenting this bill to us. Without meaning to do it, I am sure, but certainly it struck me that that is exactly what has been done, the gentleman impugned the motives and the honesty of almost the entire membership of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. BLITCH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. I am distressed beyond words that the gentlewoman should have received any such impression, because I had no such thought or intention. Members of the committee with whom I have debated this afternoon are among my best and most respected friends in this House. When I disagree with any person on a matter like this, it is not in the slightest degree to suggest that they are not working for just as worthy and sincere objectives, and with just as honest motives as I hope they credit me with having.

Mrs. BLITCH. I know the gentleman really did not mean that.

Mr. JUDD. I did not have the slightest idea that any such impression was given, but if it was given, I disavow it.

Mrs. BLITCH. I am glad to hear that. I knew the gentleman would.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8902) to amend subsection 406 (b) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, pursuant to House Resolution 602, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further proceedings on this bill be temporarily dispensed with in order to permit the House to take up some other matters.

Mr. HESELTON. I must object, Mr. Speaker.

JAMIE L. WHITTEN,
JOHN J. ROONEY (except as to amendment No. 84),
JOHN E. FOGARTY,
JOHN TABER,
JOHN PHILLIPS,
T. MILLET HAND,
FRANK T. BOW,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12350) and ask unanimous consent that the statement on the part of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this is an agreement between the managers on the part of the House and the Senate. We bring back 42 amendments in technical disagreement. On 25 of them I will move to recede and concur. We will bring them up seriatim.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is the same one we had up the day before yesterday. The other body has added a very considerable amount to it, largely items which were submitted to the other body with budget estimates after we had gotten to the point where we could go no farther with the budget estimate and bring a report in. The conference report involves about $2,161,629,438 which is approximately $200 million above what it was when it left the House. I think the conference report is probably as good as we could get with everything considered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY].

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, as one of the House conferees on the pending second supplemental appropriation bill, I did not concur in the action of the conference with regard to amendment numbered 84, an item of $3½ million in Israeli pounds under the title Department of State education, scientific and cultural activities. These Israeli pounds, now lying in Israeli banks doing nothing, accumulated as the result of a book program under the economic cooperation act. The deserving purposes contemplated in the expenditure of these $3½ million of Israeli currency are many and varied; adoption of the Senate language would most certainly strengthen our American point of view and ideals all through that troubled part of the world.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

R. 6243, Eighty-fourth Congress."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 11, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$22,000,000" named in said amendment insert "$18,000,000"; and in lieu of the sum of "$1,315,000" named in said amendment insert "$1,215,000."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 12: On page 4, line 6, insert:

"Reimbursement to District of Columbia

"For reimbursement to the Highway Fund, District of Columbia, for part cost of construction of highway-railroad grade separation underpass at a point in the southeast section of the District of Columbia in the vicinity of East Capitol Street, $665,000, to remain available until expended."

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the House has agreed to the Senate amendment providing for $200,000 for additional narcotics agents needed to intensify and fortify the campaign to cut down drug addiction in our country and help foreign police ferret out and jail those who develop and smuggle in illicit drugs.

Had the Treasury Department come to the House subcommittee with a request of this nature, I am certain the item would have been incorporated in the House bill. I am both surprised and distressed that the Treasury did not do so because it is represented in the Interdepartmental Committee which recommended additional agents last February. Since then the House Ways and Means Committee, following an exhaustive study, has called for such action.

When I addressed the House on February 7 last, I pointed out the need for more men in the Bureau which has begun to suffer some attrition in agents due to extra funds needed for special investigations. I referred to the findings of both House and Senate committees and I expressed the hope two things would soon come to pass, first that the Congress would enact into law a bill providing more severe penalties and improved enforcement procedures and secondly, the number of enforcement agents would be increased substantially. When the President signs this second supplemental bill both will have been accomplished.

The narcotics situation in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, and Texas, needs immediate attention. I want no dope peddlers plying their nefarious trade in my home area of North Jersey, close to New York, and I want to see reinforced Federal strength in this area. I want also to see the little group sent to Europe and the Far East bolstered and helped in their mission to get at the source of supply.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the several motions was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this conference report may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD and to include certain tabulated statements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 12270) to authorize certain construction at military installations, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 33, line 10, strike out "$37,760,000" and insert "$21,510,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Then Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Speaker, accepting the Senate amendments to this bill involves two matters. First, the deletion of authorization of the four Talos sites. This is a matter, of course, which can be reconsidered next year in the light of the development of these missiles at that time.

The second Senate amendment relates to keeping the Congress and the Armed Services Committees aware of the proposed construction of family housing for all the military services. It will be noted that the language inserted by the Senate requires the submission of detailed information.

Section 2 (a) of the amendment requires that a 180-day period elapse from the submission of the report before action can be taken to enter into a contract for housing. This requirement is very importantly limited, however, in subsection (b) of section 2, in that the committees may advise the Secretary of Defense at any time within the 180-day period that they—the committees—have "no further questions to be asked concerning the project."

It will be possible for the respective committees to take prompt action, and, I would assume, in most instances in much less than 180 days.

The language will also permit action while the Congress is not in session, although I am sure it will be the intention of the House Committee at least to have the departments furnish their plans for family housing in such timely fashion as will permit full committee deliberations. This will not be difficult, and will merely require good planning on the part of the military departments.

FISHERIES ACT OF 1956

Mr. BONNER submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (S. 3275) to establish a sound and comprehensive national policy with respect to fisheries; to strengthen the fisheries segment of the national economy; to establish within the Department of the Interior a Fisheries Division; to create and prescribe the functions of the United States Fisheries Commission; and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. NO. 2942)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3275) to establish a sound and comprehensive national policy with respect to the fisheries segment of the national economy; to establish within the Department of the Interior a Fisheries Division; to create and prescribe the functions of the United States Fisheries Commission; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That this Act may be cited as the 'Fish and Wildlife Act of 1956'.

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SEC. 2. The Congress hereby declares that the fish, shellfish, and wildlife resources of the Nation make a material contribution to our national economy and food supply, as well as a material contribution to the health, recreation, and well-being of our citizens; that such resources are a living, renewable form of national wealth that is capable of being maintained and greatly increased with proper management, but equally capable of destruction if neglected or unwisely exploited; that such resources afford outdoor recreation throughout the Nation and provide employment, directly or indirectly, to a substantial number of citizens; that the fishing industries strengthen the defense of the United States through the provision of a trained seafaring citizenry and action-ready fleets of seaworthy vessels; that the training and sport afforded by fish and wildlife resources strengthen the national defense by contributing to the general health and physical fitness of millions of citizens; and that properly developed, such fish and wildlife resources are capable of steadily increasing these valuable contributions to the life of the Nation.

"The Congress further declares that the fishing industry, in its several branches, can prosper and thus fulfill its proper function in national life only if certain fundamental needs are satisfied by means that are consistent with the public interest and in accord with constitutional functions of governments. Among these needs are:

"(1) Freedom of Enterprise—freedom to develop new areas, methods, products, and markets in accordance with sound economic principles, as well as freedom from unnecessary administrative or legal restrictions that unreasonably conflict with or ignore economic needs;

"(2) Protection of Opportunity—maintenance of an economic atmosphere in which domestic production and processing can prosper; protection from subsidized competing products; protection of opportunity to fish on the high seas in accordance with international law;

"(3) Assistance—assistance consistent with that provided by the Government for industry generally, such as is involved in promoting good industrial relations, fair trade standards, harmonious labor relations, better health standards and sanitation; and including, but not limited to—

"(a) services to provide current information on production and trade, market promotion and development, and an extension service,

"(b) research services for economic and technologic development and resource conservation, and

"(c) resource management to assure the maximum sustainable production for the fisheries.

"The Congress further declares that the provisions of this Act are necessary in order to accomplish the objective of proper resource development, and that this Act shall be administered with due regard to the inherent right of every citizen and resident of the United States to engage in fishing for his own pleasure, enjoyment, and betterment, and with the intent of maintaining and increasing the public opportunities for recreational use of our fish and wildlife resources, and stimulating the development of a strong, prosperous, and thriving fishery and fish processing industry.

"REORGANIZATION WITHIN THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

"SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby established within the Department of the Interior the position of Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife, and the position of Commissioner of Fish and Wildlife. Such Assistant Secretary shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be compensated at the same rate as other Assistant Secretaries. The Commissioner shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. He shall receive compensation at the same rate as that provided for Grade GS 18. There is also established a United States Fish and Wildlife Service within the Department, consisting of two separate agencies, each of which shall have the status of a Federal bureau. There shall be a Director of each of said Bureaus appointed by the Secretary at Grades GS 17 each. One of the agencies shall be known as the "Bureau of Commercial Fisheries" and the other agency shall be known as the "Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife." The United States Fish and Wildlife Service, except as prescribed by this Act, shall succeed to and replace the presently existing Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department.

"(b) The functions of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service hereby established shall be administered under the supervision of the said Commissioner of Fish and Wildlife, who shall be subject to the supervision of the Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife.

"(c) All functions and responsibilities placed in the Department of the Interior or any official thereof by this Act shall be included among the functions and responsibilities of the Secretary of the Interior, as the head of the Department, and shall be carried out under his direction pursuant to such procedures or delegation of authority as he may deem advisable and in the public interest.

"(d) In order to make a proper distribution between the two Bureaus of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service established by this Act, the previously existing functions, powers, duties, authority, liabilities, commitments, personnel, records, and other properties or matters previously handled by or administered through the former Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department, shall be distributed as follows:

"(1) The Bureau of Commercial Fisheries shall be responsible for those matters to which this Act applies relating primarily to commercial fisheries, whales, seals, sea-lions, and related matters;

"(2) The Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife shall be responsible for those matters to which this Act applies relating primarily to migratory birds, game management, wildlife refuges, sport fisheries, sea mammals (except whales, seals and sea-lions), and related matters; and the funds and allocations, appropriated or otherwise, relating to the matters covered by paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall be distributed between such Bureaus as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine.

"(e) Except as changed by the terms of this Act or by subsequent laws or regulations, all laws and regulations now in effect relating to matters heretofore administered by the Department of the Interior through the former Fish and Wildlife Service as heretofore existing, shall remain in effect.

"(f) In recognition of the need for authority to execute the purposes of this Act effectively, the Secretary of the Interior shall exercise such general administrative authority consistently with the terms of this Act as he shall find to be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act effectively and in the public interest. In order to allow sufficient time to place the reorganizations under this Act into effect, the Secretary is authorized to establish an effective procedure and date of such reorganizations, notice of which shall be published in the Federal Register. Such reorganization shall be accomplished as soon as practicable after the approval of this Act, but not later than ninety (90) calendar days after such approval.

"LOAN PROCEDURES

"SEC. 4. (a) The Secretary is authorized under rules and regulations and under terms and conditions prescribed by him, to make loans for financing and refinancing of operations, maintenance, replacement, repair, and equipment of fishing gear and vessels, and for research into the basic problems of fisheries.

"(b) Any loans made under the provisions of this section shall be subject to the following restrictions:

"(1) Bear an interest rate of not less than 3 per centum per annum;

"(2) Mature in not more than ten years;

"(3) No financial assistance shall be extended pursuant to this section unless reasonable financial assistance applied for is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

"(c) There is hereby created a fisheries loan fund, which shall be used by the Secretary as a revolving fund to make loans for financing and refinancing under this section. Any funds received by the Secretary on or before June 30, 1965, in payment of principal or interest on any loans so made, shall be deposited in the fund and be available for making additional loans under this section. Any funds so received after June 30, 1965, and any balance remaining in the fund at the close of June 30, 1965 (at which time the fund shall cease to exist), shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the fund the sum of $10,000,000 to provide initial capital.

"(d) The Secretary, subject to the specific limitations in this section, may consent to the modification, with respect to the rate of interest, time of payment of any installment of principal, or security, of any loan contract to which he is a party.

"INVESTIGATIONS, INFORMATION, REPORTS

"SEC. 5. (a) The Secretary shall conduct continuing investigations, prepare and disseminate information, and make periodical reports to the public, to the President, and to Congress, with respect to the following matters:

"(1) The production and flow to market of fish and fishery products domestically produced, and also those produced by foreign producers which affect the domestic fisheries;

"(2) The availability and abundance and the biological requirements of the fish and wildlife resources;

"(3) The competitive economic position of the various fish and fishery products with respect to each other, and with respect to competitive domestic and foreign-produced commodities;

"(4) The collection and dissemination of statistics on commercial and sport fishing;

"(5) The collection and dissemination of statistics on the nature and availability of wildlife, progress in acquisition of addtional refuges and measures being taken to foster a coordinated program to encourage and develop wildlife values;

"(6) The improvement of production and marketing practices in regard to commercial species and the conduct of educational and extension services relative to commercial and sport fishing, and wildlife matters;

"(7) Any other matters which in the judgment of the Secretary are of public interest in connection with any phases of fish and wildlife operations.

"TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS—ASSISTANCE OF OTHER AGENCIES

"SEC. 6. (a) There shall be transferred to the Secretary all functions of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the head of any other department or agency, as determined by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget to relate primarily to the development, advancement, management, conservation, and protection of commercial fisheries; but nothing in this section shall be construed to modify the authority of the Department of State or the Secretary of State to negotiate or enter into any international agreements, or conventions with respect to the development, management, or protection of any fisheries and wildlife resources or with respect to international commissions operating under conventions to which the United States is a party.

"(b) There shall be transferred to the Department of the Interior so much of the personnel, property, facilities, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, and other funds (available or to be made available) as the Director of the Bureau of the Budget determines to be necessary in connection with the exercise of any functions transferred to the Secretary pursuant to subsection (a) of this section.

"(c) The Secretary may request and secure the advice or assistance of any department or agency of the Government in carrying out the provisions of this Act, and any such department or agency which furnishes advice or assistance to the Secretary may expend its own funds for such purposes, with or without reimbursement from the Secretary as may be agreed upon between the Secretary and the department or agency.

"POLICIES, PROCEDURES, RECOMMENDATIONS

"SEC. 7. (a) The Secretary of the Interior, with such advice and assistance as he may require from the Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife, shall consider and determine the policies and procedures that are necessary and desirable in carrying out efficiently and in the public interest the laws relating to fish and wildlife. The Secretary, with the assistance of the departmental staff herein authorized, shall—

"(1) develop and recommend measures which are appropriate to assure the maximum sustainable production of fish and fishery products and to prevent unnecessary and excessive fluctuations in such production;

"(2) study the economic condition of the industry, and whenever he determines that any segment of the domestic fisheries has been seriously disturbed either by wide fluctuation in the abundance of the resource supporting it, or by unstable market or fishing conditions or due to any other factors he shall make such recommendations to the President and the Congress as he deems appropriate to aid in stabilizing the domestic fisheries;

"(3) develop and recommend special promotional and informational activities with a view to stimulating the consumption of fishery products whenever he determines that there is a prospective or actual surplus of such products;

"(4) take such steps as may be required for the development, advancement, management, conservation, and protection of the fisheries resources; and

"(5) take such steps as may be required for the development, management, advancement, conservation, and protection of wildlife resources through research, acquisition of refuge lands, development of existing facilities, and other means.

"STATE DEPARTMENT—COOPERATION

"SEC. 8. (a) The Secretary shall cooperate to the fullest practicable extent with the Secretary of State in providing representation at all meetings and conferences relating to fish and wildlife in which representatives of the United States and foreign countries participate. The Secretary of State shall designate the Secretary of the Interior or the Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife, or a person designated by the Secretary of the Interior to represent the Department of the Interior, as a member of the United States delegation attending such meetings and conferences and also as a member of the negotiating team of any such delegation.

"(b) The Secretary of State and all other officials having responsibilities in the fields of technical and economic aid to foreign nations shall consult with the Secretary in all cases in which the interests of fish and wildlife are involved—with a view to assuring that such interests are adequately represented at all times.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall be represented in all international negotiations conducted by the United States pursuant to section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, in any case in which fish products are directly affected by such negotiations.

"(d) The Secretary shall consult periodically with the various governmental, private nonprofit, and other organizations and agencies which have to do with any phase of fish and wildlife with respect to any problems that may arise in connection with such fish and wildlife.

"REPORTS ON ACTIVITIES AND IMPORTS

"SEC. 9. (a) The Secretary of the Interior shall make an annual report to the Congress with respect to activities of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service under this Act, and shall make such recommendations for additional legislation as he deems necessary.

"(b) The Secretary is authorized to make a report to the President and the Congress, and, when requested by the United States Tariff Commission in connection with section 7 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951, as amended (67 Stat. 72, 74), or when an investigation is made under the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U. S. C. 1332), the Secretary is authorized to make a report to such Commission, concerning the following matters with respect to any fishery product which is imported into the United States, or such reports may be made upon a request from any segment of the domestic industry producing a like or directly competitive product:

"(1) whether there has been a downward trend in the production, employment in the production, or prices, or a decline in the sales, of the like or directly competitive product by the domestic industry; and

"(2) whether there has been an increase in the imports of the fishery products into the United States, either actual or relative to the production of the like or directly competitive product produced by the domestic industry.

"THE RIGHTS OF STATES

"SEC. 10. Nothing in this Act shall be construed (1) to interfere in any manner with the rights of any State under the Submerged Lands Act (Public Law 31, Eighty-third Congress) or otherwise provided by law, or to supersede any regulatory authority over fisheries exercised by the States either individually or under interstate compacts; or (2) to interfere in any manner with the authority exercised by any International Commission established under any treaty or convention to which the United States is a party.

"AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATION

"SEC. 11. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

"SEC. 12. (a) The authorization for the transfer of certain funds from the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of the Interior and their maintenance in a separate fund as contained in section 2 (a) of the Act of August 11, 1939, as amended July 1, 1954 (68 Stat. 376), shall be continued for the year ending June 30, 1957, and each year thereafter.

"(b) Subsection (e) of section 2 of the aforesaid Act of August 11, 1939, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(e) The separate fund created for the use of the Secretary of the Interior under section 2 (a) of this Act and the annual accruals thereto shall be available for each year hereafter until expended by the Secretary.'"

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "To establish a sound and comprehensive national policy with respect to fish and wildlife; to strengthen the fish and wildlife segments of the national economy; to establish within the Department of the Interior the position of Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife; to establish a United States Fish and Wildlife Service; and for other purposes."

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3275) to establish a sound and comprehensive national policy with respect to fisheries; to strengthen the fisheries segment of the national economy; to establish within the Department of the Interior a Fisheries Division; to create and prescribe the functions of the United States Fisheries Commission; and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

S. 3275 as passed by the Senate created a United States Fisheries Commission of five members, the Chairman of which would administer the Fisheries Division of the Department of the Interior in the capacity of an Assistant Secretary of the Interior. The wildlife functions of the present Fish and Wildlife Service would be assigned to a new Wildlife Service.

Under the House amendments to the bill, there would be appointed an Assistant Secretary for Fisheries and Wildlife and a Commissioner of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, under whom would be a Bureau of Wildlife and a Bureau of Fisheries, each with a Director. The Secretary of the Interior could allocate overlapping functions of the two Bureaus to one or the other, and could establish a single division to handle functions common to both Bureaus. A revolving fund of $10 million was authorized for financing operations, maintenance, replacement, repair and equipment of fish gear and vessels and for fishery research and the Saltonstall-Kennedy Act was made permanent, and the ceiling on the amount available under its terms was removed.

The bill agreed upon is substantially as amended by the House. Jurisdiction of seals and sea lions has been allocated to the Commercial Fisheries Bureau and funds for the two Bureaus are to be distributed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The reference to wildlife in the section relating to transfer of functions of the Department of Agriculture in the House amendments has been deleted, since it is not the intention to disturb that Department's control of wildlife in the national forests. Also, there is no intention to affect the activities of the Tennessee Valley Authority in its fishery work. Likewise, the section referring to the Government Corporations Control Act in the sections setting up the revolving fund in the House amendments had been stricken as inappropriate to the other financing provisions.

While both the Senate bill and the House amendments, and consequently the bill agreed upon, provided that nothing in the bill should supersede any regulatory authority over fisheries exercised by the States, the managers are extremely concerned over the wasteful practices in taking fish to the extent that our fisheries resources are depleted. The States should take appropriate action to punish such occurrences.

AUTHORIZING THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE TO SELL CERTAIN WAR-BUILT VESSELS

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution (H. J. Res. 685) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to sell certain war-built vessels.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) notwithstanding the provisions of section 11 of the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, as amended, and section 510 (h) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to sell within 1 year after the enactment of this joint resolution, to a citizen of the United States, within the meaning of section 2 of the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended, for employment in the Pacific Coastwise domestic trade between points in continental United States, four C4–S–B2 vessels, to be designated by the Maritime Administrator on an as, where is, basis, provided that the Secretary of Commerce shall determine before entering into such sales that the purchaser possesses the ability, experience, financial resources, and other qualifications necessary to enable it to operate and maintain the vessel in service in the Pacific Coastwise domestic trade between points in continental United and to maintain adequate service in such trade. The sales prices of the vessels shall be their sales prices computed under the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, as of Jenuary 15, 1951, depreciated (after reduction for residual value) on a straight line basis for the period from January 15, 1951, to the date of execution of the contract of sale, on the basis of the promotion of a 20-year useful life of the vessels remaining after January 15, 1951.

(b) Each such sale shall be on the basis of the payment by the purchaser of not less than 25 percent of the vessel sale price at the time of execution of the vessel sales contract, with the balance payable in approximately equal annual installments over the remainder of the economic life of the vessel, which economic life is to be determined by the Maritime Administration, with interest on the portion of the vessel sales price remaining unpaid at the rate of 3½ percent per annum. The obligation of the purchaser with respect to payment of such unpaid balance, with interest, shall be secured by a preferred mortgage on the vessels in form satisfactory to the Maritime Administrator.

(c) (1) Such sales shall be made upon condition and agreement that the purchaser recondition the vessels satisfactory to the Secretary of Commerce in a domestic shipyard for use as container ships.

(2) Vessels sold under this act shall be employed exclusively as dry cargo common carriers in the Pacific Coastwise domestic trade between points in continental United States until the end of their useful lives, as determined under subsection (b) of this act, or until they are replaced by new tonnage, whichever happens first. These restrictions shall run at law and in equity with the titles to the vessels and are binding upon all subsequent owners.

(d) Any contract of sale executed under authority of this act shall provide that in the event the United States shall, through purchase or requisition, acquire ownership of any such vessel, the owner shall be paid therefor the value thereof, but in no event shall such payment exceed the actual depreciated sales price under such contract (together with the actual depreciated cost of capital improvements thereon); that in computing the depreciated acquisition cost of such vessel, the depreciation shall be computed on the vessel on the schedule adopted or accepted by the Secretary of the Treasury for income-tax purposes as applicable to such vessels; that such vessel shall remain documented under the laws of the United States during the remainder of the economic life of the vessel or as long as there remains due the United States any principal or interest on account of the sales price, whichever is the longer period; and that the foregoing provisions respecting the requisition or the acquisition of ownership by the United States, and documentation shall run with the title to such vessel and be binding on all owners thereof.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FISHERIES ACT OF 1956

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 3275) to establish a sound and comprehensive national policy with respect to fisheries, to strengthen the fisheries segment of the national economy, to establish within the Department of the Interior a Fisheries Division, to create and prescribe the functions of the United States Fisheries Commission, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina tell us what the difference is between the House bill and the Senate bill as it comes to us from conference?

Mr. BONNER. The bill is substantially as passed by the House. The Senate wrote some new language, but I assure the House the language the Senate put in the bill is an expression of the House language in just another way. It took from Fish and Wildlife seals and put them over in commercial fisheries.

Mr. MILLER of California. Then, substantially the bill is the same?

Mr. BONNER. I assure the gentleman the bill is substantially the same, and lo and behold it meets the many objections of commercial and sport fishermen.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

PAPERWORK MANAGEMENT

Mr. FRIEDEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on House Administration have permission to file part I of its report on paperwork management, and that the committee also have permission to file other parts of this report with the Clerk of the House subsequent to sine die adjournment, for printing as House reports of the 84th Congress, 2d session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman, this comes from the Committee on House Administration?

Mr. FRIEDEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Can the gentleman tell me how I can get from the House Committee on Administration information that has been filed with the Department of Defense telling how many Congressmen went where and at what cost?

Mr. FRIEDEL. No, I do not know.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the amendment?

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. This amendment only provides for the insertion of a comma between the words "standing" and "moving."

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE LATE HONORABLE HELEN DOUGLAS MANKIN

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I arise to inform the House of the unfortunate accidental death on yesterday of Mrs. Helen Douglas Mankin, a former Representative in this body from the Fifth Congressional District of Georgia. Mrs. Mankin lived a full and eventful life. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Douglas. Mr. Douglas, her father, established the Atlanta Law School, which throughout the years has been one of Atlanta's and Georgia's recognized outstanding law schools.

Mrs. Mankin was a member of the legal profession, having graduated from the Atlanta Law School in 1921. She practiced law in Atlanta, Ga., from her graduation until the time of her death.

She took an active part in the civic and political life of her county and State, having served from 1937 to 1946 as a member of the General Assembly of Georgia from Fulton County.

Upon the resignation of Congressman Robert Ramspeck in December 1945, Mrs. Mankin was elected to fill his unexpired term, and she served as a Member of the United States House of Representatives until January 3, 1947.

Mrs. Mankin served as an ambulance driver and mechanic with an American hospital unit attached to the French Army during World War I. She served overseas for 13 months, and was decorated with Medaille de la Reconnaissance. In recognition of her service during World War I, she was made a citizen of Luzancy (Marne), France. Mrs. Mankin also took an active part in women's organizations. She was a national president of the Women's Overseas Service League. She was a member of the Business and Professional Women's Club. She also was a member of the Georgia Association of Women Lawyers, the American Bar Association, the Georgia Bar Association, and the Atlanta Bar Association.

Her many friends will learn of her untimely passing with deep sorrow.

I extend deepest sympathy to the members of her family in this time of bereavement.

DISPOSAL OF FEDERALLY OWNED PROPERTY AT OBSOLESCENT CANALIZED WATERWAYS

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 7596) to provide for the disposal of federally owned property at obsolescent canalized waterways, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after "dams)" insert: ": Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not be effective with respect to the Big Sandy River, Ky., and the Rough River, Ky., pending and until a determination has been made by the Secretary of the Army that the project structures and appurtenances including real property will not be required in connection with any improvements for navigation or other allied purposes under consideration in surveys of the Big Sandy River and Rough River now authorized."

Page 2, line 20, after "areas" insert: ": Provided, That in lieu of preparing dam numbered 3 on the Big Sandy River for abandoning such funds may be expended for modification of the lock and restoration for said dam either as a movable or fixed type dam but not to exceed $50,000, contingent upon local interests furnishing such additional funds as may be necessary and agreeing to accept the property and take over operation and maintenance of the said structure."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain what these changes do?

Mr. BURNSIDE. They will do away with 25 obsolete dams and locks. The administration wants this done. This was sent to the House committee and we reported it by a unanimous vote of that committee. There was an amendment by the Senate that would take care of the situation where the property was being leased to a small city at a cost of $60,000. The city will match these funds.

Mr. MARTIN. I thank the gentleman, and withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAULINE H. CORBETT

Mr. DONOHUE submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 3957) for the relief of Pauline H. Corbett.

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN OBSOLETE GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Committee on House Administration, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 268) authorizing the disposal of certain obsolete Government publications now stored in the folding rooms of the Congress.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Ohio explain the concurrent resolution?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I will be very happy to explain it.

This is a concurrent resolution that is introduced every 4 years. May I say I introduced this at the request of the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, Senator HAYDEN. It is to clear out the folding rooms. Briefly, it requires that each Member be given notification of all the documents down there, and he has 60 days to claim any documents he wants, not the ones to his credit, but accumulated odd documents. After that, whatever is left over and not claimed is to be disposed of so there can be room in the folding rooms for incoming documents, books, and so forth.

I understand that this has been done every 4 years, since I do not know how far back, but for a long time. This is just a routine resolution.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, not long ago there was considerable controversy, at least in the press, about the executive department's inability to get the record of the campaign expenses of the two parties. Does this have anything to do with the publication of those reports?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Not to my knowledge. If they are down there and I find them, I will see that the gentleman gets them.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I do not want them. I took copies when they came in.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Then why did not the gentleman give them to the press?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I just wanted to know if the rest of them could get them if they wanted to. If the gentleman is so smart about it, I think I will object to this one. Let him think about it for a while.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

AMENDMENT OF ATOMIC ENERGY ACT OF 1954

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 12215) to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. COLE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object, because I feel that this is a bill that should be adopted by the Congress, however, I take this opportunity to give expression to what I feel to be a most discouraging, destructive, disillusioning, and disappointing situation. For over a month two bills have been on the calendar of the House which would do more to remove the logjam of reactor development of peacetime uses of atomic energy than anything else conceivable that the Congress can do. It appears that no action is going to be taken on those bills. That is to my mind tragic. The responsibility for the failure of this Congress to do the things that it should do to promote the development of peacetime uses of atomic energy must rest squarely on the persons having the responsibility for this Congress.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that the President is very anxious about this bill and has been constantly urging its passage. He joins in the expression the gentleman from New York has given here tonight. This is a bill that should be passed before we leave, and I hope it will be passed.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy held lengthy hearings on the bill to provide Federal public liability indemnity program for atomic energy plants and the industry as well as spokesmen for the insurance companies of this country came before our committee and joined in our effort to provide through the bill the necessary relief for the great utilities of this country who are spending millions of dollars in the development of atomic power?

Mr. COLE. The gentleman is entirely right. This bill was reported by the joint committee unanimously with one exception. It determines and fixes the liability of the persons who are expected to own and operate these reactors. Here the Congress by law has called upon private capital to move into this field. Private capital has shown its readiness to do so, but it has hesitated to do so until its liability, when it does so, is determined by law. That is what this bill is designed to do and is intended to do.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. What concerns me, Mr. Speaker, and I rise to ask the gentleman from New York if I am not right, is that we will not only lose 6 months or more of very valuable time in the race for leadership in atoms for peace, but we may have a tendency to discourage the industrial groups that are planning to help us carry the load of that research and leadership.

Mr. COLE. The gentleman is entirely right. The reactor development program will be delayed just so long as the Congress fails to measure up to its responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw by reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill (S. 4203) to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the same bill that the gentleman said was thrown out earlier in the day?

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; I did not say that. This has never been thrown out so far as I know.

The SPEAKER. This bill has not been before the House.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 u. of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York and his colleagues, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] and the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] come before the House at this late date pleading for legislation which they claim is necessary for the President's atoms for peace plan.

Where were the gentlemen on Tuesday, July 24, when we had a bill before the House that would have accelerated the atomic-powered reactor program by supplying $400 million for the purpose of actually building large power reactors? The gentlemen were in this Chamber cutting the bill to pieces and opposing and voting against the legislation.

The record can be found on page 14288 of the July 24 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where the vote plainly shows that almost the solid Republican Party membership voted against House bill 12061, the power reactor acceleration bill. Regardless of how much the gentlemen accuse the Democrats for blocking the atoms for peace program—they can never erase that vote. That vote was the showdown.

Private industry has failed to make good for the past 2 years on their promises and it is my opinion that they will continue to fail for the next 2 years.

They will first ask for subsidized liability insurance.

They then will ask for special tax amortization for their capital plant investment.

The utilities will raise their power rates to their consumers to cover these uneconomic investments.

The private companies who have so far failed to build power reactors will also request many other Government subsidies in the form of long-range contracts paying them high prices for plutonium. They will want the Federal Government to furnish fuel for their reactors at prices lower than Government cost.

They will want their used fuel rods processed by the Government at lower than cost and they will want the deadly radioactive waste disposed of by the Government free or at subsidy prices.

Yes they will find many reasons why they cannot proceed. They will come back to the Congress again and again for special legislation for their selfish benefit and for their private profits.

In the meantime we will lose the international race for leadership to either England or Soviet Russia. This prediction will not come true if we face the fact and proceed in the next 4 or 5 years as we have in the past and continue the development of atomic energy for peacetime uses of all kinds.

When we get through the uneconomic phase of research and development, which I predict will continue for several years, then the economic techniques can be made available on a fair and equal basis to all the people of America and the free world.

I append hereto two newspaper editorials from the Washington Post and Times Herald:

[From the Washington Post and Times Herald of July 24, 1956]

ATOMIC POWER BY EXAMPLE

Prospects for prompt and meaningful American leadership in atomic power development are wrapped up in the Gore-Holifield bill now before the House. This bill, which has been approved by the Senate, would authorize the construction of working demonstration power reactors to serve Atomic Energy Commission installations. We hope that the House will pass it. Several weeks ago, before the Senate had acted, we expressed the view that it might be preferable to have top nuclear scientists and engineers first recommend the reactor types that offered the most promise for pilot models. We are now persuaded that the program for building a number of different types, as indorsed by AEC Commissioner Murray, affords more hope for the perfection of techniques that will be of use to a power-short world.

Indeed, this seems to us the most important consideration. Were the question simply one of furnishing power to AEC plants this undoubtedly could be done more cheaply by other means. The United States as a country rich in fossil fuels and with plentiful and relatively cheap electric power, has less incentive than many other nations to develop nuclear power promptly. Moreover, certain nuclear techniques now seem more promising than others, and on a basis of strict economics the construction of a number of different types of reactors might seem wasteful.

But the proposal must be judged on more than its immediate economic merits. The principal question is: How much importance does the United States attach to a practical nuclear power program that will safeguard its own future interest and stimulate development abroad in the fashion envisaged by President Eisenhower? This newspaper regards such a program as of tremendous importance, not only as the most significant kind of technical assistance, but also as a much needed and dramatic diversion from nuclear war. It is on this point that Government leadership is imperative.

It is no reflection on the efforts of private industry to say that the outlook for early private development of economic nuclear power is not bright. One pressurized water reactor is under construction at Shippingport, Pa., and others are in the advanced planning stage. But it is unlikely that private industry can afford to experiment with new techniques that are now expensive but ultimately may prove more economical. Atomic development by private industry ought by all means to be encouraged, and in this connection passage of the bill to provide governmental insurance for atomic powerplants seems to us imperative. But the hope of private participation is not a substitute for Government initiative as the House Appropriations Committee recognized in its report blasting AEC Chairman Strauss for duplicity in opposing the program.

Here the formula in the Gore-Holifield bill seems an ideal one. The power will be produced for a governmental purpose not in competition with private industry, and the process will afford practical experience with actual operating plants. This experience with reactor types is essential in order to afford a realistic test and ultimately reduce the cost, and it cannot be obtained through mere pilot plants. The role is an entirely proper one for the Government, and its assumption now should hasten the day when the bright dreams of plentiful atomic power will become a reality.

[From the Washington Post and Times Herald of July 26, 1956]

ATOMIC POWER DEFERRED

Defeat in the House of the Gore-Holifield bill for the construction of atomic power reactors is a tribute to the obstructionism of Lewis Strauss. The Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission mesmerized the administration into opposing the bill on the ground that the job of developing atomic power can be handled adequately by private industry. This is the same sort of soft soap Admiral Strauss has consistently handed out respecting radiation hazards from nuclear weapons. His begging of the essential questions on the status of atomic power development so infuriated the House Appropriations Subcommittee that it accused him of "duplicity" and "fraud."

In point of fact the private versus public power issue was wholly extraneous. The reactors to have been built by the Government would have provided power for the Atomic Energy Commission only—and as an incidental to their main purpose, of demonstrating the feasibility of various types of reactors. Only one privately constructed reactor is now in the building stage. Additional plants have been proposed, but because of the cost of atomic reactors and the availability of plentiful cheap power from other sources, there is little incentive for private industry to build on a scale necessary to test new reactor techniques. There will be very little incentive at all unless the House passes a separate bill to provide governmental reinsurance for private atomic power reactors.

The pity of all this is that the administration through the Strauss influence, was placed in the position of sabotaging President Eisenhower's own bright dream of plentiful atomic power for the world. What the House has said, with administration blessing, is that this country will take no practical step to advance American leadership in atomic power development. In other words, we leave the initiative in underdeveloped areas to the Russians.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favor of sections 2 and 3 of H. R. 12215, now under consideration.

As you will note, these sections amend the existing section 31 a of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, which authorizes the Atomic Energy Commission to "exercise its powers in such manner as to insure the continued conduct of research and development activities in the fields specified below, by private or public institutions or persons, and to assist in the acquisition of an ever-expanding fund of theoretical and practical knowledge in such fields. To this end the Commission is authorized and directed to make arrangements (including contracts, agreements, and loans) for the conduct of research and development activities relating to." The act then continues to outline the areas in which authority in this section is to be exercised.

As you know, one of the pioneers among the educational institutions of the United States in perceiving the great necessity to train engineers in the field of nuclear physics was the Penn State University. Realizing this obligation on the part of educational institutions, the Penn State University on its own arranged for the financing and construction of a research reactor which is now in operation on its campus at State University.

Likewise, the University of North Carolina at about the same time undertook on its own a similar project. The foresight and initiative of these institutions deserve the highest commendation.

The Atomic Energy Commission has felt for some time that the existing language of the Atomic Energy Act was not sufficiently clear and, therefore, it has been understandably hesitant to enter into all the various types of arrangements which is felt were necessary to assist universities and other non-profit institutions in providing them with the facilities to carry forth this important training and research work. For this reason they have requested the clarifying language which appears in section 2 and 3 of S. 4112.

Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of this amendment. Based upon the information I have accumulated as a member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, I realize full well that an ever-expanding program for the construction of training facilities at universities and nonprofit institutions must be undertaken. I am sure the Commission is in favor of such a program and it should be given this clarifying language to permit it to proceed without delay.

As the amendment is now drafted it would permit the Commission to assist not only in the initial setting up of facilities, but also to assist in the continued operation thereafter. It is heartening to note that it is the clear intent of this amendment to permit the Commission to assist the early pioneers in this field in the continued operation of facilities already constructed by their own initiative. I, therefore, urge each and every member to lend his support to the adoption of this amendment.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 12215) was laid on the table.

BENBROOK RESERVOIR PROJECT, TEXAS

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 12006) to provide for the reconveyance of certain lands in the Benbrook Reservoir project, Texas, to former owners of such lands where such lands are not required for public purposes, including public recreational use.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) in order to provide adjustments in the lands or interests in land heretofore acquired for the Benbrook Reservoir project in Texas to conform such acquisition to a lesser estate in lands now being acquired to complete the real estate requirements of the project the Secretary of the Army (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to reconvey any such land heretofore acquired to the former owners thereof whenever (1) he shall determine that such land is not required for public purposes, including public recreational use, and (2) he shall have received an application for reconveyance as hereinafter provided.

(b) Any such reconveyance of any such land or interests shall be made only after the Secretary (1) has given notice, in such manner (including publication) as regulations prescribe, to the former owner of such land or interests, and (2) has received an application for the reconveyance of such land or interest from such former owner in such form as he shall by regulation prescribe. Such application shall be made within a period of 90 days following the date of issuance of such notice, but on good cause the Secretary may waive this requirement.

(c) Any reconveyance of land therein made under this act shall be subject to such exceptions, restrictions, and reservations (including a reservation to the United States of flowage rights) as the Secretary may determine are in the public interest, except that no mineral rights may be reserved in said lands unless the Secretary finds that such reservation is needed for the efficient operation of the reservoir project designated in this act.

(d) Any land reconveyed under this act shall be sold for an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the price for which the land was acquired by the United States, adjusted to reflect (1) any increase in the value thereof resulting from improvements made thereon by the United States (the Government shall receive no payment as a result of any enhancement of values resulting from the construction of the reservoir project specified in section 1 of this act), or (2) any decrease in the value thereof resulting from (A) any reservation, exception, restrictions, and condition to which the reconveyance is made subject, and (B) any damage to the land caused by the United States. In addition, the cost of any surveys or boundary markings necessary as an incident of such reconveyance shall be borne by the grantee.

(e) The requirements of this section shall not be applicable with respect to the disposition of any land, or interest therein, described in subsection (a) if the Secretary shall certify that notice has been given to the former owner of such land or interest as provided in subsection (b) and that no qualified applicant has made timely application for the reconveyance of such land or interest.

(f) As used in this section the term "former owner" means the person from whom any land, or interests therein, was acquired by the United States, or if such person is deceased, his spouse, or if such spouse is deceased, his children.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Army may delegate any authority conferred upon him by this act to any officer or employee of the Department of the Army. Any such officer or employee shall exercise the authority so delegated under rules and regulations approved by the Secretary.

SEC. 3. Any proceeds from reconveyances made under this act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 4. This act shall terminate 3 years after the date of its enactment.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAYLOR, of Pennsylvania:

On page 2, line 13, after the word "notice", insert a period and strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

On page 2, line 18, after the word "rights", insert "and mineral rights, if any."

On page 2, line 19, after the word "interest", insert a period and strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

On page 2, line 24, strike out the word "equal" and insert "full current appraised value."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SAYLOR] is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take 5 minutes at this time. I have discussed these amendments with the author of the bill and I think they are in furtherance of the aims which the author has for this bill.

I therefore yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. POAGE: On page 4, line 1, after the word "reservoir", add the words "Belton Reservoir."

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is agreed to.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARMED FORCES CODE

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point concerning an action in the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to let this opportunity pass without calling to the attention of the House the magnitude of its action yesterday in clearing for the President's signature the bill (H. R. 7049) to revise, codify, and enact into law, title 10 of the United States Code entitled "Armed Forces" and title 32 entitled "National Guard." The enactment of this bill is one of the most important legislative actions of this or any other Congress.

The work of drafting the bill commenced more than 8 years ago in furtherance of the program of the Committee on the Judiciary to enact into law all 50 titles of the United States Code. With the enactment of this bill, 13 of the 50 titles will have been so enacted and 1 title will have been consolidated with another. The Subcommittee on Revision of the Laws, of which I am chairman, has been supervising and directing this program and is engaged now in the preparation of bills to enact into law additional titles of the Code. That Committee's law revision counsel, Dr. Charles J. Zinn, has been engaged in this work with the Committee on the Judiciary and its predecessor, the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, for 18 years. In recent years he has had the able assistance of Mr. C. F. Brickfield and Mr. Joseph Fischer, assistant law revision counsel.

The draft of this bill was initiated in the Pentagon originally by the Army and shortly thereafter by the Air Force. Two years later, at the suggestion of the then chairman of my subcommittee, the late Honorable Joseph R. Bryson, the Department of the Navy created a staff to work along with the Army-Air Force Codification Group. On several occasions during the intervening years the Committee on the Judiciary published preliminary and revised drafts of the bill which were circulated widely for suggestions and comments.

I should like to give credit to the numerous people who have been associated with this work for varying periods of time in the Pentagon:

For the Office of the Secretary of Defense: Dr. F. Reed Dickerson.

For the Department of the Army: Col. Alfred C. Bowman, Col. Archibald King, and Lt. Col. Joseph P. Ramsay.

For the Department of the Navy: Lt. Col. George M. Lhamon—United States Marine Corps—Comdr. Enser W. Cole, Comdr. Katherine E. Shilling, and Lt. Comdr. Charles J. Murphy.

For the Department of the Air Force: Mr. James B. Minor and Mr. Allan J. Morrison.

The other professional personnel who have worked on the codification of military laws, with dates of service, are as follows:

Mr. Ronald F. Moist, September 16, 1949, to August 20, 1951.

During the intervening period that this bill has been in preparation and pending before the Congress there was almost daily liaison between the officials in the Pentagon and my subcommittee so that the bill as passed reflects the views of the Armed Forces and our committee with respect to principals of legislative drafting and codification.

Although this is only one bill of a number in the program of our committee it is one of the most important in that program. With the enactment of this bill it will be possible to find and keep up to date all the laws relating to the Armed Forces and the National Guard. These laws are now scattered throughout some 70 volumes of the Statutes at Large and although they were incorporated into titles 10, 32, and 34 of the United States Code until the enactment of this bill those titles were prima facie evidence of the law. Now titles 10 and 32 constitute the law and may be amended directly. This will be a tremendous boon to the Congress, the Armed Forces, and the public generally.

May I just add one word regarding the sheer size of the bill. It is more than 800 pages in length printed in smaller type than the normal bill style. If it were printed in the usual style it would undoubtedly comprise more than 2,000 pages. The report of the House Committee on the Judiciary consists of 1,147 pages. Incidentally that report will be indispensable to the users of the new Code inasmuch as each section of the Code is explained in detail in the report—with the source of the new section of the existing law, both in the United States Code and in the Statutes at Large, being indicated.

Mr. Speaker, I want to express my thanks to the Members of the House and particularly to the members of the Committee on Armed Services for their splendid cooperation in bringing this project to such a successful conclusion.

Mrs. FRANCES P. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to relinquish 5 minutes of the time allotted to me to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE REPUBLIC OF LIBERIA

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include an article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. FRANCES P. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 109th anniversary of the independence of the Republic of Liberia. My visit there last fall gave me some little understanding of the difficulties that face these freedom-loving people on every hand. It is particularly heartening to have renewed evidence of their courageous refusal to accept help from Russia, in President Tubman's speech of today in which he reaffirms his pledge to maintain Liberia's alinement with the free world.

I take pleasure in including herewith a Monrovia press release and excerpts from President Tubman's speech.

PRESIDENT TUBMAN OF LIBERIA RENEWS COMMITMENT TO FREE WORLD

MONROVIA, Liberia, July 26.—In a speech celebrating Liberia's Independence Day, President William V. S. Tubman today acknowledged his country's "deep debt of gratitude to the Government and people of the United States for their aid in establishing Liberia" 109 years ago and declared that "we shall not be seduced from our firm commitments to the free world."

He stated that the confidence of the United States "in our unswerving devotion to the cause of democracy has strengthened us in our earnest endeavors to keep the torch of liberty ever beaming on the African continent." He pledged that "we shall continue to work with all our might and main in the United Nations * * * to defeat the forces presently at work to deprive us and them of our liberties."

The President said "we are gratified to state that in addition to maintaining our national existence, we are rapidly developing our human and physical resources, not by ourselves alone but by the conscientious application of a new formula based on mutual respect and equal confidence in the free interchange of skills and private investment capital for essential raw materials needed to reinforce the cause of freedom, justice and equality for men and nations everywhere."

Liberia, with a population of approximately 2 million, is the only Negro Republic in Africa. Its government is modeled directly after that of the United States. It was founded in West Africa in 1822 with the assistance of the American Colonization Society which was seeking a solution to the problems of Negro slavery in America and was conceived by such American patriots as Henry Clay, John Marshall, Bushrod Washington and James Monroe.

Liberia became an independent state in 1847. It was an ally of the United States in World War I and World War II, and is a charter member of the United Nations. It currently furnishes the United States each year with 80 million pounds of rubber and 1,250,000 tons of the world's purest iron ore.

Following are excerpts from the President's speech:

"It cannot escape us on this occasion to record our deep debt of gratitude to the Government and people of the United States of America for their undiminishing interest in, and heightening support of our well-being and prosperity. Though they were themselves deadlocked in a desparate civil struggle to preserve their union from chaos and disintegration, they nevertheless reaffirmed to the world their inherent devotion to the cause of freedom, justice and equality when they extended the tenets of democracy to this continent.

"Moreover, regardless of the idiosyncrasies of some segments of their population, they have generally and consistently fostered and upheld the democratic principles that oppose segregation. Their confidence in our unswerving devotion to the cause of democracy has strengthened us in our earnest endeavors to keep the torch of liberty ever beaming on this continent; and they as well as the others of our sincere western friends and collaborators in the battle for freedom may be assured that we shall not be seduced from our firm commitments to the free world.

"Today we are gratified to state that in addition to maintaining our national existence, we are rapidly developing our human and physical resources, not by ourselves alone, but by the conscientious application of a new formula based on mutual respect and equal confidence in the free interchange of skills and private investment capital for essential raw materials to reinforce the cause of freedom, justice and equality for men and nations everywhere.

"As in the past, we shall continue to work with all our might and main in the United Nations and its specialized agencies, at home as well as abroad, with our allies to defeat the forces presently at work to deprive us and them of our liberties.

"On this glorious Independence Day when the hearts of all Liberians are filled with joy and ecstacy over the accomplishments of their fathers. I pledge you, I pledge this Nation. I pledge myself to a newer and a more dynamic liberty—the liberty to develop.

"Our pioneer fathers, few as they were, obtained our liberties through hard trials and tribulations. Our predecessors maintained those self-same liberties by virtue of courage and perseverance. Now more than ever when the eyes of the world are turned upon Africa, it is our duty to develop our liberties on a grand scale; for that liberty which continues to lie dormant, existing only in the minds of men, is on the pathway of deterioration. This must not happen to us.

"The liberty to develop must supersede and transcend all our other liberties, for it must give force and effect to each and all of them. It must be based upon the unification policy which is welding our population into a strong, virile and united people. It must be based upon the open-door policy which is bringing into the country more and more enterprises and concessions, teaching new skills, employing more people, and putting more money into circulation."

PASS THE BILLS FOR THE VETERANS BEFORE ADJOURNMENT

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Ohio very much for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I am extremely sorry that Senator MILLIKIN, of Colorado, is not going to run for the Senate again. A man of great charm and wit and great knowledge, his work and his great ability have been invaluable to the Senate and to the country. I know of no one who has given more than Senator MILLIKIN in his work for the veterans, which I am thinking of especially. He never forgets them. He never let them down. He had a wonderful war record himself and knew their problems.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am sorry, I cannot yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yielded to you a moment ago. I just want to join you.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I will yield to the gentleman in just a minute. I know his loyal support in all veterans matters.

I know the Members are anxious to get away. I also know that veterans all over the country wish that Senator MILLIKIN were chairman of the committee handling our veterans' legislation.

I would like to remind the House which passed the pension bill and the increase compensation bill of 10 percent for service-connected cases that when Senator MILLIKIN was chairman of the committee he often used to take our reports for their legislation, and then he would bring out bills and pass them. The Speaker knows and all of the Members who have been here a long time know that even at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning of the last day of our sessions the Senate has passed bills—our House bills—and if they amended our bills, they sent them over to us and we passed them.

Mr. Speaker, the House has already passed this legislation I speak of and I beg the Members of the House to see that the legislation comes over here from the other body.

I have referred to the other body because there is no excuse for holding up this legislation. It has been over there for weeks and the Committee on Finance can take our hearings and approve and report the bills. It is only justice that that be done.

I remember during the war days when we voted to send our men to war. It was no joke. It was no joke in arming those men, it was no joke to send them away from their families. We promised them everything under the sun. It was no joke when they were wounded or disabled. Do we so soon forget them?

Today we have passed bills on all kinds of subjects involving great appropriations. Bills on our national resources and our greatest national resource is our soldiers and veterans. But we do not have to adjourn until the Senate acts. I for one shall do everything in my power to prevent adjournment.

I think in your hearts every Member here would like to honor our veterans and feel that he or she is grateful for what they have done. How are we going to face them if you do not show it by helping them?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

REPLY TO MISLEADING STATEMENTS ABOUT ILLINOIS

Mr. MURRAY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in remarks entitled "Gangster Slayings," appearing in the July 24, 1956 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, our able colleague from Georgia, Hon. E. L. FORRESTER, made certain remarks about the city of Chicago and the State of Illinois, and about city and State officials, that are completely unsubstantiated by fact and transcend fair comment.

Our able colleague was a great prosecutor in his own State. His opposition to civil rights legislation has become so intense that it apparently has conquered the passion for fact that marked his career as a great prosecutor.

In his remarks of July 24, our able colleague made reference to slayings and crime in the city of Chicago and the State of Illinois.

An examination of the most recently published Uniform Crime Reports Bulletin of the Federal Bureau of Investigaton discloses that for the calendar year 1955, per 100,000 population, the State of Illinois had 5.7 murders or nonnegligent manslaughters. The State of Georgia had over twice as many, or 13.6.

Nonaggravated assaults—which are merely uncompleted murders—Illinois had 77.8 per 100,000 population, while the State of Georgia had 193.3.

Burglaries, per 100,000 population, Illinois, 335.3; Georgia, 462.4.

Larceny and theft: Illinois, 619.4; Georgia, 989.2.

In cases of automobile theft, per hundred thousand population, the State of Illinois had 123.3, while Georgia had 208.3.

By this reference to FBI crime reports, I do not attempt to suggest that there is a great crime wave in the State of Georgia, as was inferred about the State of Illinois and the city of Chicago in the gentleman's remarks on July 24; nor do I suggest that the officials of the State of Georgia are in league with gangsters, as was suggested by the gentleman in his remarks concerning officials of the State of Illinois.

To make such an inference would be a great wrong to the Congressman and Congresswoman from Georgia who stand high upon the roll of the finest and most patriotic people in the Nation. It would be a great sin against the people of Georgia whom I have by personal experience found to be among the most law abiding and friendliest in the Nation.

Obviously, the FBI reports are predicated upon many factors—as are headlines concerning Illinois crimes. These factors make comparisons and conclusions predicated thereon unjustifiable.

I am certain that the gentleman from Georgia did not intend to slander the State of Illinois or the city of Chicago, but rather I believe that he has fallen into an attempt to justify his own evaluation of a situation, rather than arriving at a conclusion based upon fact.

CRIME STATISTICS—GEORGIA AND ILLINOIS

Mr. BOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOYLE. Mr. Speaker, in the past years, Chicago has made steady progress in the improvement of its law enforcement efforts and stepped up its ever continuing fight against gambling and the racketeers. The citizens are confident the greatest city in the Middle West will continue its fight against crime and corruption.

A Report on Chicago Crime for 1955 by the Chicago Crime Commission states that major offenses reported in Chicago for the year of 1955 showed a decrease of 13.9 percent. The people of Chicago can point with pride to this fact—a definite step forward towards their goal of making Chicago a crime-free city.

Statistics do not seem to corroborate the observations or statements of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FORRESTER] made on the floor of the House on July 24, as recorded at page 14316 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the effect that major crimes such as murder, rape, manslaughter, or aggravated assault are more prevalent in a northern State than in a southern State. A check of the figures published in the Federal Bureau of Investigation's Uniform Crime Reports, Annual Bulletin, 1955, shows the fallacy of making any such statements. Taking the States of Illinois and Georgia as States indicative of the crime rates in the North and the South, the following facts can be ascertained from Uniform Crime Reports. During the year 1955, total crimes—which include murder, nonnegligent manslaughter, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary—breaking or entering, larceny—theft, and auto theft—for the State of Georgia per 100,000 population was 1,930; for the State of Illinois, 1,309. In actuality, this shows an increase of 521 offenses per 100,000 in the State of Georgia over the State of Illinois. These figures can hardly be used to support the theory that there is a greater incidence of crime in Illinois than in Georgia.

Taking the crime trends for the largest city in each of the two States—Atlanta and Chicago—the same trend can be seen as illustrated for the States as a whole. Once more Uniform Crime Reports is used for the basis of the conclusions here reached. The figures used are for the same crimes as listed for the comparison of the two States. On the basis of offenses per 100,000 of population, approximately 2,800 crimes were committed in the city of Atlanta. Breaking the figures down further, the crime rate per capita was 0.028. Using the same set of figures for the city of Chicago, offenses per 100,000 of population were approximately 1,300, or 0.013 per capita.

Again the figures verify the fact that, although a greater number of crimes were committed in the city of Chicago than in Atlanta, on the basis of population more crimes were committed in Atlanta than in Chicago. Even though due consideration must be given to the fact that all statistical figures are subject to certain variables, it seems possible to draw only one conclusion—that the crime rate is definitely higher in Georgia than in Illinois.

If it is considered that the atmosphere in which a person is reared contributes to his capacity for commiting major crimes in any given community, then it would seem to be safe to conclude that life in the State of Georgia fosters a greater tendency to commit crimes than does life in the State of Illinois.

Crime is a problem in each of the 48 States. It can be decreased only by the willingness of the citizens, the courts, and law-enforcement officers of each State to wage a constant battle against crime and corruption.

I have no intention to indulge in controversy with my colleague from Georgia who is a member of the same subcommittee on the Judiciary Committee but I do arise to set the record straight.

SENATOR BENDER'S OHIO CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio.

There was no objection.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, I have today received a letter from United States Senator GEORGE BENDER in connection with a statement which I made last Monday regarding the appointment of Secretary of the Treasury George Humphrey as chairman of the Senator's Ohio campaign committee.

In order to make all facts in this matter available, I am inserting this letter in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND PUBLIC WELFARE,
July 26, 1956.

Hon. CHARLES A. VANIK,
Member of Congress, United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CHARLIE: I am certain that you would not wish to convey any misunderstanding of the true situation with respect to the appointment and the acceptance by my longtime friend, Mr. George M. Humphrey, Secretary of the Treasury, as chairman of the Bender-for-Senator Campaign Committee.

This committee has no relationship whatever to any fund-raising or fund-expending activities being pursued on my behalf in the State of Ohio. The finance committee has been publicized throughout the State of Ohio and is headed by Mr. Joseph C. Shouvlin, of Springfield, Ohio, a very reputable and highly esteemed, independent citizen of our State. Mr. William Cody Kelly, of Cincinnati, Ohio, is serving as my campaign manager.

Mr. Humphrey's position as chairman of my committee is designed to provide the best possible guidance and advice to me in the conduct of my campaign on the highest possible level. It has become a well-established practice in Democratic, as well as Republican administrations in recent years, to designate the party national chairman to a Cabinet position. I do not believe that this in any way conflicts with the performance of duties and responsibilities assumed by these Cabinet officials. I am certain that nothing in the coming campaign would detract in any way from the outstanding record of performance achieved by our Secretary of the Treasury.

With my deep appreciation of your interest in maintaining the highest possible standard of political campaigning, I am

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE H. BENDER,
United States Senator.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy may be permitted to file a report during the adjournment of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

DR. RAY W. GIFFORD, JR.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order that I, with a number of my colleagues, might pay our tribute of appreciation and affection to Dr. Ray W. Gifford, Jr., assistant attending physician of the Congress, who is about to complete his tour of active duty as lieutenant commander of the Medical Corps of the Navy.

Dr. Gifford has been a vital and an important part of the 84th Congress. He was here on the convening of the first session and is leaving on the adjournment of the second session. In the long hard months intervening, when often we were working around the clock and under tremendous pressures, he has been friend and physician. His warm personality, his great professional ability, and his willingness at all times to forego matters of personal concern the better to serve us have been a large contribution. He has taken in each of us a warm personal interest, truly the family physician in the finest and noblest sense. He leaves us with our deep appreciation. Our loss in his departure will be the gain of the Mayo Clinic at Rochester, to which noted institution he is returning as consultant in internal medicine. To Dr. Gifford and his charming wife go our good wishes for everything fine in the years ahead.

In bidding farewell to Dr. Gifford we again are reminded of how much we and the country owe to Adm. George W. Calver, who as physician to the Congress for many years, has kept the lawmakers of the Republic on their feet physically through the wear and tear, the strains of long hours, and demands on endurance when normal precautions were difficult, and the legislative work had to go on to meet the problems and the crises of the moment. Dr. Calver is a great American, respected and beloved by all in the Congress, and a physician who has reflected the highest honor and distinction on the Medical Corps of the Navy. It goes without saying that one working in association and under the command of Admiral Calver must be outstanding in professional standing and personal attributes.

Dr. Gifford was born in Westerville, Ohio. He received his B. S. degree at Otterbein College in 1944, being first in his class. He again was first in his class when in 1947 he received his M. D. degree from Ohio State University College of Medicine. In 1952 the University of Minnesota conferred upon him the degree of M. S. in medicine. He served his internship at the Colorado General Hospital, 1947–48, his senior internship in medicine at the Ohio State University Hospital, 1948–49, and was a fellow in medicine at the Mayo Foundation, 1949–52.

From 1952 to September of 1954, when he came to the Congress as its assistant attending physician, he was instructor in medicine in the graduate school of the University of Minnesota and consultant in internal medicine in the famous Mayo Clinic. He is the author or coauthor of more than 15 articles dealing with cardiovascular diseases.

Mr. MUMMA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MUMMA. I join with the gentleman from Illinois. I have had pleasant professional relations with Dr. Gifford. He is a very sincere man and he has considerably improved my health.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McGREGOR. I concur in the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois. I, too, owe a lot to Dr. Gifford. I wish him well in his return to private practice.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BERRY].

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to concur in the statement the gentleman from Illinois has made. I think that Dr. Gifford has done a grand job, and I feel that he goes back to Mayo Clinic with the support and friendship of all of the Members of Congress.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McCULLOCH].

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, I should like to join in the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois with respect to Dr. Gifford. He was a grand fellow and a most excellent physician. I wish him well.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may revise and extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join with my colleague from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA] in paying tribute to Dr. Raymond W. Gifford who has served with such distinction on the staff of Dr. Calver, the attending physician for the House of Representatives. I am deeply indebted to Dr. Gifford for his many kindnesses and his excellent treatment since he has been assigned here to the Capitol of the Nation. I am sorry that he is leaving us. But he has performed his tour of duty with the Navy, and as I understand is now returning to the staff of the Mayo Clinic from which he came to us for service in the Navy. We have been lucky to have him as long as he has been with us. In his service here he has demonstrated a rare and high professional competence, and the type of personal interest and attention to his patients that make the medical profession the respected one that it is. I have never known a doctor who has served here in the Capitol I would rather have as my own personal doctor. If he were stepping out of Dr. Calver's office into private practice in this city I would continue to seek his advice and help when necessary. In my opinion Dr. Gifford meets in every way the highest and the best standards of a profession dedicated to the health and welfare of mankind. He is not only a competent, careful, and highly skilled practitioner, but one who is deeply conscientious in his advice and care of those seeking his advice. He exemplifies the best in the medical profession—in learning, native appitude, and sense of responsibility to his basic oath. I wish they were all like him, but that cannot be—any more than we can all be top legislators or public servants. But I welcome this opportunity of saying that he has attained and accomplished the highest level there is in professional competence and the personal relationships in his chosen field—and I know he will take a deep satisfaction in that and in maintaining them. I am grateful to my colleague for providing this opportunity for saying thanks to Dr. Gifford, who truly deserves it.

POSTPONING SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order I was granted for today be vacated and that instead I have permission to address the House tomorrow for 10 minutes, following the legislative business of the day and any other special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

VETERANS PENSION LEGISLATION

Mrs. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that I shall do everything in my power to prevent the adjournment of Congress until the Senate has passed our veterans bill.

STRIPED PANTS, OVERALLS, AND GHOST WRITERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California, [Mr. PHILLIPS], is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, as you undoubtedly have been doing yourself the last few days, I have been cleaning up my correspondence and particularly that little pile of notes and clippings which every Congressman has on his desk, under a souvenir paperweight. I came across a most intriguing item, and I rise today to talk about it.

This is a paragraph from the U. S. News & World Report, on the page which carries the copyright head Washington Whispers. I quote it in its entirety:

A State Department official says this of agricultural attachés maintained abroad by the United States Department of Agriculture: "A lot of these attachés know farming well, but let's face it—that's all they know. They seem interested only in farming, they bore foreign dignitaries, forget the proper dress, and are giving the impression that the United States is crowded with country bumpkins."

This refers to one of the ablest groups of men in any nation in the world, the agricultural attachés of the Department of Agriculture of the United States of America. Yes, Mr. Speaker, they "know farming well," as the clipping says; it may surprise the State Department employee who inspired that item, but that is exactly what they are expected to know, and why they give their lives to representing American agriculture, sometimes under difficult conditions. I doubt if they "bore foreign dignitaries," as this charges, but I may concede that at times they prefer overalls to striped pants, or the characteristic Stetson of the West, or the straw hat of Iowa, to the black Homburg; but if I recall Emerson correctly, he said:

It is only when mind and character slumber that the dress can be seen.

And that William Hazlitt wrote, very appropriately, in one of his Political Essays:

Those who make dress a principal part of themselves will, in general, become of no more value than their dress.

After reading this clipping again and enjoying the same good laugh you have had today, I began to wonder if the State Department has not unwittingly revealed its own Achilles' heel in the remark in which the item must have originated. I will turn this time to Shakespeare, who has one of his characters saying in All's Well That Ends Well:

The soul of this man is his clothes.

Mr. Speaker, before I pay tribute to these able and courageous missionaries and salesmen of American agriculture and the American way, I would like to comment briefly, if I may, on some of their counterparts in the Department of State. I have been familiar personally with our agricultural attachés for more than 21 years and with the Foreign Service of the State Department for more than 48 years, and I speak today from experience and observation. This clipping is not based, in my opinion, on some casual comment, Mr. Speaker; it is part of a deliberate effort to destroy, or at least to nullify, the action of the Congress which 2 years ago returned the agricultural attachés to the Department of Agriculture and took them back from the Department of State, where the service had been almost destroyed, as I shall now point out. In the intervening 2 years there have been intermittent efforts on the part of the State Department to destroy this separation.

I do not accuse the top officials of this attempted sabotage; they cannot know everything that goes on in a department so large that it occupies, in Washington alone, the huge building erected for the Army (before the Army moved to the even larger Pentagon) and in addition, occupies some 21 or more apartments or temporaries in the western end of this otherwise beautiful city.

Instead of being critical of this State Department acrobat who now finds himself in what must be a somewhat familiar position in that department, with his foot in his mouth, I rise to thank him for bringing the matter into the open. I will talk first about the people in the State Department who represent the same general level as these agricultural attachés. I concede, at the start, Mr. Speaker, that they may know the proper pants, coats and hats, for all formal occasions; I will not concede that they never bore foreign dignitaries, having talked to some of the representatives of other nations myself. We are all agreed that they do not, as a rule, know farming, and I again call to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that peculiar as it may seem to the State Department, that is exactly why the agricultural attachés are sent abroad.

Some of the Members must occasionally watch a TV program known as You Bet Your Life. A few weeks ago a contestant appeared and was asked, as usual, several questions. In this case, the first was:

Give the name of the British statesman known as Lord Beaconsfield.

The contestant did not know. Any schoolboy could have answered that Lord Beaconsfield was Disraeli, Prime Minister of England under Victoria in one of the greatest eras of that nation, when England secured control of the Suez Canal.

The next question was:

What was the name of the last king of Spain before the present regime?

The contestant did not know. The average citizen of the contestant's age would have answered "Alphonso" instantly, and recalled not only the famous profile, and the blood problems of that family, but his friendship with our own Nation.

There was one other question, as I recall. The contestant was given the names of a married couple and asked to give their better known names. They were Fibber McGee and Molly. Even I, who practically never watch anything on TV except John Cameron Swayze and Sergeant Bilko, knew that.

Now comes the payoff, Mr. Speaker. When the contestant was asked his occupation, he replied that for 13 years he had been a ghost writer for the top echelon of the State Department. I hasten to add this was under a previous administration, but since some of us find it difficult to see many changes in the faces in some of the agencies and departments, perhaps this disclaimer is pointless. The foot is still in the mouth and the ghost writers apparently still do not know that Lord Beaconsfield was Disraeli.

I pass to a few personal experiences. Just about a year ago I went abroad, primarily for the 3 weeks "Kur," at a little German spa near the Rhine; but last year with equal intent to inspect again the United States cemeteries and memorials, six of which we are right now this week dedicating in France, England, and Italy. I had also agreed to meet the then-new Comptroller-General in Madrid and inspect the newest European office of that agency. The subcommittee on which I serve had some influence in setting up these money-saving European offices.

I had asked nothing of the State Department, although I rise to remark that the sections which have to do with what might be called VIP travel are helpful and competent. I want particularly to thank Miss Marcelle Lecompte, of the Paris office, for courtesies over the years. Last year I had bought a little Volkswagen, driven it to the Spanish border, and planned to take the "Talgo" to Madrid. I wrote the Madrid Embassy and asked them to check my hotel reservations, telling them when I would arrive. I received a letter saying the hotel confirmed the reservations and adding, without my request, that someone from the Embassy would meet Mrs. Phillips and me at the depot. We arrived; we were not met. I took a cab to the hotel and checked in. Two hours later, a cultured voice phoned to ask if I had arrived and to offer any help I needed. I said, no thanks, I was to meet Mr. Campbell that evening. The cultured voice, which I am sure would never split an infinitive, told me that the Comptroller had canceled his reservation. Since I was there to meet him, and had had no notice of changed plans, I may be excused for being startled by this news.

To make a long story short, I found that Mr. Campbell had made the reservations through his own GAO office in Madrid, and had never canceled them. The State Department had simply taken upon itself to cancel them for him, without authorization, because they had not been made, I presume, through State Department channels.

You may picture Mr. Campbell arriving, tired and hot, late that evening only to be told that the State Department had canceled his rooms. Fortunately, and by the greatest good luck, the hotel could still give Mr. and Mrs. Campbell a room.

I now come back to the cultured voice. It suggested a car for the following morning. I said that, like all farmers, I could probably walk to the Embassy, but that I'd be glad to ride if a car were available. I asked mildly if I could count on the car with any more assurance than their offer to meet me at the depot. The voice was startled almost out of its broad "a." "Did you come by train?" it said. "Didn't I write you that I was coming by train and give the time and the train?" I asked. "Yes," stammered the voice, "but the Paris office notified us you were coming by automobile." I suggested equally mildly that I usually knew what I was doing, a little better than any office that had not even been consulted.

But this, Mr. Speaker, was only the start; the best is still to come. Since we were to inspect an airfield and have a briefing at the Air Force Headquarters, an affable and competent young officer was assigned to help the Comptroller and me. On the way back he made the usual offer of other help. I said, rather casually, that I had a letter from the head of the Catholic Rural Life Conference to his old friend who was now the Papal Nuncio in Madrid. They were brought up together and went to school together in the same Italian province. I wanted to know if someone could telephone and ask when it would be convenient for me to call. My courage has rarely been challenged but I confess it does not extend to tackling a European telephone.

I presume this again requires the "proper channels," for the young officer called me up that afternoon with some embarrassment and said he had taken the matter up with the Embassy. I gather that my simple request caused near consternation. The reply was that the Papal Nuncio was the highest diplomatic official in Madrid; that such inquiries as I contemplated would have to be handled by our Ambassador, who was then out of town, and that an appointment might be arranged in about a week.

I thanked the officer. The next morning I drove around to the Nuncio's residence, and sent in my card and the letter. In less than 2 minutes the Nuncio's secretary came out, literally on the run, to apologize for keeping me waiting even until the Nuncio finished with the visitors then with him and to say that the Nuncio had known I was to be in Madrid and hoped that I would call. We had a long talk, on water and agriculture, subjects which apparently the cultured voices in the Embassy had not included in previous conversations.

I am convinced that the young men now joining the State Department staffs, who know what clothes to wear, and what drinks to serve at a cocktail party, sometimes forget, if they ever did know, that even diplomats are human, and that a Papal Nuncio may once have been a parish priest in Canada, and is still interested in the well-being of his rural people.

One final experience, Mr. Speaker. For 23 years I have written a weekly column for the newspapers of my county, and for the last 14 years, of my district. I have borrowed the use of typewriters in embassies and consulates and private offices, in London, Berlin, Warsaw, Moscow, Paris, and all way stations. Only once have I been refused; last year in Madrid. The cultured voice called me again, the afternoon before we left Madrid and again asked if it could be of any help. In the free and easy way of a farm boy, I said, "You sure can, please let me use a typewriter this afternoon for about an hour." I could sense a shocked silence. "What's the matter," I asked, "haven't you got one that isn't being used?" "Well, yes," said the voice, "there is one right here in this office." "May I use it?" I asked. An anguished voice replied, and this is literally what it said, "Oh, Mr. Congressman, if anyone saw a Congressman in this office, using a typewriter like a clerk, I could be severely criticized."—P. S. I went out to the Air Force Headquarters and used a typewriter.

Enough of that, Mr. Speaker. I am trying to suggest that a knowledge of the proper dress may be desirable, but I suspect that taking young men out of Harvard or Columbia, without business experience, or any experience for that matter, has not always strengthened the foreign service, and I submit has not put men into the diplomatic frontlines, in a world controversy which has moved from the battlelines to the bottlelines, if I may be excused a very poor pun. They do not always have the backgrounds for the responsibilities we place on them. The future of this Nation depends as much on these cultured young men as it may on the farm boys in uniform who are being taught to handle atomic warheads. At the moment my confidence in our efforts abroad is not 100 precent.

To restore it, Mr. Speaker, I will talk about the outstanding job being done by our agricultural attachés since we got them back from under the control of the State Department.

My first personal experience with the agricultural attachés was in 1935. I was chairman of the assembly committee on agriculture, in the California State Legislature, and we were struggling with the ever-present problem of the prices paid producers at the farm, and the prices paid for the same commodities by the housewives. Canada tried to solve it, and the report of the Canadian commission was excellent and voluminous. The news had reached this country that one of the accomplishments of the new Nazi regime in Germany was a solution of this problem. I took off that summer, to find out, and also to check into farming conditions in Russia.

In Paris, Berlin, and Moscow, I was given desk room in the offices of the agricultural attachés, and every help and courtesy. They ran down leads for me in the libraries, and in Russia I was allowed to read confidential reports on the efforts to convert the farmers to communism. This applied both to 1935 and 1937. Niels Nielsen was our attaché in Paris; Lloyd Steere was in Berlin. Dr. L. G. Michael covered the Polish and Russian areas. I did not meet him personally until later. Harry Reed was in Germany working on livestock matters, and his figures, based on ability and experience, were so much better than those of the Hitler government that they were used by the Germans in preference to their own, at the time. Among other names I recall were Les Mallory, who is now, I think, in Jordan; Les Wheeler who was then in the Washington office, and Fred Motz, who ought to have special mention because, when the shift took place from Agriculture to the State Department, he chose to sacrifice advancement in the Foreign Service and thus his own income, to stay with Agriculture. Since the value of an agricultural attaché, like that of a Congressman, is in direct ratio to tenure and what we call seniority, Dr. Motz deserves special commendation. He stuck it out and has seen the attachés returned, as they should be, to the Department of Agriculture.

I do not know if the idea of the shift had its origin in Agriculture or in State. Certainly State seized on it with alacrity. The reasoning, on the part of some attachés, was understandable. They were not part of the official family, in many embassies; if the Ambassador gave a reception, they were not always invited. The Foreign Service was always getting itself added salaries, better retirement provisions, and other benefits; the attachés were left out. Agricultural attachés were expected to remain just that, agricultural attachés. The longer they worked at the job, and the more friends they made and the more contacts, the better results they could get. Around them, the young men who started on the lower rungs of the diplomatic ladder became assistant secretaries, vice consuls, and sometimes even chargés d'affaires, and once in a long time, even a minister. This was too much for some of the more ambitious attachés; they supported the move to State.

The switch just about ruined the agricultural attaché service. The State Department would put a young man on the job and call him the agricultural attaché. Whether he knew barley from wheat, or the difference between an orange and a pear, or which end of the cow got milked, was incidental. The result was that the young man, however bright, considered the job a temporary one and already had his eyes firmly fixed on the upper rungs of the Foreign Service ladder. The reason why the appointment of Mrs. Pearl Mesta to the post of Minister to Luxembourg hit the Foreign Service so hard was that this was one of the few remaining Legations to which a Minister could be appointed from the regular Foreign Service list. It had been given to an outsider, instead of one of the fraternity whose shield is a cocktail glass, inverted, on a field, quartered, of morning coat and trousers.

Two things happened at once; we lost our best men, either by resignations, or by "promotions"—and I put the word in quotation marks—save in a few instances, and the service began to deteriorate, rapidly.

Where once we had been able to move American farm commodities, sometimes by having a few items included in an international contract, involving many commodities, and making its major profit from international exchange, we now had few, if any, such deals. Often these were made without real profit to the contracting broker; he wanted the fruit or the other commodities, for his Nation, for the benefit of its citizens. Even these stopped.

The reports, on which the farmers once depended, became, to all intents, valueless. The reasons were obvious; when the agricultural attachés represented the farmers their reports came through promptly and were circulated in time to do some good. When they represented the State Department, the reports had to follow the procedures of that overstuffed department. The attaché got the information, if he could, considering his probable inexperience. He took it to the proper section of the Embassy. He could not have direct contacts with men in other nations from whom he could get statistical information; all this had to go through several echelons of Foreign Service officers. The report eventually got to Washington; it was referred to the Department of Agriculture for comment. It went back to the State Department to have the commas and the semicolons checked. Finally it got to the farmers who grew the products which were covered in the report. By that time the report was only of historic interest, if of any interest at all. The season was either underway or over. Humorous as this sounds, I do not exaggerate.

Then we changed back, and the agricultural attachés again represent the farmers. The change in the morale of the service is so marked that it has been commented on in my hearing, dozens of times, here and abroad. We get our reports promptly again. They are excellent reports. Mr. Clayton Whipple became the active head of the Washington office. He had been the mainspring of the most successful part of the point 4 program. Our attachés are going to all parts of the world and opening new chapters of friendship for America.

Last year I flew into Paris, from Spain, just to be present at the first general conference held by a Secretary of Agriculture, for these agricultural attachés. It was held in the Paris Embassy. Three Congressmen were there. Attachés were there, who were located in a dozen countries. The morale was high. The results were excellent. The old doors were opening for American farmers.

So you will realize, Mr. Speaker, why I smile when I read that some employee of the State Department tries to influence a news item by saying that these farm attachés "know farming well, but that's all they know." Or that they "forget the proper dress," or give the wrong impression. I leave it to your good judgment, Mr. Speaker, which group is creating the wrong impression, if either, and I rise today to give thanks, in the last few hours of my last session, that we had these agricultural attachés in the past and that we have them again, loyal and competent, back home where they belong, in the Department of Agriculture.

A LOOK AT THE 84TH

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MURRAY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MURRAY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the 84th Congress, and the first Congress in which I have had the privilege to participate, is coming to a close. It has been a great personal experience to serve my country and the people of Chicago's great Southwest Side.

My service in the 84th Congress, besides being most gratifying personally, has left me with lasting impressions concerning our Government.

If I were to identify my impressions of Congress, I would probably select as the deepest the observance of men of all walks of life, from every section of the country, laying aside subjective influences and legislating for the best interest of the Nation.

Seeing men like our distinguished Speaker, majority leader, minority leader, and other leaders of the House giving up opportunities to earn fantastic sums in private business to carry out their responsibilities to the people bespeaks the fact that there is something more in Congress than partisan politics. These gentlemen assume and perform their duty in due humility and with full appreciation of the faith and trust placed in them by their people, and are cognizant of the many compensations attached to such service which cannot be measured in monetary terms.

The rigid rules governing ordinary legislative procedure are time consuming and often frustrating to a Member eager to see promptly enacted measures he deems to be for the benefit of the country and the people whom he represents. However, even the slowness of the legislative process has great merit because it affords opportunity for thorough study and free decision upon matters affecting the country.

Personal friendships that transcend party lines and withstand the most bitter political controversy demonstrate to one that Congressmen are not the long-bearded ne'er-do-wells so often depicted in cartoons, but rather are plain, ordinary Americans carrying on their Nation's business.

Although it was charged in the fall of 1954 during the campaign preceding the election that if the Congress was Democratic our democratic processes would be stalemated with a Congress controlled by a party different than that of the President. The record of this Congress belies this contention because nothing approaching a partisan cold war has developed. The President's rash prediction of such a situation in the 1954 campaign discloses that he is a poor prophet.

The President found a majority of his own party deserting the administration on votes involving Federal aid to school construction, the mutual aid program, the United States Organization for Trade Cooperation, and others.

Although the Democratic Congress differed from the President in the areas of farm price supports, tax reduction, power matters, and social security, it joined with him on all matters in which the interest of all the people of America were at stake. They differed with him when legislation was designated to benefit only those with special interests. These differences, however, did not result in a stalemate of the Congress; on the contrary, they merely generated political thinking on issues that vitally affect the people and refute entirely earlier charges of disunity.

The record of the 84th Congress is something that I am proud to have had a part in. The 84th Congress discloses that regardless of the outcome of the next election the next Congress will be one of moderation. Since Congress more thoroughly reflects the thinking of the people than any other branch of the Government, it is evident that the people of the United States are more and more approaching moderation in their Government, with the extremists on the right and left becoming a distinct minority.

There remain issues to be resolved before this country can be said to be truly at peace with prosperity. The rights of our individual citizens regardless of race, creed, or national origin need additional legislative protection. Assistance is needed in our educational facilities. This assistance obviously must come from the Federal Government, but should come in such a fashion that local control over such facilities may be retained. Additional strides must be taken in the area of housing for the lower income groups and the aged; clearing of the slums; additional legislation is needed in the fields of labor and management relations so that these two great segments of our society engaged in production might meet across the bargaining table upon an equal basis. Additional legislation is needed in the field of social security, aid to our dependent children and the handicapped. Legislative progress must be made in the development of atomic energy, for the conservation and development of our natural resources. In the field of foreign policy, bolder steps must be taken to insure our own national security and peace in the world.

Obviously, no Congress will ever achieve the completion of all the problems that might face the Nation. The best that can be hoped for is that each Congress makes a step forward to the securing of the rights and the enjoyment thereof described in the document which gave birth to our liberty:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

STATISTICS ON ARRESTS, ET CETERA, OF WHITE AND NEGRO POPULATIONS OF VARIOUS AREAS OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMPSON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the Members of the House have been exposed this year to two speeches entitled in the RECORD "Where is the Reign of Terror?" and "Racial Differences." These speeches by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] devoted themselves primarily to presenting certain statistics comparing white and Negro populations of various areas of the United States as to arrests and commitments to prison on felony charges, rates of illegitimate births, rejections from armed services through failure of the qualification test and number of cases of venereal disease.

The statistics which the gentleman set forth are unquestionably significant and disturbing. It may be that they were surprising to many Members, but no one has challenged them. As the gentleman from Mississippi said on July 5, "Thus far, no one has come forward to dispute the authenticity of this data, or the obvious conclusions to be drawn therefrom." I do not come forward now to question the authenticity of the data, but I am most concerned about the conclusions to be drawn from them. Over the past 2 days in debate on this floor many of my colleagues have been drawing conclusions which seem to be based on similar data to that presented by the gentleman from Mississippi but conclusions in this field of racial comparisons are by no means obvious, and the conclusions which such presentations tend to suggest are not, for me, at all conclusive.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that in the course of his March 27 speech the gentleman disavowed any belief that one race is a super race and the other is a race of degenerates. His main purpose, as he stated it, was to open the eyes of those who have been blinded by leftwing propaganda and brainwashed by a biased press. If there be any Member of this House who was saved from blindness or brainwashing by the gentleman's efforts, I certainly wish to join in extending a vote of thanks for the salvation of a fellow Member. Yet, despite the high purpose for which the data was presented and the absence of racist philosophy which the gentleman professed, I fear that the statistics, as presented, can easily be misinterpreted. The gentleman's own remarks contribute to this possibility of misinterpretation.

For example, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman stated in one of his speeches that "the fact remains that there exists ethnic differences between the Caucasian race and the Negro race which cannot be changed by the hand of man." The listener might wonder, of course, which differences the gentleman had in mind. The House was then told that "in the days before this brainwashing crusade began, editors did not fear to print the truth." As an example of this fearless editorship of the truth he then quoted the 11th edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica in its dissertation on the Negro. If this dissertation constitutes the truth, then it is clear that the gentleman holds the Negro race to be degenerate in respect to mental capacity and this must be one of the differences which he considers beyond the power of man to change. The quoted passage bluntly states that, "mentally the Negro is inferior to the white" as a race, for the reason that the growth of the Negro's brain is arrested by the premature closing of the cranial sutures. The Negro's brain consequently does not achieve as great a volume as the white man's.

I might read this entire astounding passage, including the sentences which gentleman failed to include, which modify the sweeping generalization made at its outset, but the exact wording would be tedious and unenlightening. This passage of truth about the Negro which the gentleman has offered to offset the current propaganda is of only historical interest. The authority which the 11th edition of the encyclopaedia quoted, when it was published back in 1911—even the Speaker of the House, Mr. RAYBURN, had not reached Congress when that edition appeared—the quoted authority for this description of the Negro's mentality was F. Manetta, an Italian, who made what Britannica described as a long study of the Negro in America and published a book on his findings in 1864.

Mr. Speaker, it is incredible to me how anyone can imagine that a book written about the American Negro, a study which took place during the years of his enslavement, could serve as standard of truth concerning the Negro's capabilities. In the year in which that book was published, 1864, less than 5 percent of the American Negroes could read and write. In 1864, psychology could make no pretense of being a science, and anthropology was a discipline that was barely known in this country. In fact, it is still not well known among us, for the gentleman from Mississippi has referred nostalgically to the days when sociological and "anthropoidal experts" saw their findings honestly printed. The American Negro does not need any "anthropoidal" or ape experts, to study him. (He does need anthropologists.) Not only were anthropology and psychology in their infancy in 1864, but the first rating scale of intelligence was not devised until 40 years later by Binet.

So it strikes me as a great disservice to American Negroes to represent a preemancipation sociologist as a speaker of truth on the question of the Negro's mental capacity. The idea that the volume of the brain determines a person's intelligence is absurd on the face of it. What hope would there be for the female sex, if it were true, and how would we explain their many achievements? Modern science has long since dropped the idea. What ridiculous distortions of the truth we could find, if we accepted uncritically everything that we read in the 1911 edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica. Some rather unflattering things are said about the school system in certain Southern States, for example, which we know would not be said today. I shall not accuse the Encyclopaedia Britannica of having been "brainwashed" because it has brought its entry on Mississippi up to date in subsequent editions.

So that the record is clear on this subject of mental capacity of the American Negro, I shall read the dissertation in the latest edition, No. 14, the 1955 printing, of the Encyclopaedia Britannica:

> In reviewing the comparative studies of the differences between the Negro and the modern European, Carr-Sanders concludes that "there seems to be no market difference in innate intellectual power. The differences are rather differences in disposition and temperament * * * . The apparent arrest of development may not be so much an inevitable result of the kind of mental faculties which are inherited as the coming into play of a peculiar tradition."

That statement, Mr. Speaker, is in step with the findings of modern students on this subject. One of the most thorough investigators of this question, Dr. Otto Klineberg, of Columbia University, has had the following to say in the Encyclopedia of the Social Sciences:

> The results obtained by the tests of the army psychologists (World War I) also showed a marked superiority of northern over southern Negroes as well as a superiority of Negroes in several of the northern States over whites in several of the States of the South. The argument that these facts can be explained on the basis of a selective migration of the most intelligent Negroes from the South to the North and that the change on environment is therefore not responsible for the difference between the two groups has been refuted by recent studies at Columbia University, which have failed to reveal any selective factor of this kind and have, on the other hand, demonstrated a definite tendency for the test scores of Negro children to improve proportionately to the length of time they have lived in the more favorable environment.[1]

The record is clear, Mr. Speaker, despite the momentary efforts which are made to stress the backward stage of Negro social comportment as compared to the whites—the record is clear that great progress is being made toward diminishing the grounds for unfavorable comparisons of Negroes to whites. Many Members from the South have proudly indicated the attention which their States have given to raising the level of education, health care and housing for their Negro population. Surely these efforts are being made not simply out of a legalistic regard for the requirements of the "equal protection of the laws" phrase in the 14th amendment, but more importantly because the people of these States recognize that the present differences found between the white and black populations are socially conditioned and they wish to ameliorate these conditions for the mutual advantage of all. They may differ quite strenuously with some of us over the question of the rate at which social improvements for the Negroes can or should be made, but their attempts at improving Negro education and housing are hardly consistent with any present theory that the present differences between the races "cannot be changed by the hand of man." The suggestion that differences between groups in the rate of crimes, or level of intelligence are inevitably fixed is surely not taken seriously.

Before the storm blew in which we are presently experiencing over the Supreme Court's decision concerning segregation in the schools, a number of studies were made in States with heavy Negro populations into the same question which I have been discussing. In Jacksonville, Fla., for example, a biracial survey committee of the Council of Social Agencies made a study of the city's Negro community in 1946. They found that, with respect to crime, the Negroes committed relatively more offenses than the whites and were sentenced to prison in relatively greater number. The report went on to say, however, that—

> It is well to point out that students of crime are almost unanimous in their conclusion that race as such has very little, if anything, to do with the actual amount of crime committed. Rather they attribute the excess of criminality in certain groups to such factors as economic conditions, health, and housing, community environment, the administration of justice, and attitudes toward law enforcement.[2]

I am sure that reasonable people recognize the sense of those findings. They are the fruits of modern education, for all to pick who are willing. If such statements by the Council of Social Agencies in a fine southern city constitutes "brainwashing," then the House Committee on which I serve should be renamed, the Committee on Brainwashing and Labor.

A similar ray of understanding was cast by a study published by the University of Virginia in 1934, entitled "Negro Crime in a Small Urban Community," namely, Charlottesville, Va.

Professor Lightfoot, of the Textile Industrial Institute in Spartanburg, S. C.,

reached the following conclusion in his study:

> The effect of unfavorable environment in producing delinquency is particularly well illustrated in all of the case studies. In fact, suggestions all through this study point to the conclusion that Negroes who get into difficulties do so in large part as a result of defective environment—that is, their physical surroundings, their economic standing, and their treatment by the white people—rather than through any inborn racial characteristics.[3]

This same point is borne out most clearly in a statement made by Solicitor Basil Whitener, of Charlotte, N. C., a few years ago:

> I have had but one major case to come out of Fairview Homes, the public housing project for Negroes, since I've been solicitor. But I can't count the number which have originated in the poverty- and disease-ridden sections of the city. The same thing is true regarding white people. Aside from the natural differences to be expected because of advanced progress in civilization of the white man, I'd say the crime rate is comparable in slum areas of both races. There are just more Negro slums.[4]

Is not this the point, after all, Mr. Speaker? "There are just more Negro slums." And these slums exist in northern cities as well as southern communities, in my own State of New Jersey, as well as in the District of Columbia. There are also slums of the mind for Negroes as well as slum neighborhoods. A tremendous job of slum clearance must be done in the fields of education, housing, and health. The task is being tackled strenuously in many areas of the country, because people believe that the present differences between the Negroes and white population are heavily conditioned by environment. It is no service to any of us to have the so-called racial differences stressed without mentioning the remedies which are being successfully applied.

Right here in the District of Columbia tremendous advances in the economic and educational standing of the Negro population have been taking place during recent decades, even while a heavy Negro immigration has been under way from areas with less opportunities for Negroes than exist here. Whatever frictions of adjustment to the integration of the schools may be publicized by the forthcoming study of that subject by the Committee on the District of Columbia there is no blinking the fact that despite heavy migration from the outside the Negro in this city has been steadily making himself a more useful and respectable citizen. For example the percentage of Negro females who are clerical workers in the District has increased from 3 percent of the total in 1940 to 23 percent in 1950, and Negro males increased their participation in this type of work from 9 percent to 17 percent in 1950. The proportion of all Negro males in other occupations has remained relatively constant, except, that a smaller proportion are now engaged as laborers. The median number of school years completed by Negroes in the District increased from about 7.9 years in 1940 to 8.9 in 1950, and by 1960 we should see the figure far closer to the level of the white population than it has ever been before. The Negroes of this city have more than doubled the number of homes they own since 1930, and the median value of these homes has increased 19 percent more than the median value of homes occupied by white owners during this period.

It is clear that where the opportunities are extended, the Negro is seizing them to improve his economic standing, and he is thereby helping to overcome the differences between his group and white people which can be so easily but so shortsightedly attributed to race. This is the social fact which deserves emphasis, in my mind, because from a recognition of this situation flows the courage, the patience and the compassion required to push forward the work of slum clearance in all its aspects, on the one hand, and the generation of tolerance and respect on the other.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, following the legislative program of the day and any special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask my friend from California, or ask anyone who can tell me, when we are going to adjourn, so that I may know the proper time to be here for that speech.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I trust that we shall adjourn fairly early. I trust I may have the chance to address the House, and if not, I shall ask permission to extend my remarks at that point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes tomorrow, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to be here when the gentlewoman speaks, but I want to know now, if I may, what her remarks may be about so I may do a little research work on the same subject.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I will be talking about veterans' legislation. May I say to the gentleman that he has been extremely helpful in securing veterans' legislation.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I certainly thank the gentlewoman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent heretofore granted I was given the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD immediately before the passage of the atomic-energy omnibus amendment bill presented by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY]. I ask unanimous consent to include with my remarks at that point some editorials which appeared recently in the Saturday Evening Post, and some extraneous articles from newspapers pertaining to the remarks which I shall make.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

STASSEN AND HIS TEAM PLAY

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it may be assumed that many are interested in the political situation which confronts the Republican Party at the moment.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Is the gentleman addressing the House?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I am trying to address the Speaker, because I think the Speaker is more interested than the gentleman. I see my friend from New Jersey [Mr. TUMULTY] here. I know he is interested in the same situation, which intrigues me, so if you gentlemen will come down here to the front we can discuss the matter face to face. Thank you all.

This is the incident which has been bothering me.

For some time I have been endeavoring to learn the source of and the reason for the opposition to our former colleague, the Honorable RICHARD NIXON. I have inquired of my constituents when I have been home. I have read the papers. I have consulted my colleagues. I have asked the Library of Congress, the Research Department, to see if they could learn just what was back of this opposition to DICK NIXON. I was unable to get any satisfactory answer or, in fact, any answer at all except from some Democratic politicians who said that he was altogether too severe in what he had to say about the Democrats and their political philosophy.

I do not know that he ever said anything very bad about them. I thought that at times he had been rather weak in his statements and in criticism. Then, just yesterday it was, some of my colleagues on the Republican side took me aside and said, "Why are you fussing around, trying to find the reason for the opposition to the Vice President. We can tell you." I said, "Well, all right, that is fine. Why did Stassen do that—being a member of the Eisenhower family, the official family and on the team?" Why did he publicly state that with NIXON on the ticket we would get less votes than with some other candidate?

If he has any political sense at all he knows better." I do not think he is the quarterback on Ike's team, but I know he is a big fellow and thinks the world of himself and might, maybe, in his conceit, think he was getting his orders direct from the White House. Well, they said, "That is not so. There is a group in New York—not New Jersey, but in New York who have plenty of money and very able, adroit, skilfull—let us put it—lawyers—also some people in the banks and big money outfits who make large loans, do big business with nations and groups abroad. The lawyers get big fees and the bankers get a whale of a big commission or slice and the big Wall Street moneychangers, out of the billions floating around in our dealings with other countries." As I understand it, under the Roosevelt administration which it was said was to drive the moneychangers out of Washington, the drive was not wholly successful. They did not get clear out of the country—they stopped over in New York—they crossed to New Jersey. It would not harbor them.

Mr. TUMULTY. No, they are in the Republican Party now, as I understand it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That is right. The big money boys that are Stassen backers are in the Republican Party, or so they claim, they claim they are now reformed, honest, and decent. But in my opinion they are what they have always been—money grabbers—lacking in patriotism, thinking and acting only for their own selfish interests. I congratulate you people over there in Jersey for denying them sanctuary. In any event, they hang out in New York City at the moment. Stassen got in with those gentlemen and the more foreign aid they could get—the aid did not go across—the dollars stayed here but they would send some junk that they picked up from Chicago, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia—none in New Jersey—they picked up this junk for those good dollars that the Congress appropriated and sent it over there. And Stassen was working for that group on a sort of a 50–50 basis.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. That is where they picked Stassen up, going through Philadelphia when he was president of the University of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. They made a mistake in getting him. He will do their dirty work—but he is so obsessed with his idea—his conviction of his own importance that he will doublecross them at the first opportunity.

Mr. TUMULTY. We were glad to give him to them. I wonder whether Stassen was a part of the junk they picked up?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. No; wait a minute. I made a couple of talks here a few years ago about the gentleman. He was not described as good junk. I never even received a congratulatory message or any message from him at all on either. He did not thank me or publicly approve of it.

Now, this other group is an entirely different group. This gentleman said to me, "You know that drive against NIXON originates in New York. He is just too intelligent, too aggressive, too honest for them. Those boys are furnishing the money with this other group of moneyed men." I said, "Well, who are they?" He said, "Well, they are the friends of those Rosenberg spies who were convicted and executed. He said they blame NIXON for starting that drive against the Commies which finally got the Rosenberg spies when he got after Hiss."

Well, if that is so, you get the picture and now you see the artists who drew it. The big money for the Stassen drive comes out of New York, and you learn that the friends of the Commies are hooked up with the other outfit. It looks as if that is the kind of a drive that Stassen is putting on. But it looks to me as though if he will just publicize the source of his financial aid and the real names of his scrubs and Red backers and let the people of the country know that DICK NIXON is being opposed by these money changers and being opposed by friends of the Rosenbergs, not only will NIXON not lose any 6 percent of the vote—and I admire the Governor of Massachusetts, as we all do—we served with him, and we know he is a wonderful, fine man, a lieutenant of Hoover, who distributed food after World War I. NIXON will get a far larger vote than would any other candidate for Vice President. Stassen is just thinking about Stassen.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Are these friends of the Rosenbergs who are in New York the money changers, in your opinion?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. No, there are two distinct groups. The lawyers and the big bankers, the money chasers whose god is the dollar. You see, they are just one group. That group, on the one side, which handle these international funds. Out of which they get millions and for the appropriation of which Stassen is partly responsible.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. And the other ones are the friends of the Rosenbergs?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Yes. And the friends and backers—the supporters of any and all Commies.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. And in the gentleman's estimation——

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I do not know. I am just repeating gossip which seems to be all too true. Perhaps I should not, but it comes from a source that is reliable and is quite in line with the Commies' procedure.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. The gossip that the gentleman heard is that these people within the two groups are the people who were supporting Stassen in his opposition to our former colleague, Mr. NIXON.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That is the situation. Stassen is working for Stassen, using his pretended opposition against NIXON for his own advancement. But he gets his money from the source indicated and is being used by those who supported the Rosenberg spies and others of that disloyal group.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. The gentleman will concede that he is not advancing very rapidly.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Who, Stassen?

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, I saw a cartoon, I do not know whether it was in the Washington Star or the Chicago Tribune I think it was, where he was hanging on to this something coming from the ceiling—on a rope. It was not around his neck but he had hold of it and he was going all right. But the rope broke and he was going down—down through the floor and into the cellar.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Stassen?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Yes; Stassen was going down—down to the bottom—on his bottom.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. He was Stassenated.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. What is that—Stassenated? Yes; I think that was the idea.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. He was Stassenated.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, I do not think that was all that he deserved. I think he should have something worse than that done to him but that would do for a starter. Stassen does not care anything about that good and great Governor of Massachusetts, Chris Herter. Stassen is just promoting Stassen and aiding his Red international backers.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. The rules prohibit discussing exactly what he may have deserved in the estimation of those who think highly of Mr. NIXON.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, we all think highly of Mr. NIXON. I know on your side you are all unanimous in your high regard for him; very much like it was today here with our friend from Massachusetts, Mr. Nicholson—you all loved him and praised but some voted against him. I assume you all respect and admire NIXON. I know you do but some of you of course will vote for your own candidate come November—and with that no one will complain.

If you put up a ticket after Eisenhower is through his next term—which will be around 1960—of NIXON and KENNEDY, if I am around—and I do not expect to be—I will vote for both on that ticket NIXON and KENNEDY. That would make a wonderful ticket of outstanding, patriotic young Americans.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. The gentleman says our distinguished former colleague, the Senator from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, is a distinguished and fine representative of the American people and is worthy to be on anyone's ticket?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. You have it right so far as you have gone—but you might well have said much more in his praise. Having served 6 years with him on the Committee on Education and Labor I cannot do otherwise than agree with you. He certainly is an outstanding, able, sincere young man, and I am sure will be deemed qualified and deserving by the people of this country in time to come for any office he may seek, but I hope that he has a switch in his party convictions. It would be a wonderful ticket, NIXON and KENNEDY, or KENNEDY and NIXON.

But I am not trying to take over Stassen's role of suggesting anyone as a candidate. You know how it is, somebody comes along and suggests something to you and you think you thought of it and then you find you did not, but I wanted to pretend I did, and I think there is something to this idea of the dollar worshipers and Reds backing Stassen in the effort to keep NIXON whom they fear off the Republican ticket.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Does the gentleman think the Scripps Howard paper may have had any support of Stassen's move against our former colleague, the distinguished Vice President, Mr. NIXON?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I never had any support from any national newspaper that I know of. I know, having been here a couple of years I am supposed to know everything; as a matter of fact I know nothing at all of the newspaper business.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. The basis of my question is that they apparently had some advance information and perhaps fostered this a little with the New York crowd the gentleman mentioned.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Scripps-Howard?

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I do not know about that. But they have been against the Reds always. I would not want to say anything about Scripps-Howard papers because I do not know. Have no idea of their political policy.

Mr. TUMULTY. It seems to me that Stassen by his move has demonstrated lack of judgment and lack of regard for his leader. It seems to me he has shown lack of party loyalty.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Where does the gentleman get the idea that Stassen was ever loyal to any party? To any idea?

Mr. TUMULTY. I never got that idea; I was just making the observation.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Is not that expecting too much of Mr. Stassen—that is that he be loyal to anyone, to anything other than to his own selfish ideas, if he is a member of Ike's team he is throwing his passes the wrong way.

Mr. TUMULTY. We all expect a lot of everyone, but I was speaking by and large.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. You were what?

Mr. TUMULTY. Speaking by and large of the Republican Party itself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that if the gentleman wants it he be given 5 additional minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Pardon me, Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman want me to take the 5 minutes and then yield it to him? I would be glad to do so.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. I was just enjoying this colloquy so much.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. You and I are two at least. I do not wish to longer delay adjournment.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. BURLESON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 1420. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Herman E. Mosley, as natural parents of Herman E. Mosley, Jr.;

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Reimbursement of the State of California

OF
HON. CECIL R. KING
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. KING of California. Mr. Speaker, I submit for inclusion in the RECORD, under leave to extend my remarks, extracts from House and Senate Reports, 74th Congress; the report on June 8, 1955, of the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Claims, and a statement prepared by me on May 3, 1955, all relating to H. R. 5253, relating to the claims of the State of California.

The matters follow:

[From CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Daily Digest, vol. 101, pt. 12, p. 377]

"Claims: Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, Subcommittee No. 2 ordered reported to the full committee H. R. 5253, amended, for the relief of the State of California."

Following is the favorable report on the bill, H. R. 5253, providing for the payment for the sum found by the Court of Claims to have been expended by the State of California, as determined by that court pursuant to the Knowland Act of September 25, 1950 (64 Stat. 1032):

"H. R. 5253

"A bill for the relief of the State of California

"This bill was introduced by Congressman CECIL KING, of California, and provides that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the State of California, a sum equal to the aggregate amount of money expended by such State as reported in findings Nos. 24, 31, 33, 35, 36, 38, and 40 of the commissioner's report to the Court of Claims, filed May 28, 1953, No. 49912. Such sum shall be in full satisfaction of the claim of the State of California for reimbursement for all expenses incurred by such State in maintaining its militia and in recruiting, equipping, and supporting voluntary forces for the national defense during the War Between the States, including expenses resulting from indebtedness incurred for such purposes.

"In 1861 Congress passed an act authorizing the payment of the claim, but the Government contended that under the Chase (then Secretary of the Treasury) regulations, which the act did not set aside or waive, the law in regard to interest could not be complied with.

"Here the matter has rested ever since. The amount expended by the State of California at the request of the United States Government has never been in dispute; nor has it ever been contended that this claim was not the obligation of the United States, under the wording of the appeal made to California by President Lincoln.

"Finally Congress passed an act, Public Law 834, in the 81st Congress, 2d session, conferring on the Court of Claims jurisdiction to make findings of fact, waiving the Statute of Limitations. The Court of Claims gave judgment for a part of the claim, but found that in its judgment, under the Chase regulations, some claims for interest were not reimbursable.

"The court did find and make the following conclusions in the report of the commissioner filed May 28, 1953 (No. 49912):

"'MILITIA EXPENDITURES

"'24. Under the direction and superintendence of certain high ranking officials of the California militia, the State expended pursuant to the foregoing statutes the sum of $468,976.54 on account of its militia forces, itemized as follows:

Equipment	$179,000.00
Subsistence	37,075.47
Transportation	63,589.97
Supplies	64,805.78
Incidental expenses	8,779.16
Drill expenses	70,251.15
Organizational expenses	6,778.61
Pay of militia:
State staff officers	7,063.82
Militia generally	30,902.58
Band	730.00
	38,696.40
Total	468,976.54

"'Of the total sum of $179,000 expended on equipping the militia, $70,140 was for uniforms and cavalry equipment with an additional $32,511.25 for like purposes, and the balance of $76,348.75 was applied to purposes which are not disclosed in the record.

"'The commanding general of the Department of the Pacific, United States Army, consulted with and advised the governor and members of the California legislature, and at all times promoted and encouraged the reorganization and strengthening of the California militia, but it is not shown that he or any other official of the United States requested or demanded the course of action taken with respect to the militia, or directed, superintended, or conducted the program.

"'EXTRA PAY TO VOLUNTEERS

"'31. Pursuant to said acts, the State of California expended the principal amount of $1,459,270.21 as extra pay to the California volunteers for their services in the United States Army. In addition, California expended $3,000 to print the relief or extra pay bonds.

" 'BOUNTY PAYMENTS TO VOLUNTEERS

" '33. The bounty payments made by the State of California pursuant to said act, amounted to the principal sum of $900,839.50.

" 'RECRUITING EXPENSES—VOLUNTEERS

" '34. By an act approved April 10, 1863, Statutes of California, 1863, at 246, the California Legislature appropriated the sum of $24,260 for the purpose of meeting the expenses incurred in recruiting various units of California volunteers then in process of formation. The specific sum appropriated was identified as the moneys then in the State treasury arising from the exchange of gold for legal tender notes in the payment by the State treasurer of the Federal war tax assessed against the State of California.

" 'The sum appropriated was apportioned so as to provide the commanding officer of each regiment and battalion with $898.51 for each of the companies of his command, to be distributed to defray recruiting expenses in the proportion of $498.51 to each captain, and $200 to each lieutenant. It was provided that the recruiting officers would produce vouchers for necessary traveling expenses, for subsistence of their recruits previous to being forwarded to the general rendezvous, and for all other necessary incidental expenses.

" 'The entire sum was distributed by the State treasurer to the various commanding officers of the regiments and battalions. A complete set of vouchers with respect to expenditures made by various recruiting officers was filed by only one of the commanding officers, whose regiment received $8,985.15 under the act. The record in this case also indicates that some other company officers of a battalion filed proper vouchers, but the amount of their expenditures is not shown.

" 'Except for the sum of $8,985.15, there is no satisfactory evidence that the sum appropriated was properly expended by the recruiting officers.

" 'PAY OF VOLUNTEER OFFICERS

" '35. Under United States War Department regulations the pay of line officers, including those in the California volunteers, commenced as follows: (a) Captains and second lieutenants from the date the company was raised to the full minimum number, or when mustered in by special order; and (b) first lieutenants from date the company was raised to one-half the minimum number. In paying line officers, these rules were applied by the United States without exception.

" 'In California, officers commissioned by the State of California, who were engaged in raising volunteer troops, had difficulty bringing the enrollment to the mustering-in strength. As a consequence, their Federal pay did not commence until considerable time and effort had already been expended by them. To compensate their officers for such premustering services California enacted the act approved April 4, 1884, Statutes of California, 1863–64, at 424, the preamble of which provided:

" ' "Whereas the burden of raising the Volunteer Companies of this State for the service of the United States is borne principally by the captains and lieutenants of those companies, after having been examined and accepted by a board of Army officers, and after receiving their commissions from the State; and

" ' "Whereas the said officers receive no pay for their services until they are declared mustered into the service of the United States, which with a first lieutenant, is when his company is raised to one half the minimum number, and with a captain and second lieutenant, [fol. 91] when the company is raised to the full minimum number, or when it is mustered in by a special order; and

" ' "Whereas, owing to the tardy manner in which volunteering has progressed under the governor's call for volunteers of February 5, 1863, the officers of the companies called for have been subjected to great expense in raising their companies, in some cases having been compelled to abandon the enterprise in order to procure the means to subsist themselves and their families."

" 'This act set up the line officers' relief fund. It provided for the payment from the fund to the line officers of the California volunteers the same pay and allowances as received by the regular United States Army officers of the same grade for the period from the time the volunteer officers received their commissions to the time of their muster into the Federal service. The act further provided that there was to be deducted from the amount thus computed any amounts received by such officers during the abovementioned period, either from the Federal Government for services or from the State under provisions of the act of April 10, 1863. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act, the sum of $65,000 was appropriated, and it was further authorized that bonds in this amount be issued, bearing interest at 7 percent per annum, redeemable July 1, 1874.

" 'Pursuant to this act, California paid $23,277.34 to its volunteer line officers to compensate them for services performed prior to their induction into the Federal forces, and for which they were not and could not be compensated under the War Department regulations.

" 'CALIFORNIA ADJUTANT GENERAL'S EXPENSES

" '36. By an act approved April 25, 1855, Statutes of California, 1855, at 136, concerning the State militia, the California legislature provided that the State adjutant general was quartermaster general and inspector general, and was charged with the protection and issuance of all arms and property, to receive and keep reports and records, and to make an annual report. His salary was fixed at $3,000 per year.

" 'By the act approved April 24, 1862, heretofore referred to in finding No. 18, the organization and function of the (fol. 92) State militia were more broadly defined. The adjutant general was designated to serve as ex officio chief of staff, quartermaster general, commissary general, inspector general, and chief of ordnance. His salary was continued at $3,000 per year.

" 'The regular staff of the adjutant general had consisted of 1 assistant and 1 clerk. During the war years his office was responsible for the payment of bounties and extra pay and his clerical help was considerably increased.

" 'The California expenditures for its adjutant general during the period from April 15, 1861, to August 20, 1866, amounted to $14,850.05 for the salary of the adjutant general, and $23,233.12 as wages of clerks and porters, or a total of $38,083.17.

" 'In addition, the sum of $2,639.34 was expended for rental of office space for the adjutant general during that period.

" 'After the war the adjutant general's office continued to administer the affairs of the militia which later became the National Guard.

" 'INTEREST PAID ON EXTRA PAY AND BOUNTY INDEBTEDNESS

" '38. The interest paid by the State of California between April 27, 1863, and July 1, 1889, on the original relief (extra pay) and bounty bonds, issued pursuant to the California acts of April 27, 1863, and April 4, 1864, to the date of their redemption or conversion at times prior to July 1, 1889, amounted to $302,364.60 on the relief bonds, and $366,206.26 on the bounty bonds, or a total of $668,570.86.

" 'By an act approved April 2, 1870, Statutes of California, 1869–70, at 646, the California legislature authorized the issuance of bonds known as the State funded debt bonds of 1873, to bear interest at the reduced rate of 6 percent per annum, for the purpose of liquidating and refinancing the funded indebtedness of the State. Pursuant to said act, and on January 2, 1873, various new bonds were exchanged for relief bonds to the extent of $239,500, and for bounty [fol. 93] bonds to the extent of $605,000. Thereafter and until July 1, 1889, the State of California paid interest on such new bonds in the sum of $233,025 on the converted relief indebtedness and in the amount of $598,950 on the converted bounty indebtedness or a total of $831,975.

" 'The total interest payments to July 1, 1889, on the relief and bounty indebtedness amounted to the sum of $1,500,545.86.

" 'After July 1, 1889, and until July 2, 1945, when all of the State funded debt bonds of 1873 were redeemed, the State of California paid interest on the new bonds issued in exchange for the original relief and bounty bonds, to the extent of $789,693.34 on the relief indebtedness, and in the sum of $2,032,900.85 on the bounty indebtedness, or a total of $2,822,594.19.

" 'The total interest paid by the State of California on all bonds covering the indebtedness incurred to finance the extra pay and bounty payments amounted to $4,323,140.05.

" 'CLAIMED DISCOUNT LOSSES ON BONDS

" '40. The State of California sustained net losses in the sum of $318,022 in the way of discounts on the sales of the original relief and bounty bonds because of stringent economic conditions during that period, and by reason of the premium of 7 percent allowed on the State funded debt bonds of 1873, which were exchanged for the old bonds. This net loss is established as follows:

	Relief bonds	Bounty bonds	Totals
" 'Discount on bond sales	$87,400	$175,160	$262,560
Less: Discount earned on redemptions	3,653		3,653
Net discount expense	83,747	175,160	258,907
Add: Seven percent increase in par value of State Funded Debt Bonds of 1873, exchanged for relief and bounty bonds and redeemed at par value	16,765	42,350	59,115
Total loss on discounts and additional cost of redemption of bonds exchanged for relief and bounty bonds	100,512	217,510	318,022'

"Totaling the amounts found due the State of California from the findings of fact set forth above, we find the amount due the State of California to be $7,537,248.15.

"No claim is made to moneys under finding 34 of the Court of Claims and hence the bill should be amended to eliminate that from the bill.

"This matter has been fully before the Court of Claims with a complete history of it from the beginning. It was sent to the Court of Claims for the express purpose of finding out what was due, and it would seem that we have no special duty to perform except to authorize an appropriation to pay the claim.

"Respectfully submitted.

"USHER L. BURDICK, M. C."

[74th Cong., 1st sess.; House of Representatives; Report No. 1162]

REIMBURSEMENT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA

(June 10, 1935, committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed)

Mr. HOEPPEL, from the Committee on War Claims, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 1932):

"The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1932) for the relief of the State of California, after a hearing and careful consideration, report the bill back with an amendment and, as amended, recommend that the bill do pass.

"The State of California made large expenditures in aid of the Federal Government during the War Between the States under the act of July 27, 1861, which act in general terms invited and encouraged the States to contribute their own funds for purposes of national defense and promised reimbursement thereof.

* * * * *

"The records further show that California was prompt in complying with the call made upon the State by the National Government and furnished all the financial and material aid in its power to help the Government in the common defense. * * *

* * * * *

"A bill on all fours with the California case was passed by Congress and approved by the President in the 70th Congress to reimburse the State of Nevada. Nevada's war expenditures were made under exactly similar authority and circumstances, and on the recommendation of the Commanding General of the Pacific, as were those of California. The exigencies impelling the Legislature of Nevada to pass acts authorizing such expenditures were identical. Even the acts of her legislature were copied after those enacted by the Legislature of California. The considerations in the one case cannot be differentiated from the same consideration in the other. California should be reimbursed for the same reasons that Nevada was repaid.

"All States other than California incurring expenditures for national defense have been reimbursed by the United States, principal and interest, under general and special acts of Congress. * * *

* * * * *

"The total loss suffered by the State of California on account of the discount at which the orignal bonds were sold and on account of the discount at which new bonds were given in exchange for the old amounted to the sum of $318,027, which sum should undoubtedly also be reimbursed the State of California under the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury in the Pennsylvania case hereinafter referred to, but which has not been taken into the account by the Comptroller General in the accounting rendered August 14, 1930.

* * * * *

"The Secretary of the Treasury issued certain rules for the preparation and settlement by the Treasury Department under the acts of Congress approved July 17, 1861, and July 27, 1861, of claims for reimbursement of expenses properly incurred by the States, respectively, on account of their troops 'employed in aiding to suppress the present insurrection against the United States.' These rules are divided into nine sections. Section 8 of these rules reads as follows:

" 'Bounties or donations to men or their families to induce men to volunteer will not be recognized. Such bounties as may be authorized by law will be paid by the United States directly to the men authorized to receive them. Voluntary contributions, either by State or local corporations, or by individuals, in aid of families of volunteers, etc., constitute no charge against the United States, and will not be refunded.'

* * * * *

"The expenditures which were made by the State of California in order to compensate its volunteers for the depreciation of the currency, as it affected their rate of pay, could not be considered a wasteful expenditure of public funds, nor was it a bounty in any proper sense, but was, as the Army board reported, 'to do a plain act of justice.'

* * * * *

"Had it not been for this particular paragraph 8 of the so-called Chase regulations, so narrowly interpreted, the legislation enacted by Congress on July 27, 1861, would have been sufficient long ago to have enabled the Secretary of the Treasury to have settled the requests for reimbursement on behalf of the State of California.

* * * * *

"It is only upon such a technicality presented under the so-called Chase regulations, narrowing and limiting the plain intent of the act of 1861, that up to the present the State of California remains unreimbursed.

"CONGRESS DECLARES EXPENDITURES VALID

"However, Congress after many years of consideration of the expenditures as made acknowledged the merit, justice, and validity of such expenditures and thus swept aside this technical construction of the act of 1861 under the Chase regulations which the Army officers themselves stated were unjust and inequitable to apply thereto. * * *

* * * * *

"PRECEDENT

"No other State in the Union, with the possible exception of Oregon and Nevada, had to contend with such extreme, abnormal conditions during the period of the Civil War as California had to contend with; and for that reason the reimbursement of California at this time, in view of the reimbursement of Nevada during the 70th Congress, should create no apprehension as to establishing a precedent. * * *

* * * * *

"The failure to reimburse California at that time was solely due to the narrow construction of the act of 1861 by the Treasury officials made under circumstances described by Comptroller Gilkeson in his report to the Secretary of the Treasury under date of November 21, 1892 (embodied in the Secretary's annual report to Congress), as follows:

" 'The National Treasury was empty. He (Secretary Chase) was expected to devise ways and means to carry on the war and to defray the expenses. He knew that it was only by practicing the greatest economy that he could succeed. * * * It is not strange, therefore, that at that time he put a construction on this statute now regarded as a narrow one. * * * None of the conditions that surrounded Secretary Chase pertain today. It is the duty of those who control affairs to see to it that no wrong shall be done to the loyal States whose people so nobly sustained the Government.' "

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 3, 1955.

RE H. R. 5253 (84TH CONG.) INTRODUCED MARCH 28, 1955, BY REPRESENTATIVE KING, OF CALIFORNIA

Under this bill California will be paid for claims she has proved in the Court of Claims under Public Law 834, a jurisdictional act approved September 25, 1950, for moneys advanced and expenditures made at the request of the Federal Government, in aid of the United States during the Civil War.

Senate Report No. 2446 and House Report No. 2696, 81st Congress, state:

"All States, except California have been reimbursed for moneys actually expended for costs, charges, and expenses in enrolling, equipping, transporting and paying volunteer troops during that war.

"Bills for direct reimbursement [all sponsored by Senator Hiram Johnson] have passed the Senate 9 times.

"All States other than California incurring expenses for national defense have been reimbursed by the United States, principal and interest, under general and special acts of Congress."

The House Committee on Wars Claims (now a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee) approved the California claims unanimously (H. Rept. No. 1162, 74th Cong.). Representative CELLER (now chairman of the House Judiciary Committee) was a member of that committee; see page 63 of that report.

The Court of Claims gave judgment in March 1954 under the above 1950 act for only a small portion of the claims. It held that because of the regulations of Secretary of the Treasury Chase respecting such claims, certain items were not reimbursable. Although the court found that California had actually advanced and expended nearly the entire amounts claimed, in aid of the Federal Government, it disregarded the following statements of both House and Senate Judiciary Committees:

"Had it not been for paragraph 8 of the so-called Chase regulations, so narrowly interpreted, the legislation enacted by Congress on July 27, 1861, would have been sufficient long ago to have enabled the Secretary of the Treasury to have settled the requests for reimbursement on behalf of the State of California."

The House and Senate committee reports each stated that in 1929 Nevada was reimbursed for expenditures "made under exactly similar circumstances," and that Nevada was "finally reimbursed for all these military expenditures and for the interest paid on money that was borrowed for the purpose of meeting such expenditures."

CONCLUSION

1. California's claims have been approved nine times by the Senate;

2. The House committee has reported favorably on these claims;

3. The Court of Claims has found that California advanced and expended the money at the request of the Federal Government;

4. A special Army board created by Congress has also found and reported to Congress that "the money was actually expended by the State" and approved the reasonableness of and the necessity therefor;

5. The Comptroller General has certified the aggregate expenditures as "the balance found due" to the State; and

6. Previous Congresses conducted no less than seven investigations into the merits of the claim and have reported their findings in the Senate and House reports.

Under H. R. 5253, California will receive back the money admittedly owing to her for so many years. Passage of the bill will remove the necessity of further action by Congress to amend the jurisdictional act of 1950 to require additional litigation and further delay in payment of the claim described on the Senate floor "as sacred an obligation, in my judgment, as the national bonds."

The Governors of California, its attorneys general, State treasurer, secretary of state, and State collector have urged Congress to enact this legislation.

Shabby Treatment of Our Federal Retirees

OF

HON. THOMAS M. PELLY

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. PELLY. Mr. Speaker, the closing hours of this 84th Congress are upon us, and I am compelled to express my indignation at the apathy of this Congress in connection with the shabby treatment accorded our Federal retirees. These former civil servants are entitled to better treatment at the hands of their Government. Some twenty-odd bills were introduced by various Members of this House, including my own H. R. 11334, designed to grant some measure of economic relief to this group. The House committee has failed to consider any of these measures. Anyone who has given this problem even a cursory examination will agree that the present pensions are grossly inadequate and completely out of line with the present cost of living index.

H. R. 11178, introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHLEY], is the bill most frequently mentioned by interested constituents of mine. It is indeed tragic that the distinguished Members of this House were not given the opportunity of acting on this or similar legislation such as S. 3725, the Senate-passed version which rests at this moment on the Speaker's desk. The economic objections raised against this legislation leave me cold. Since when have we placed a price on the welfare of our people? We lavish money all over the world to raise the standard of living of other nations in the interest of making the world safe for democracy. Yet the needs of the Federal retirees of our own land are ignored. What consistency is there in a policy that is parsimonious on the one hand, and profligate on the other? It is not my purpose to quarrel with the principle of fighting the cold war with dollars rather than lives, but it is a sad state of affairs when retired civil servants who have served their government long and well are denied an annuity that will provide something more than a mere existence.

I would like to serve notice here and now that if I am returned as a Member of the 85th Congress it is my intention to reintroduce this legislation and work for its passage with all the resources at my command, in order to bring about fair and equitable annuities for these deserving people.

Recodification of Retailers' Excise Taxes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RICHARD M. SIMPSON
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced H. R. 12421 providing for a complete recodification of that portion of chapter 31 of subtitle D of the Internal Revenue Code which imposes retailers' excise taxes on jewelry, furs, toilet preparations, and luggage.

These retail sales taxes, duplicating those imposed by a majority of the States, were originally enacted as temporary taxes under wartime conditions. The continued encroachment by the Federal Government upon this major source of State tax revenues is tolerable only so long as the defense needs of the Government continue at their present high levels.

Until such time as reduced Government expenditures or replacement revenue sources permit the total elimination of these retail sales taxes, a complete recodification of the law is required, first, to relieve consumers of the burden of a 10 percent luxury excise tax on articles of everyday usage and necessity; and, second, to eliminate a long list of competitive inequities and compliance problems among the several hundred thousand retailers burdened with the duty of collecting these taxes.

The principal articles which would be relieved of the present 10 percent taxes under the bill are:

Silver-plated tableware.

All jewelry, clocks, watches, and related articles sold at retail for $5 or less.

All fur or fur-trimmed articles other than capes, coats, jackets, scarves, stoles, wraps, and similar garments.

Antiperspirants, deodorants, sunburn preventives, petroleum jellies, and aromatic cachous.

Handbags, wallets, key cases, and luggage sold at retail for $5 or less.

The enactment of H. R. 12421 will not result in a significant loss of revenue to the Government. While the exemptions provided under the bill for nonluxury articles of everyday usage and necessity will mean a tax savings to consumers of as much as $50 million annually, most, if not all, of this apparent revenue loss will be recouped through improved compliance and enforcement made possible by the adoption of a more equitable and certain statute.

In introducing H. R. 12421 at this time, I am hopeful that taxpayers will exercise the opportunity to study its provisions carefully and that the Ways and Means Subcommittee on Excise Tax policy will find it convenient and desirable to schedule public hearings upon it at an early date.

Lebanon Celebrates Its 13th Anniversary of Independence November 22, 1956

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ADAM C. POWELL, JR.
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, when I came back from the Bandung Conference I announced that I would address the United States Congress each time there was an anniversary of one of the 29 participating nations in the Asian-African Conference on friendly relations with the United States.

Inasmuch as the Congress will not be in session at the time of the event, I wish to take this opportunity to extend my sincere felicitations to the people of Lebanon, President Camille Shamun, and His Excellency, Dr. Charles Malik, Ambassador of Lebanon, on the occasion of the 13th anniversary of independence of Lebanon, November 22, 1956.

After having heroically opposed in different epochs numerous invasions, the Lebanese still stand firm for their freedom and independence. With varying fortunes they maintained the high spirit of liberty. Like some of its neighbors, according to the peace settlements of the First World War, Lebanon was incorporated into the mandate system. The ensuing years until 1943 witnessed many attempts on the part of Lebanon to wrest itself from the jaws of quasi-colonialism. When the British and Free French drove out the Vichy French Government in 1941 they both declared the independence of Lebanon. In the summer of 1943 free popular elections were held resulting in a constitutional parliament, which elected His Excellency, Bechara El-Khoury, President of the Republic of Lebanon.

In 1944 and 1945 a score of powers recognized Lebanon's independence. In February 1945, Lebanon declared war on Germany and Japan, and on April 12 of the same year she signed the United Nations Declaration in Washington. Two final acts completed Lebanon's launching into international life; the signing of the Pact of the League of Arab States in Cairo in March 1945 and Lebanon's full participation as a sovereign and independent state in the United Nations Conference on International Organization at San Francisco. Lebanon has openly avowed that she intends to play her full part in the international field as a free and independent member of the Arab League.

Grave crises have arisen to plague the new government, but these occasions of friction have had the effect of strengthening rather than weakening Lebanon's independence, thanks primarily to the remarkable national unity which the diverse elements of her population were able to achieve.

Although Lebanon is primarily an agricultural country, the era since the end of the war has witnessed a remarkable development of her industries. In trade and commerce, Beirut is certainly one of the main centers of the Near East. The economic importance of Tripoli is growing, owing to the fact that it is one of the two termini of the oil pipeline from Iraq.

In the words of the Lebanese Ambassador, His Excellency Charles Malik:

> The significance of Lebanon should not be sought in the material sphere. Her significance is entirely intellectual and spiritual. She is the home par excellence in the Near East of freedom of thought and conscience. The country is above 80 percent literate, and it is estimated that every year more than a quarter of her population go to school. Thousands of students flock into her institutions from all over the Near East. The influence of Lebanese thought and life and traditions and outlook upon this army of students is incalculable. It was in Lebanon that the Arabic version of the Bible was made and the Summa of Saint Thomas translated into Arabic. The modern Arab literary, social and political awakening owes its original impetus and direction to Lebanese thought. The entire moral, esthetic, and intellectual climate of the Near East is unthinkable without the agency of the Lebanese. About 1 million Lebanese live in Lebanon, 1 million in North, Central, and South America, and another million spread over the rest of the world; and wherever they go, the children of Lebanon carry with them their characteristic industry, their traditional tolerance, their spirit of adventure, their readiness to learn, and, above all, a genuine thirst for and respect for the truth.

No finer tribute could be paid to the stalwart people of Lebanon on this momentous occasion.

Tribute to Congressmen Cannon, Thomas, and Patman, Committee Chairmen

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOE L. EVINS
OF TENNESSEE
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, as the 84th Congress approaches adjournment and we reflect upon our work and service and accomplishments, I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to pay my own special tribute of regard and appreciation for the three chairmen and subcommittee chairmen of committees on which I am privileged to serve in the Congress.

It has been my good fortune and pleasure and certainly distinct privilege to be able to work with the members of the Committee on Appropriations and especially my colleagues of the two appropriation subcommittees on which I serve—namely, the Subcommittee on Public Works Appropriations and the Subcommittee on Independent Offices Appropriations. My other committee assignment is represented by membership on the Select Committee on Small Business of the House. My three committee chairmen are the Honorable CLARENCE CANNON, the gentleman from Missouri, the distinguished chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, who also serves as chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Works Appropriations; the Honorable ALBERT THOMAS, chairman of the Subcommittee on Independent Offices Appropriations, and the Honorable WRIGHT PATMAN, chairman of the Select Committee on Small Business of the House. All of these gentlemen, my chairmen, are outstanding chairmen.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], as we all know and recognize, is one of the most distinguished Members of this body. He is an able and skilled parliamentarian. He is equally outstanding as chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations. This year the appropriation bills have reached the floor of the House in advance of an earlier announced schedule. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Works Appropriations, Mr. CANNON has worked diligently and devotedly on great public works projects for all sections of our common country, analyzing budget requests and evaluating the projects commensurate with the needs of the citizens of this Nation. Chairman CANNON'S years of experience and keen understanding of government and the needs of our Nation has resulted in the outstanding work of the Appropriations Committee which has been achieved this year under his leadership. He deserves the praise and thanks and gratitude of all of the citizens of this country for the valuable and exacting service which he has rendered.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay my compliments and well-deserved tribute to my esteemed friend, Hon. ALBERT THOMAS, the distinguished Texas gentleman, chairman of the Independent Offices Subcommittee on Appropriations. All Members of this body recognize Congressman THOMAS as one of the most outstanding Members of Congress. He is esteemed, beloved, and respected. Esteemed and respected because of his fine abilities and beloved because of his genial, personable qualities—to be closely associated with and to work with AL THOMAS is a privilege and distinct honor. He has a penetrating and probing mind and devotes himself tirelessly to his duties and responsibilities. Congressman THOMAS is a leader and an able committee chairman. He knows and understands the issues thoroughly and has the ability to sift the chaff from the wheat and to achieve results. We respect and admire AL THOMAS immensely. He is deserving of the thanks of a grateful Nation for his valuable public service.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I want to pay tribute to the Honorable WRIGHT PATMAN, another distinguished Congressman from Texas, who is chairman of the Select Committee on Small Business of the House. In the person of Congressman PATMAN, the people of his district, Texas, and the Nation have an outstanding representative. As a member of the committee of which he serves as chairman, I am privileged to serve under and work with another great committee chairman, whom I am pleased to call my friend. Congressman PATMAN has rendered an outstanding service in guiding and correlating the work of this committee which has a wide jurisdiction and a multiplicity and variety of programs of public service. The diligence and zeal with which WRIGHT PATMAN has pursued his duties as chairman of this committee to fulfill the objectives of the committee should not go by this session without public recognition. WRIGHT PATMAN has a big heart and generous nature and his impulses are motivated by the highest principles of dedicated public service. The energy and drive and untiring efforts of Congressman PATMAN are admired by all. I know he is not opposed to big business but, certainly, he is devoted to small business—to serving the independent merchant and the small-business men of this Nation, whom he considers vital and essential to the well-being and progress of our free-enterprise system. Moreover, WRIGHT PATMAN is beloved because of his fine personal qualities. He is not only a great chairman, he is also a fine friend and Christian gentleman.

So, Mr. Speaker, these men, my committee chairmen, are all outstanding Members of Congress and I do not want this session to end without paying my personal respects to them. They deserve this tribute and more for the important public service which they have rendered our country.

Why Martin Dies Supports Program To Help Farms and Small Towns and Solve Our Critical Water Shortage

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MARTIN DIES
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, history teaches us that no nation can survive unless its farms and small towns are prosperous. They are the backbone of every democratic country. During the 7 years I investigated and exposed thousands of Communists, I found very few on the farms and in small towns. Almost all of them were in the big cities. As long as our farms and small towns prosper, communism can never enslave America.

Because I have realized this vital truth since I entered Congress in 1931, I have supported many programs to help our farms and small towns. Here is a partial list of these programs I helped to establish by my speeches and votes: The Agricultural Adjustment Acts of 1933 and 1938, which helped farmers obtain fair prices while establishing and improving a program to support prices and adjust supplies of major crops; the Soil Conservation Act of 1935, which established a Government program to promote soil conservation and farm productivity; Rural Electrification Act of 1936, which helped farmers obtain electrical power through rural cooperatives; Farm Credit Act of 1935, which established the Farm Credit Administration to provide low-cost loans to farmers; Hill-Burton Hospital Construction Act, which established a program of Federal-State cooperation to meet hospital needs; School Lunch Act of 1936; Home Owners Loan Corporation Act of 1933 to help homeowners save their dwellings from foreclosure; the FHA, which has financed the construction of hundreds of thousands of homes in the United States; the Federal aid for library services in rural areas; the original Social Security Act and the 1954 amendment to it, which brought in self-employed farmers for the first time and which covered many additional farm employees; farm-to-market roads and highway construction, which have done so much to help the farms and small towns of America; the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, which has provided credit to farmers unable to secure credit from other sources at reasonable rates; the drought-relief programs to aid the victims of drought; the farm programs now in operation; the Dies Agricultural Exchange Act of 1935; and many other programs too numerous to list.

These various acts have helped the people in the small towns who depend upon the farm economy for their source of income. When the farmers are prosperous, the small towns are prosperous.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to have had a part in these various programs, and I shall continue to do everything I can to insure prosperity for our farms and small towns.

Our most pressing problem is water shortage. We must adopt a comprehensive and workable plan to capture and store the water that now runs to the ocean. Our Government has some of the ablest engineers in the world. We must depend upon their expert knowledge to work out an adequate and practicable plan that will insure ample water for our farms, ranches, towns, cities, and industries. At the next session of Congress I shall make it my No. 1 job to get this program under way. Our prosperity and future growth in Texas depend upon the solution of this critical problem. Prolonged drought and water shortage have already cost our people and Government untold millions.

Temporary relief, while necessary, is no satisfactory answer. We can and we must find a permanent solution.

Dr. Benjamin Reifel, of South Dakota—American Indian of the Year

OF
HON. FRANCIS CASE
OF SOUTH DAKOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement concerning Dr. Benjamin Reifel, of South Dakota, who has been named as American Indian of the year.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR CASE OF SOUTH DAKOTA

All of South Dakota joins in congratulating Dr. Benjamin Reifel in his selection as American Indian of the Year. It is an honor richly deserved. The 1956 award to the outstanding Indian will be made August 5 as one of the highlights of American Indian Days at Sheridan, Wyo.

Dr. Reifel was born on the Rosebud Indian Reservation in South Dakota of Indian and German stock. He speaks the Sioux language and is thoroughly familiar with Indian conditions and Indian life.

His elementary education was obtained at a Rosebud Indian Reservation school and the public schools of the State. He completed his secondary education in 15 months at the South Dakota Agricultural Preparatory School. He graduated with a bachelor of science degree in agriculture from South Dakota State College in 1932.

In 1933 he entered Federal service as farm agent at Oglala, S. Dak., under the Pine Ridge Indian Agency, Bureau of Indian Affairs, in which capacity he served 2 years. From 1935 to 1941 he was given a greater responsibility as organization field agent which required traveling throughout the United States in assisting Indian tribes and bands to organize tribal and business councils.

In 1941, Dr. Reifel responded to the call of his country and entered the military service of the United States. He served through World War II and when released in 1946 had attained the rank of lieutenant colonel. Part of this service was in the European theater. He is currently a member of the Reserve Corps of the Army.

Following release from the military service Dr. Reifel returned to employment with the Bureau of Indian Affairs as tribal relations officer with headquarters at Billings, Mont.

After a short term as tribal relations officer he was appointed superintendent of the Fort Berthold Reservation in North Dakota. After 3 years of service in that capacity he resigned to enter Harvard University where he completed his work for a doctorate at public administration. During this period he was awarded a John Hay Whitney fellowship. So far as I know he is the only Indian in the United States holding a doctor's degree in public administration, or for that matter in any other field.

After completing his work at Harvard he returned to North Dakota to resume the superintendency at Fort Berthold. Later he was transferred to the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation of South Dakota, his native State, where he served as superintendent. Following approximately 2 years of service as superintendent he was appointed area director by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Honorable Glenn Emmons, in August 1955.

Dr. Reifel has dedicated himself to the well-being of his people, the American Indian. Not only the Sioux Indian, but all Indians, can take pride in the honor that has come to one of them and is so well deserved.

J. Addington Wagner, National Commander of the American Legion, Turns His Back on Disabled Veterans

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. OLIN E. TEAGUE
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, every Member of this House knows that if Mr. Wagner would tell the Senate that he would accept H. R. 12038 as No. 1 priority legislation without amendments that it could become law and give the service-connected disabled of our country $172 million next year. I am including the following telegram sent to Mr. Wagner and his reply:

JULY 20, 1956.

J. ADDINGTON WAGNER,
National Commander, the American Legion, Washington, D. C.:

The American Legion non-service-connected pension bill, H. R. 7886, is blocking many pieces of legislation now pending in the Senate designed to help widows and combat-disabled veterans, including H. R. 12038, the bill which would give the Nation's 2 million disabled veterans a 10-percent increase in service-connected disability compensation. Our service-connected disabled veterans will go without needed increases in compensation unless the American Legion immediately repudiates the non-service-connected pension bill, H. R. 7886, and advises Members of the Senate that compensation increases for the service-connected disabled should have the highest priority and that such legislation should be brought to the floor of the Senate immediately, with assurance from the American Legion that no attempt will be made to amend the bill to include non-service-connected pensions. Action on your part is imperative if our service-connected disabled veterans are not to become the victims of an ill-conceived drive by the American Legion for non-service-connected pensions. I tried in the committee to obtain first consideration for the service-connected disabled and lost to American Legion demands. I tried again on the floor of the House to give increases to the service-connected disabled priority over the American Legion pension bill and again lost as a result of American Legion pressure. In a third and final effort, I urge you to stand up and be counted on the side of the 2 million veterans of this Nation who suffered service-connected disabilities in its wars and restore to them priority consideration which the American Legion legislative program has denied.

OLIN E. TEAGUE,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs, House of Representatives.

JULY 21, 1956.

Hon. OLIN E. TEAGUE,
House of Representatives:

Re telegram July 20, apparently you are confused. The United States Senate is well able to conduct its business. I doubt very much that the Senate is in need of a directive from either you or the American Legion in order to evaluate and carry out its responsibilities. The American Legion heartily supports H. R. 12038 providing compensation increases for war widows and combat disabled veterans. We supported it in the House and we support it in the Senate. We believe that both this bill and our war veterans security bill, H. R. 7886, offer reasonable and vitally needed improvement in the present veterans' benefit program. We earnestly hope that the Senate will enact both of these bills into law.

J. ADDINGTON WAGNER,
National Commander, The American Legion.

H. R. 10237, the Government Employees Union Recognition Bill

OF
HON. JOHN LESINSKI, JR.
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Post Office and Civil Service Committee will not be meeting again this session, the members of the subcommittee which studied H. R. 10237, the Government employees union recognition bill, wish to have their report on the legislation made known to the Members of the House. We feel that this was vitally needed legislation and regret exceedingly that it was not acted upon in this session.

The members of the subcommittee, all of whom have approved the report, are as follows: J. LESINSKI, chairman, G. PHODES, J. MOSS, R. CORBETT, and H. GROSS.

The report is as follows:

RECOGNITION OF ORGANIZATIONS OF POSTAL AND FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REPORT TO ACCOMPANY H. R. 10237

The Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10237) to amend section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912, as amended, with respect to the recognition of organizations of postal and Federal employees, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with amendments and recommend that the bill, as amended, pass.

AMENDMENTS

The amendments are as follows:

(1) Page 1, and lines 3 and 4, strike out symbols "(U. S. C., 1946 edition, title 5, sec.

652)," and insert in lieu thereof "(5 U. S. C., sec. 652),";

(2) Page 2, line 4, strike out the symbol "(A)."

(3) Page 2, line 15, strike out words "rates of pay."

(4) Page 2, line 18, strike out period after "reprisal" and insert in lieu thereof a colon and add the following words:

"Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall nullify any provision of any contract, agreement, or regulation reached by mutual agreement between a department or agency and an employee organization except as may hereafter be agreed to by the parties thereto."

(5) Page 2, lines 19 through 25, and page 3, lines 1 and 2, strike out all of subsection "(e) (2) (B)."

(7) Page 3, line 15, strike out symbol "(4)" and insert in lieu thereof the symbol "(3)."

(8) Page 3, line 16, strike out the words "or the Federal Bureau of Investigation." and insert in lieu thereof the following: ", the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Atomic Energy Commission, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, or the National Security Agency."

PURPOSE OF AMENDMENTS

The first and second amendments are technical amendments.

The third amendment is designed to clarify the intent of the legislation, leaving the question of rates of pay to be determined by congressional action.

The fourth amendment is added to assure that nothing in the bill will nullify any provision of any existing contract, agreement, or regulation without the consent of the parties thereto.

The fifth amendment strikes from the bill a provision that would set up an impartial board of arbitration to resolve disputes arising from disagreements between the employee organizations and the departments or agencies on the policies enumerated in the bill. The subcommittee felt that in spite of the merits of that provision, such elimination was necessary to maintain a proper relationship between employee and employer. It was felt that the bill, as amended, would supply an effective means by which an employee or his representative could take to the agency head any grievance.

Amendment 6 strikes from the bill a provision which the agency heads feel would empower the board of arbitration to remove an official and thus would conflict with established removal procedures. They argue that agency heads now have the authority to remove or otherwise discipline officials who do not observe laws or regulations.

The seventh amendment is a technical amendment.

The last amendment excludes the Atomic Energy Commission, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the National Security Agency from the provisions of the bill.

JUSTIFICATION

This legislation, by amending the act of August 24, 1912, provides statutory recognition of employee organizations and of the rights of officers and employees or representatives of such organizations to present grievances in behalf of their members without restraint, coercion, interference, intimidation, or reprisal. No new or revolutionary proposal is advanced in the measure. Its enactment would provide for postal and Federal employees the same elementary rights that Congress has decreed should be given to employees in private industry by providing the means whereby their representatives can confer with administrative officials on matters of policy affecting working conditions and grievances. It is in keeping with modern advanced theories of sound personnel management.

Under this legislation, the Federal Government would not lose any of the final authority it now has in employee-employer relations; nor would the Government be a party to collective bargaining such as prevails in private industry. Federal employees would not be given any right to strike against the Government for settlement of grievances.

Extensive hearings on this legislation have been held and all sides of the issue have been thoroughly explored.

Need for this legislation has been recognized by all, it seems, except the Civil Service Commission. Employees and their organizations have for many years been urging its enactment. Surely, if adequate means for settling grievances of employees do exist, as claimed by Chairman Young of the Civil Service Commission, there would not be such a hue and cry raised by the employees and their representatives for statutory safeguards. Recognizing that regulations of the Civil Service Commission do exist which provide certain guidelines for agencies in matters of employee-employer relations, the committee wishes to emphasize that such regulations are not mandatory and that agencies have an extremely wide latitude within which they may, in their own discretion, operate. That the agencies often ignore or pay little heed to the regulations is evidenced by the numerous petitions and grievances of postal and civil-service employees on personnel matters, which are constantly being presented to Members of Congress and also by testimony before the subcommittee.

Not only have the employees and their organizations been most insistent in pointing up the necessity of this legislation, but so also have the American Bar Association and the Commission on the Executive Branch of the Government (Hoover Commission) emphasized its value.

In a report in August of 1955, the labor relations law section of the American Bar Association approved a report which stated:

"Government as an employer has failed in many instances to practice what it compels industry to do. Legislatures which deny to Government agencies the use of some proper form of collective bargaining procedures so familiar in industry (at least in terms of collective negotiation), which attempt to restrict unduly the right of employees to organize and to petition the Government for redress of their grievances, need to review the problem more realistically."

The report further stated that—

"The progress made in recent years by labor organizations, the development of a more responsible labor leadership, the benefits secured by organized labor, have brought public employees to a recognition of the advantages to them which might result from more effective organization and more aggressive negotiation with governmental agencies. A government which imposes upon other employers certain obligations in dealing with their employees may not in good faith refuse to deal with its own public servants on a reasonably similar favorable basis, modified, of course, to meet the exigencies of the public service. It should set the example for industry by being perhaps more considerate than the law required of private enterprise."

The Hoover Commission in its report to the 81st Congress (H. Doc. 63, February 10, 1949), expressed the finding that:

"Federal employees while given some degree of protection against abuse, discrimination, and unjust treatment, are not provided a positive opportunity to participate in the formulation of policies and practices which affect their welfare."

The Commission recommended that—

"The heads of departments and agencies should be required to provide for the positive participation of employees in the formulation and improvement of the Federal personnel policies and practices."

Additionally, according to information recently made available, the Secretary of Labor at a Cabinet meeting in October of 1955, brought up the subject of extending greater recognition to unions of Government employees. Because of the objections of another Cabinet member, no further developments occurred on the proposal. It should also be pointed out that, in spite of the expressed adverse opinion of the Civil Service Commission on this legislation, the Commission over a year ago circulated, or caused to be circulated, a proposed executive order on recognition of Federal employee organizations. That proposed order was in many respects identical to the language and purpose of H. R. 10237. If that Executive order had been implemented, there might have been no need for the present legislation. Since it appears that no administrative action along those lines will be taken, your subcommittee highly recommends enactment of H. R. 10237.

Recognition must be given to the human element in all relationships where people must cooperate and work efficiently and under humane conditions. Enlightened personnel management experts have determined that good morale and efficiency are enhanced whenever employees are given an opportunity to have a say in matters which affect them.

Conversely, poor morale and lack of interest in the job are to be expected when arbitrary and unexplained personnel policies and procedures are formulated among the top echelon and then sifted down through the subordinate levels of management to the employees.

The Federal Government, having provided under the National Labor Relations Act and other legislation means by which employees in private industry can make proper approaches to management, would provide similar treatment, within reason, for its own employees. Such is the purpose of H. R. 10237. Your subcommittee strongly recommends immediate enactment of the bill.

Retirement From Senate of Senator Millikin, of Colorado, and Senator George, of Georgia

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FREDERICK G. PAYNE

OF MAINE

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. President, much has been said on the floor in tribute to two of our retiring colleagues, Senator EUGENE MILLIKIN, of Colorado, and Senator WALTER GEORGE, of Georgia. I should like to offer my further remarks in connection with their long and distinguished service as United States Senators in the form of statements which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR FREDERICK PAYNE ON THE RETIREMENT FROM THE SENATE OF SENATOR EUGENE MILLIKIN, OF COLORADO

It grieves us all to note that the senior Senator from Colorado finds that his health will not permit his offering himself for another term of service in the Senate. This body and the whole Nation will be poorer as a result of the loss of his guidance and leadership

EUGENE MILLIKIN is the sort of man who was a continual inspiration to his colleagues. He was constantly sought out for advice and counsel by those on both sides of the aisle, by colleagues equal to him in terms of service as well as those many years junior to him. Possessed of a warm and friendly nature, a keen sense of humor, a brilliant mind which he employed so skillfully in every debate in which he engaged, EUGENE MILLIKIN was one of the most capable Americans ever to have taken a seat on the Senate floor. His cognizance of every situation which came before the Senate Committees on which he served down through the years were an invaluable contribution to the legislative process.

Not only has GENE MILLIKIN been a lasting friend to all of his colleagues, but he has been a great Republican, and one who has put the interests of all Americans before party and before the interests of the section of the country which he represented so well for so many years.

It is my hope that the Senator's retirement after a career of which he can well be proud, will restore his health, so that he may enjoy many years of pleasant rest which he so truly deserves.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR FREDERICK G. PAYNE ON THE RETIREMENT FROM THE SENATE OF SENATOR WALTER GEORGE, OF GEORGIA

I feel it a humble privilege to pay tribute to my beloved colleague and friend, WALTER GEORGE. When the Senate adjourns this summer, it will be losing one of the truly great men to have served in this body.

Statesman, lawyer, wise and patriotic American—Senator GEORGE has reached a position in life that few men are privileged to achieve. In his 34 years as United States Senator from Georgia, he has shown his stalwart character, his concern for humanity, and his personal magnitude to the entire world. This Nation can be grateful that WALTER GEORGE, following a brilliant judicial career in his home State, chose to answer the call of public service in 1922. As a junior Senator he worked long and hard, and fought for enactment of legislation in the interests of all the people. Rising in stature during the turbulent 'thirties, WALTER GEORGE emerged as one above mere personal consideration and political party. Never bracketed, never joining a wing or faction, and using his calm, common sense, Senator GEORGE won the admiration and respect of both sides of the aisle for his stands on legislation and for his position with respect to international affairs.

Like the clock above the President's chair, steadily measuring off the minutes of American history, WALTER GEORGE has sat in the Senate down through the years, the very conscience of the American way of life; and he has stood steadfast in his own beliefs, beliefs that have inspired two generations of Americans.

I, for one, believe that Senator GEORGE has left his greatest philosophic imprint in the minds of us all, for his role as one of the great peacemakers of our time. He has supported the bipartisan foreign policies of both Republican and Democratic administrations. He has risked censure from his own party, fearlessly following the dictates of his own convictions. Knowing the personal grief of war in the loss of his son in World War II, the Senator became firm in his determination to work for everlasting peace.

The true greatness of Senator GEORGE rose to new heights when, as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, he stood behind the President and the administration on the Formosa resolution to save the peace in Asia from the immediate threat of Communist aggression. As a man of peace, the Senator played an important role in the formation of summit conference talks at Geneva in 1955.

The accomplishments of our most respected colleague are great and many. As President Eisenhower's ambassador to NATO he will carry with him to the council tables of freedom these years of patient understanding, of cautious sagacity, and of toil for humanitarian ideals.

I want to wish the senior Senator from Georgia and his good wife God's blessings in the years ahead, and to join with a grateful Nation in thanks for a job well done. Few men have served their country as nobly as has WALTER GEORGE.

The Watch Industry

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EUGENE J. KEOGH
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, the press has recently contained a considerable amount of discussion questioning the findings of the Office of Defense Mobilization in 1954 that the domestic watch industry was essential to the national defense. One must recall that the alleged essentiality of the domestic watch industry was one of the principal considerations which, I understand, was supposed to have led the President to decide to increase the tariff on watches 2 years ago. Now the finding of defense essentiality is being reviewed by the Office of Defense Mobilization, which will ultimately hold public hearings on the subject sometime this fall.

Mr. Speaker, it is also interesting that this same question has recently been examined by the distinguished Subcommittee on Foreign Economic Policy which held hearings on the subject for 4 days in June. Its findings have just been published by the Joint Economic Committee in its report on the subject of the relationship between defense essentiality and foreign economic policy, with particular reference to the watch industry as a case in point. The unanimous report of the subcommittee, which I have read with interest, is to be commended to the Members of this House as a most constructive and thoughtful document contributing to the development of sound foreign economic policy. I might add what I am sure Members of this House need hardly be reminded of—that the subcommittee which carried out this excellent work was chaired by our distinguished colleague, Representative RICHARD BOLLING, of Missouri.

I want to draw particular attention to one of the recommendations contained in the report which is especially pertinent to the 1954 watch decision. I quote:

The 1954 decisions on watches by the Department of Commerce, the Interdepartmental Committee of the Office of Defense Mobilization, and of the President were not accompanied by completely developed analysis of defense essentiality. The industry appears to have been studied in isolation from other industries and any set of recognizable criteria. We urge that new decisions taken this year be supported in the public record with a full analysis of why the decision is taken, regardless of whether that decision is to call for more or less restriction of the watch imports.

Recent articles in the press have almost uniformly echoed this observation and have further indicated widespread agreement that, as the report states:

Attempts to restrict watch imports * * * are likely to have undesirable side effects on our worldwide trade relations and hence on national security far beyond any narrow gain in domestic watch production.

As a good example of the newspaper reports on this well-reasoned subcommittee report, I ask that the text of a column which appeared in the New York World-Telegram and Sun on July 23, 1956, be reprinted in the RECORD. It was ably written by Scripps-Howard staff writer Douglas Smith:

CONGRESS UNIT WOULD EASE WATCH TARIFFS

(By Douglas Smith)

WASHINGTON, July 23.—There should be no more barriers against the importation of watches, a congressional committee has declared.

The Joint Economic Committee, of which Senator PAUL DOUGLAS (Democrat, Illinois) is chairman, says the tariff increase on watches 2 years ago did not improve the relative position of American watchmakers.

The committee's report is based on an investigation conducted by a subcommittee headed by Representative RICHARD BOLLING (Democrat, Missouri).

But this is only one more round in the perennial battle over watch tariffs.

The President can restrict watch imports without the approval of Congress if he considers it necessary to advance the national defense. The Office of Defense Mobilization now has a committee studying whether to recommend such action to the White House.

An ODM committee recommendation caused the President to increase the tariff on jeweled watches by 50 percent in 1954. The new congressional committee report suggests that recommendation was "dominated by domestic commercial considerations rather than either defense needs or foreign policy effects."

American jeweled watch manufacturers would prefer import quotas on their foreign (Swiss) competition, because even a substantial tariff increase might not do them much good. The one of 2 years ago helped them little, because the Swiss are able to make fine watches much more cheaply than American firms.

The American companies also are engaged in high-precision defense work for which they claim their watchmakers are a unique and highly essential pool of skills.

The congressional committee considered the plant-conversion idea old-fashioned, however. It said "it is safest to assume that never again will we have time to convert our industry over a period of years from a peaceful orientation to a military one."

Quadrennial Convention of the First Slovak Wreath of the Free Eagle

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DANIEL J. FLOOD
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, during the week of August 13, 1956, in my home city of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., there will be held the quadrennial convention of an outstanding American fraternal society, the First Slovak Wreath of the Free

Eagle. Though not the largest, it is among the strongest fraternal groups composed of Americans of Slovak descent in the country. Under the magnificent leadership of an outstanding fraternalist, Matthew Cintula of Staten Island, N. Y., this organization now boasts a mmebership of over 8,000 and total aggregate assets of more than $2½ million. It is justly proud of its solvency of 119.08 percent or $391,346.13 above its margin of safety as prescribed by law.

Founded on September 24, 1896, in Bridgeport, Conn., where its home office is located at 650 Arctic Street, the organization was chartered by the Connecticut General Assembly on May 24, 1901, and was authorized to transact business as a fraternal society by the insurance commissioner of that State on October 5, 1914.

Among the several laudable objects for which this society was founded was the intent to "aid and assist each other in sickness or misfortune and to provide funeral expenses for deceased members."

Since January 1, 1918, the method of conducting business was changed to the level premium system, and the society is still operating on this plan. Policies for adults are issued on any of the following 4 plans: Ordinary life, 20-payment life, 20-year endowment, and endowment at age 65.

From January 1, 1938, the insurance certificates were based on the American Experience Table at 3½ percent interest, and from 1949 the interest was set at 3 percent.

Certificates of the organization based on the assessment rates of the American Experience Table grant cash surrender values, paid-up insurance, loans and automatic payment of dues after 36 monthly assessments. The maximum insurance benefit available is $2,500 in any 1 class, or $5,000 in all classes.

Nonmedical benefit certificates are now issued on any 1 of the 4 plans. For applicants from age 16 to 40 the limit is not over $1,000, while from age 41 to 45, the insurance limit is $500. I am informed that the society accepts members up to 55 years of age with a medical examination.

Reflecting its interest in young people, the organization has a juvenile branch which issues the following plans: Term to age 18, 20-year payment and 20-year endowment. All juvenile policies, except the term to age 18, have the same comparative values and advantages as adult policies, including cash surrender, loan or paid-up insurance.

At age 16, the member who has a term to 18 policy, may joint the adult department, and when he reaches 18 and is in good health, transfer to the adult branch is mandatory.

The Slovak Eagles, as they are informally called, have a very fine record for progress and fraternal spirit and I am proud to learn that many hundreds of this organization hail from the district which I have the honor to represent in Congress. The organization is set up on the subordinate lodge system and is licensed to do business in the States of Connecticut, New Jersey, Ohio, New York, and Pennsylvania. Branches are also maintained in Colorado, Indiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, and West Virginia.

The first Slovak wreath of the Free Eagle has always been fortunate in the high quality of its officers and official staff. Among the leading figures in the society there are and have been, some of the most outstanding American fraternal leaders in America. Assisting President Cintula and the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Michael J. Carnicke, spiritual director, are the following officers: Stephen Gombar, vice president; Stephen Swartz, secretary; John V. Hudak, treasurer, who resides in Exeter, in my congressional district; Paul ine Bayan, Michael Soyka, Michael Chabak, Barbara Hojdic, and Michael Simko, supreme tribunal; John S. Nemergut, Emma Mack, Andrew Maczko, and Frank Benik, auditors; Matthew Cintula, John V. Hudak, Stephen Swarts, Andrew Kaza, and John Rusnak, finance committee; Anna Katusak, president of the juvenile order; Atty. John J. Vavrence, general counsel, and Dr. Arthur Sekerak, medical examiner.

Wilkes-Barre and Wyoming Valley have felt the beneficient influence of immigrants from Slovakia for more than 90 years. As my home city of Wilkes-Barre this year celebrates the 150th anniversary of its incorporation, it is a pleasure to welcome the Slovak Eagles on the occasion of their quadrennial convention during the week of August 13, and to wish them deserved success in their commendable fraternal endeavors.

Post Office Department Will Shortly Announce a New 3-Cent Stamp To Be Issued in Honor of Labor Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to learn that the Post Office Department will shortly announce a new 3-cent stamp to be issued in honor of Labor Day and as a tribute to the cause of labor and the workers of the Nation.

It is also gratifying to learn that the city of Camden, N. J., will be made the place for the first issue of such stamp on Labor Day, September 3, 1956.

In my endeavor to have such a stamp issued and the city of Camden, N. J., selected as the place of first issue, in conjunction with the several labor organizations of Camden and elsewhere interested in the matter, I have urged that it would be most appropriate in the issuance of such stamp to have Camden, N. J., selected for the honor of having the first issuance because of the fact that the founder of Labor Day was the honored and distinguished labor leader, Peter J. McGuire, of Camden, N. J.

In my endeavor to have such a stamp issued and Camden, N. J., selected as the place of first issue, I have had the helpful support of Morris C. Rothblum, Courier Post stamp editor and a member of the Camden Typographical Union, No. 132, and Louis W. Tomafsky, Joseph H. Johnson, also members of the Courier Post staff, and like Mr. Rothblum, members of local 132.

These gentlemen with Walker Gill prepared a resolution that was presented to and adopted by the Union Printers League of New Jersey on February 26, 1956, reading in part as follows:

Whereas Peter J. McGuire, a member of the carpenters' union and the founder of Labor Day, was a resident of the city of Camden, N. J., and his remains are interred here; and

Whereas Peter J. McGuire was a tireless worker in behalf of the labor movement: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Union Printers League of New Jersey * * * go on record requesting that the stamp issued commemorate Peter J. McGuire and that the city of Camden, N. J., be designated as the first-day sale office.

Furthermore, it seems appropriate that in this connection there be made a part of these remarks a sketch of a historical character relating to the establishment of Labor Day as a national holiday, and, also of each of the 48 States by separate legislative enactments.

Although there has been some controversy in the past as to whether the Knights of Labor in New York City or the New York City Central Labor Union originated Labor Day, it has been confirmed through investigation that the Knights of Labor had nothing to do officially with the declaration of such a holiday. The idea of a day to be set apart for labor was first made public by a resolution offered at a meeting of the Central Labor Union held on May 8, 1882, by Peter J. McGuire, at that time the general secretary of the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, and later the vice president of the American Federation of Labor. Mr. McGuire suggested that the first Monday in September be made the day for paying public tribute to American industry, "as it would come at the most pleasant season of the year, nearly midway between the Fourth of July and Thanksgiving, and would fill a wide gap in the chronology of legal holidays."

The resolution was passed and a committee was appointed to prepare for the celebration. However, the first Labor Day observance was held not on the first Monday, but on Tuesday, September 5, 1882. About 10,000 union members marched up Broadway, after which they and their families and friends spent the rest of the day on the picnic grounds in Elm Park, where all sorts of amusements were provided. From a platform which had been erected on the grounds, the crowds were addressed by numerous labor leaders from 2:30 in the afternoon until nightfall. This first celebration was a great success and led to the establishment of the annual observance of Labor Day by which the American people, in the words of Mr. McGuire, "honor the toilers of the earth, and pay homage to those who from rude nature have delved and carved all the comfort and grandeur we behold."

The second Labor Day was celebrated Wednesday, September 5, 1883, and the parade on that occasion was reported as an imposing demonstration of the Central Labor Union. In 1884 it was decided by the Central Labor Union to hold the celebration on the first Monday in September, which was the first of the month, and central labor bodies in other cities were urged to celebrate that day as a universal holiday for workingmen.

On October 7, 1884, a resolution was unanimously adopted by the American Federation of Labor convention to the effect that "the first Monday in September of each year be set apart as a laborers' national holiday, and we recommend its observance by all wage workers, irrespective of sex, calling, or nationality."

During the next few years Labor Day became officially recognized in scattered localities through municipal ordinances. State legislative recognition was developed as a result of a campaign conducted by organized labor, and, by the end of 1893, 23 States had enacted Labor Day laws. Oregon was the first State to pass such legislation by the enactment of a law in 1887 designating the first Saturday in June as Labor Day. This act was amended in 1893 to conform to the general plan of observing the first Monday in September as Labor Day, which by that time was widely accepted.

The increasing interest in setting aside a day for honoring the workers of America, and the efforts of the American Federation of Labor to get national recognition for such a day, resulted in the passage of a bill, known as the Kyle bill, by the Congress of the United States which made Labor Day a legal holiday for public employees. The bill was passed with very little discussion; the only objection raised was that for the sake of symmetry in national holidays, Labor Day should be fixed for the first day of September instead of the first Monday. However, since the holiday was being created by Congress, and not by an event, it was thought better to make it the first Monday to conform to the prevailing practice.

On June 28, 1894, President Cleveland signed the act and it became law. It reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first Monday in September of each year, being the day known and celebrated as labor's holiday, is hereby made a legal public holiday, to all intents and purposes, in the same manner as Christmas, the first day of January, the twenty-second day of February, the thirtieth day of May and the fourth day of July are now by law made public holidays.

The recognition thus accorded Labor Day by the action of the Congress and the Executive added to the significance of the movement and the prestige of the holiday. The act was acclaimed as establishing Labor Day as a national holiday, although it actually applied only to Federal employees.

By 1900 Labor Day had been officially recognized by most of the States, but it was not until February 1923 that the 48th State, Wyoming, fell into line. Most of the States in their original acts set the first Monday in September as the holiday. In Wisconsin and Wyoming, Labor Day is set by the governors, but in practice, of course, they designate the first Monday in September for the observance. Thus, Labor Day is now established both as a National and State holiday in all of our States.

The issuance of a post stamp to commemorate Labor Day and its founder, Peter J. McGuire, is most appropriate. It is appropriate that on each succeeding Labor Day, exercises are held in Arlington Cemetery, located near the city of Camden, N. J., to honor Peter J. McGuire, known as the father of Labor Day, who was buried there in 1906, the year he passed on into the Great Beyond.

Mr. McGuire was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1852. At an early age he came to this country. He identified himself with trade-union activities, and eventually became general secretary of the Carpenters and Joiners International Union. In his effort to achieve recognition of labor's rights, he advocated the setting aside of a fixed day each year to be known as Labor Day. The day to be observed as a national holiday in tribute to labor and the workingman.

The tribute that is yearly paid to this great man is well deserved. We consider it an honor that he made his home in our city of Camden. He died in our city a poor but respected man. Though poor in earthly goods, he was rich in the honor and respect of his fellow man. His memory has continued through all the years that have intervened as a wholesome influence. His allegiance to the cause of labor is even yet an inspiration to all who believe in the dignity and importance of labor and the rights of workers.

There can be no higher compliment paid to this great man than for each to seek to emulate his character, his high regard for principle, his unswerving belief in the rights of man and his loyalty to America.

The issuance of a stamp in his honor and as a tribute to labor is highly appropriate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. T. MILLET HAND

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, as we reach the conclusion of the 84th Congress, it seems to me worth while to make a brief and informal report to my constituents on the state of the Union.

The most important thing to all of us is that America is at peace. Since the President concluded the tragic war in Korea, there have been no Americans in combat anywhere in the world. Moreover, while it must be said that there are lots of trouble spots, I am very optimistic about the maintenance of the peace. While the President's conference at Geneva may not have achieved concrete agreements, it has been increasingly obvious that there has been a greatly improved climate in our international affairs since that time. The change in the attitude of Soviet Russia is more than superficial. They may not have had a change of heart, but they are certainly changing policies, both by reason of difficulties in their own country, and also because of the firm policies and tremendous striking power of the United States. I have talked to Secretary Dulles, General Gruenther, and many other leaders on this point, and they are all convinced that Russia does not plan, nor does she dare to plan, aggressive war against us. If war should come, it would be the result of accidents, which we will certainly avoid if humanly possible.

Along with the peace has come the greatest prosperity in our national history. Inflation has been stopped, average pay and employment is at an all-time high, Federal taxes were cut $8 billion dollars, many nuisance taxes have either been abolished or reduced, and despite our enormous expenditures for defense and other necessary purposes, the budget has been balanced with a surplus of nearly $2 billion cash at the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1956.

The American people have more houses, more automobiles, and more comforts than ever before, and this happy situation has been achieved without the false inflation and stimulation of a war economy.

At the same time, we continue to make giant steps in social progress. Our social-security system has been improved and strengthened, and we are making dramatic improvements in the public health.

The American society is the envy of the world, and is an example to the world of what can be accomplished under a system of full liberty and free enterprise.

NATIONAL ECONOMY

In the general field of national economy, we:

Authorized $33 billion for a 13-year highway-construction program, which when completed will completely rebuild and modernize our system of interstate highways.

Provided for substantial pay increase for all postal workers.

Increased minimum wage under Federal Labor Standards Act to $1 per hour.

Authorized 4-year program of airport construction with grants to States to implement program.

Increased criminal penalties under Antitrust Act.

Increased from $25 million to $125 million authorization to Small Business Administration to make disaster loans.

SOCIAL SECURITY, HEALTH, AND WELFARE

Passed improved social-security bill commencing benefits to widows and surviving dependent mothers at age 62 instead of 65, and provided certain disability benefits at age 50, and further extended coverage of law, and increased grants to States for aid to needy, blind, and dependent children.

Passed Federal flood insurance program, and in addition act permits FHA loans for homes damaged in floods and other major disasters.

Extended Salk polio vaccination program to July 1, 1957.

Extended school milk program.

Authorized Federal aid of $30 million annually for 3 years for construction of facilities for research into various crippling and killing diseases.

Extended modified version of housing bill.

SPECIAL NOTES

A special note should perhaps be made concerning the so-called Federal aid to education bill. As nearly everyone is aware, this was defeated since it included the Powell amendment preventing the expenditure of Federal funds to southern schools which discriminated against Negroes. Its passage was inevitably blocked largely but not entirely because of solid opposition by southern Democrats. The same thing can be said about the civil-rights bill which overwhelmingly passed the House of Representatives, but did not have a chance of passing the Senate this late in the session.

Now, I want to refer particularly to a program which is very close to me, the appropriations for which are the concern of my subcommittee.

HEALTH RESEARCH

The National Institutes of Health, located at Bethesda, Md., close to Washington, are doing dramatic work in the field of research against the major diseases afflicting the people of this country. An enormous effort is being made in the field of cancer research, although with results that are not so far immediately encouraging. In the field of mental health activities, study of the heart, arthritis and related diseases, neurology and blindness, very substantial progress is being made. It is not too much to hope that within the next 5 years or less, assuming the continuance of a well-supported program of research, that major results will be accomplished. We must continue that support.

The Congress this year has been extremely generous and has, in the case of all the National Institutes, greatly exceeded the requests of the Bureau of the Budget.

I think it is interesting to look at the following tables showing how much more money Congress has appropriated than was requested, or than was appropriated last year:

National Cancer Institute

1956 appropriation	$24,978,000
1957 budget estimate	32,437,000
House allowance	34,437,000
Committee recommendation	48,432,000

Mental health activities

1956 appropriation	$18,001,000
1957 budget estimate	21,749,000
House allowance	23,749,000
Committee recommendation	35,197,000

National Heart Institute

1956 appropriation	$18,898,000
1957 budget estimate	22,106,000
House allowance	25,106,000
Committee recommendation	33,396,000

Arthritis and metabolic disease activities

1956 appropriation	$10,840,000
1957 budget estimate	13,345,000
House allowance	13,845,000
Committee recommendation	15,885,000

Dental health activities

1956 appropriation	$2,176,000
1957 budget estimate	2,971,000
House allowance	3,471,000
Committee recommendation	6,026,000

Microbiology activities

1956 appropriation	$7,775,000
1957 budget estimate	9,799,000
House allowance	8,799,000
Committee recommendation	13,299,000

Neurology and blindness activities

1956 appropriation	$9,861,000
1957 budget estimate	12,196,000
House allowance	14,196,000
Committee recommendation	18,650,000

This is one of the most interesting fields in which I have been active, and one which gives the greatest promise of future welfare of all Americans.

It has not been possible, in a brief report, to cover fields relating to special groups.

In conclusion, it is proper to say that in my judgment many laws have been passed which ought not to have been passed, and many have failed to pass which should have been favorably considered. The net result, however, is most encouraging progress for the state of the Union, which is already in a most highly satisfactory condition.

Territories of the United States

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. LEO W. O'BRIEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday of this week I introduced a joint resolution directing the Interior Committees of both Houses of Congress to evaluate, at least once in every 2 years, the status of all the Territories of the United States, incorporated and unincorporated, and to determine their readiness for additional steps toward self-government.

I did not ask nor expect action on this resolution at this session, but I hope that action will be forthcoming early in the 1st session of the 85th Congress.

Such a resolution would proclaim to the world that we abhor colonialism and that we are ready and anxious to grant the fullest self-government possible to our Territories.

Mr. Speaker, we did not grant statehood to Alaska or Hawaii in this Congress, but I believe statehood for those two great Territories is more imminent than many think possible.

While we stopped short of statehood, I think the RECORD should show that the 84th Congress passed more beneficial legislation for the Territories than any Congress in recent times. I am proud that the great Interior Committee of the House, and the subcommittee I have the honor to head, the Subcommittee on Territorial and Insular Affairs, had an important part in considering and acting upon this legislation affecting the well-being of the people in the Territories, but other committees of Congress helped to round out this splendid program. They are to be commended.

Mr. Speaker, the distinguished Delegates from Alaska and Hawaii do not have the right to vote in this House or in committee, although they may speak in either place. In view of the limitations placed upon them, I believe they have done a remarkable job for their people. They have been industrious, persuasive, and always courteous.

Their own people know what they have accomplished, but I might note in passing that the legislation they sponsored, or for which they worked, has advanced the economic and social welfare of their Territories to a marked degree. Some of the steps made possible by this legislation will, I am sure, enable them to meet more fully and firmly, in the future, claims here and elsewhere that these Territories are not ready for statehood.

The delegates from Alaska and Hawaii can speak for themselves about what has been done for their Territories during the last 2 years, and more particularly during the session now ending. I should like to point out, however, that there has been much accomplished for other areas outside the continental United States for which we are responsible and which do not have elected representatives here.

One of the bills, now law, considers residence in American Samoa and/or Trust Territory as residence in the United States for naturalization purposes.

We passed an omnibus bill for Guam, as well as legislation affecting the judiciary and gasoline tax there.

This Congress acted favorably upon legislation creating the Virgin Islands National Park and extending the Social Security Act to the Virgin Islands.

Several measures for the benefit of Puerto Rico, ably represented by Dr. FERNÓS-ISERN, their Resident Commissioner, were approved.

In addition, we extended library services to all the Territories and to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and we exempted travel to those places from the 10 percent Federal excise tax.

Last September and October members of the Territories Subcommittee of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee held hearings in many communities of Alaska where we met with residents from all walks of life and talked over with them the problems which confront those who live in that vast and vital Territory. It was a wonderfully enlightening experience for me as I know it was for other members who made the trip. I came away more convinced than ever that these fine people are completely justified in seeking to have Alaska admitted as a State and short of that working for social and economic improvements which can come to them only through the legislative processes of the United States Congress.

Those legislative processes, so far as Alaska is concerned, have not come to a halt or a slow walk in the 84th Congress. It is my understanding that close to 50 Alaska bills have become law during the past 2 years or are at the White House awaiting approval. Thirty-five of those measures under the jurisdiction of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee were initially considered and approved by the Territories Subcommittee of which I am chairman.

These 35 bills which represent many, many hours of hearings and executive sessions, of course, are only part of the great number of bills which were approved by the full committee, but at this time I thought it would be of interest to concentrate on the accomplishments for Alaska.

If approved by the President, the Alaska Mental Health Act will provide the mechanism by which Alaskans will be able to take care of their own mentally ill in their own Territory under modern and humane procedures. The law permitting the Territory to assume bonded indebtedness, thus lifting a prohibition in force since Alaska's Organic Act was enacted in 1912, will allow the Territory to go ahead on its own in the matter of building public improvements up to the bonded indebtedness limit of $20 million.

A number of bills have been signed into law or are at the White House designed to aid in the settlement on public land in the Territory. I consider one of the most important, that measure which eliminated the requirement that an 80-rod space had to be reserved between public land entries on navigable waters in Alaska. Another measure would authorize the Interior Secretary to dispose of the lands to be restored from highway, telephone, and pipeline withdrawals, giving any adjoining landowner or claimant a preferred right to acquire the land subject to disposal.

The Interior Department through its Bureau of Land Management will start its program of clearing campsites along Alaska's highway this year through an enabling bill enacted into law.

Another measure is going to make it easier on homestead settlers who enter unsurveyed public lands. From now on they will be required to make only one final proof prior to survey instead of being required to submit proof twice, thus cutting a lot of unneeded redtape and speeding action on final acquisition of the land.

Among the other measures enacted during the past 2 years are bills to permit the Alaska Railroad to enter into 55-year leases on its property; authorize a yearly appropriation of $250,000 for Bureau of Reclamation investigations; extend until December of 1958 the present law allowing the Territory first refusal of surplus personal Federal property in Alaska; raise the annual compensation of the United States Commissioners so that those officials in Alaska may retain up to $12,500 a year from fees collected; establish a commission to study the feasibility of a railroad to the Territory and additional roads to connect the States and Alaska; abolish Old Kasaan National Monument; authorize the Fish and Wildlife Service to regulate the distance between set nets in Alaska waters; permit members of the Territorial legislature to run as candidates for the State constitutional convention which was held last winter at the University of Alaska; authorize the Secretary of the Interior to work out plans for establishment of facilities, such as office space for Customs and Immigration, at the Alaska-Canada border; permit homestead allotments granted to Eskimos, Aleuts and Indians to be alienated after 5 years of occupancy and use; permit the Territory to borrow funds from the Federal Government to supplement Territorial unemployment compensation funds; bring the Eskimos increased incomes by permitting the export of walrus hides from the Territory; and several more.

On the numerous measures now law or soon to be which were handled by committees other than the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, I was especially gratified when Alaska was included in the Highway Act for 1956, thus bringing the Territory within the Federal-aid highway program from which it had been excluded since 1916 when the program was conceived. Definite plans can now be made for a real road-building program because of the certainty of a stable, continuing source through which such roads will be possible. One of the great needs for developing any land is an integrated highway system which will connect communities and open areas to settlers. The application of that theory to Alaska will be a boon in the years ahead to that magnificent Territory of ours which I hope soon will be a State.

Social Security—Don't Confuse Us With Facts, Our Minds Are Made Up

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CECIL R. KING
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. KING of California. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent, I include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following exchange of correspondence setting forth the opposition of the Los Angeles County Medical Association to social security and my reply thereto:

LOS ANGELES
COUNTY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION,
Los Angeles, Calif., June 28, 1956.

Mrs. MARY A. SMITH,
San Pedro, Calif.

DEAR MRS SMITH: Thank you for your letter inquiring as to the reasons the medical profession opposes the expansion of the social security bill now being considered by the United States Senate. The prime reason is simply one of economics. Those who are aware of the true facts know that the Social Security Administration is not solvent and that under present conditions it never will be. Practically every cent of the billions of dollars which have been contributed to social security has been spent by the Government and most of the present social security payments now come directly out of the general fund. Thus the taxpayers of this country are paying twice, once to social security and once to replenish the money taken from the general fund. In view of this factor, the medical profession does not believe it wise to add further debt to social security by lowering the requirements of those who could receive payments.

Of course, there are other factors. Speaking broadly and without reference to any specific case, we know that if there is no incentive for a person to rehabilitate himself, his efforts to again make himself self-supporting after illness or injury will be diminished. We believe social security would take this incentive from the ill or injured person.

This is a topic upon which actually a book could be written, however, I believe that the above will give you some idea of the reasons for our opposition to expansion of social security.

With every wish for an early improvement in your health, I remain,

Sincerely,

J. NORMAN O'NEILL, M. D.,
Secretary-Treasurer.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C., July 18, 1956.

Mrs. MARY A. SMITH,
San Pedro, Calif.

DEAR MRS. SMITH: This is in response to your letter requesting comment on a letter which you received from Dr. J. Norman O'Neill, secretary-treasurer, Los Angeles County Medical Association, setting forth reasons why the medical profession opposes the expansion of the social security bill now being considered by the United States Senate. (This bill passed the Senate yesterday, July 17, 1956.)

These reasons are presented in two paragraphs. The first, and longest, paragraph is an attack on the financial soundness of the present Social Security System. The second paragraph refers to vocational rehabilitation. As is often typical of those who attack the whole Social Security System, opposition is expressed in broad general statements, unsupported by any factual material. The points made by Dr. O'Neill will be considered and answered in the order in which they were set forth in his letter to you.

First, there was mentioned the matter of economics, and it was alleged that "the Social Security Administration is not solvent and under present conditions it never will be." The simple fact of the matter is that the old-age and survivors insurance trust fund is completely solvent and actuarially sound. The total assets of the trust fund as of June 30, 1955, were $21,141,001,461.71. The source of this figure is the report of the Board of Trustees of the Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1955, Senate Document No. 119, 84th Congress, page 9. (The members of the Board of Trustees are: George M. Humphrey, Secretary of the Treasury; James P. Mitchell, Secretary of Labor; Marion B. Folsom, Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare; and Charles I. Schottland, Commissioner of Social Security.)

The law requires that these assets be invested only in direct interest-bearing obligations of the United States and obligations guaranteed as to both principle and interest by the United States. In other words, the assets are invested in United States Government securities, which constitute the safest form of investment. This fact of course is recognized by businessmen throughout the country and, indeed, laws in every State of the Union class government bonds as the No. 1 preferred form of investment for regulated insurance companies, trusts, and so forth. Further, the interest which is collected from these securities goes into the trust fund. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1955, alone over $438 million in interest was received. The total amount of interest since the inception of the trust fund amounts to approximately $3.7 billion. In connection with the operation of the trust fund investment I hope you will read carefully pages 7 and 8 of the enclosed annual report, under the section entitled "Reality of the Trust Fund." As you will note, that report discusses and completely refutes the type of charge made by Dr. O'Neill in his letter to you.

Second, and in support of his first statement, Dr. O'Neill asserts that "practically every cent of the billions of dollars which have been contributed to social security has been spent by the Government and most of the present social-security payments now come directly out of the general fund"; and he further charges that "thus the taxpayers of this country are paying twice, once to social security and once to replenish the money taken from the general fund." These statements are misleading and are completely contrary to the facts. They have been repudiated time and again. The investment of the assets of the trust fund in government securities, as required by law, is entirely proper. Amounts equal to 100 percent of contributions under the Social Security Act are permanently appropriated by law to the Federal old-age and survivors insurance trust fund which is completely separate from the general funds of the United States Treasury.

The allegation that the public will be taxed twice for social security has been answered fully and completely on a number of different occasions. For example, the report of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, in August 1949, said with reference to this:

"The investment of the excess income of the trust fund in government securities does not mean that the people have been or will be taxed twice for the same benefits, as has been charged."

Also, I refer again to the Annual Report of the Board of Trustees, signed by Secretary of the Treasury, George M. Humphrey, as follows:

"When the Treasury pays back money borrowed from the trust fund, the public will not be taxed a second time for social security. If taxes are levied to redeem the securities held by the trust fund, these taxes will not be levied for the purpose of paying social security benefits. Rather, they will be levied for the purposes for which the money was originally borrowed, such as the costs arising out of World War II. Taxes would have to be raised to pay back the money borrowed to cover the cost of the war, whether the obligations were held by the trust fund or by other investors. The fact that the trust fund, rather than other possible investors, holds part of the Federal debt does not change the purpose for which these taxes must be levied."

To state the matter as simply and concisely as possible, the United States Treasury borrows from a number of different sources, including individuals, mutual savings banks, insurance companies, and various other classes of investors, including the OASI Trust Fund. Government securities in the hands of the OASI Trust Fund are fully as valuable as are Government securities in the hands of other investors. The investment of this trust fund are handled much the same as are other types of insurance systems set up by the Congress, such as Civil Service Retirement (established in 1920), United States Government Life Insurance (established in 1924), and others.

Facts about our Social Security System are readily available to Dr. O'Neill as they are to anyone who is broadminded enough to seek the truth. Actuarial estimates presented to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, of which I am proud to be a member, and to the Senate Committee on Finance, show that the contribution rates now in the law make the System wholly self-supporting. These actuarial estimates do not take into account the probability of a continuing rise of wage levels as has occurred throughout all American history. An increase in wage levels would have the effect of increasing income in relationship to outgo in the fund. In this connection, the Ways and Means Committee in its report on H. R. 7225, said:

"Your committee has always very strongly believed that the System should be actuarially sound. Your committee continues to believe that the tax schedule in the law should make the System self-supporting as nearly as can be foreseen, or in other words, actuarially sound.

In consideration of H. R. 7225 in 1955, as in all previous years, the committee was very careful to provide adequate financing for the new benefits provided. Actuarial testimony presented to the committee indicated that the System would be actuarially sound if the contribution rate was increased beginning with January 1, 1957. The committee nevertheless concluded that in order to be absolutely certain of the fund's actuarial soundness the increase in the rate should go into effect on January 1, 1956. As stated in the committee's report on the bill:

"The old-age and survivors insurance program as amended by this bill would be actuarially sound, and in fact its actuarial status would be improved since the cost of the liberalized benefits is more than met by the increased contributions scheduled (with such rise going fully into effect immediately with the inauguration of the new benefit provisions)."

As I have indicated above, the major portion of Dr. O'Neill's letter consisted of his first paragraph in which he attacked the financial soundness of the Social Security System itself. He then said, "Of course, there are other factors." He then referred merely to the matter of rehabilitation, stating that social-security disability benefits would remove the incentive from ill or injured individuals to rehabilitate themselves.

This argument deserves close examination. Rehabilitation is, indeed, vitally important and I yield to no one in the desire to encourage and promote efforts to rehabilitate and return to useful and fruitful life and work those individuals who unfortunately have been injured or disabled. As the report of the Committee on Ways and Means clearly demonstrates, the committee did carefully and thoroughly consider this whole subject in connection with disability benefit provisions. The committee states in its report: "We believe that everything possible should be done to support and strengthen vocational rehabilitation. Rehabilitation, where it is possible, is the most economical method of providing for disabled persons and is the most satisfactory for the individual." The committee, in order to avoid setting up barriers to vocational rehabilitation, specifically provided in the bill that a person who performs work while under a State rehabilitation program will not, solely by reason of this work, lose his benefits during the first 12 months while he is testing out a new earning capacity. At the same time, in order to prevent malingering, the committee included in the bill, as a specific safeguard, a provision that would stop the benefits of anyone, who, without good cause, refused rehabilitation available to him.

The arguments against disability benefits on the grounds that such benefits will prevent rehabilitation seem to ignore the very basic consideration that important as rehabilitation is, it cannot be a substitute for disability benefits, since (a) many disabled persons cannot be rehabilitated, and (b) even those who can be rehabilitated will need assistance during the process of rehabilitation. It is a mistake and misunderstanding to believe that a disability benefit system, as contemplated in the bill passed by the House of Representatives, is really antagonistic to or a substitute for rehabilitation. Actually such a system not only supplements but actually strengthens the rehabilitation program.

Dr. O'Neill may not be aware of the fact that the American Medical Association has taken a position with respect to workmen's compensation that the payment of disability benefits should make rehabilitation more feasible and effective. In December 1955 the house of delegates of the American Medical Association approved a report of a special committee on medical relations in workmen's compensation which stated in part:

"The physician's interest involves recognition that the amount and method of indemnification have a direct and important bearing on an effective rehabilitation regime. While overgenerous indemnity can dull the will for rehabilitation, inadequate indemnity requirements can destroy an employer's incentive to support rehabilitation by providing him with an easier or cheaper alternative. More important, inadequate indemnity can lower patient morale, or force return to gainful employment in advance of clearcut medical indications."

That report proceeds to discuss important relationships between indemnity and methods of indemnity to the rehabilitation effort. It seems somewhat strange, both from the standpoint of commonsense and from the standpoint of logic that the medical profession could, on the one hand, agree that indemnity benefits under workmen's compensation are necessary and at the same time oppose disability benefits for the permanently and totally disabled as an entire group.

No other arguments are provided by Dr. O'Neill in his letter to you. He completely ignores the numerous safeguards written into the disability insurance benefit provision of the bill as passed by the House of Representatives. For example, before an individual can qualify for disability benefits under that bill, he must be permanently and totally disabled as defined in the bill; he must have had at least 1½ years of coverage under the act during the 3-year period ending with the quarter of his disablement and he must have had at least 5 years of coverage during the 10-year period ending with the quarter of his disablement; and, in addition, he must be fully insured under the act. Benefits would be payable only after a 6-month waiting period. Benefits would not be payable to dependents of the disabled worker. Benefits would be suspended in the case of refusal without good cause to accept vocational rehabilitation.

All circumstances considered, the program of disability insurance benefits contemplated by the bill constitutes a very conservative program, and includes very tight prerequisites which much be met before a worker may become eligible. For example, the definition of the term "disability" requires inability to engage in any substantial gainful activity by reason of any medically determinable physical or mental impairment which can be expected to result in death or to be of long-continued and indefinite duration is more exacting than the disability provisions of commercial insurance policies now being issued, which permit a total disability that has persisted for 6 months to be compensated on the presumption that it is permanent until shown to be otherwise.

I hesitate to take this much of your time in responding to your letter, but I consider it so vitally important that the true facts about our Social Security System and the lack of any real factual basis for the malicious charges which have been made against it that the time to discuss these issues is warranted.

Sincerely yours,

CECIL R. KING,

The Great Conspiracy—The Soviet Road to World Conquest

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN MARSHALL BUTLER
OF MARYLAND
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, today, we behold a world divided not merely by geographical boundaries but also by antagonistic philosophies. One is based upon man's dignity as a human being, the other upon atheistic communism. This half-slave, half-free posture of world affairs and individual attitudes is a carefully planned conspiracy to which I, as a member of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, have devoted a considerable number of my weekly newsletters.

I invite the attention of my colleagues to these observations pertaining to the Soviet road to world conquest, Mr. President, by asking unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the newsletters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE INTERNATIONAL GAME OF CHANCE

WASHINGTON, May 2, 1955.—Once again, a seemingly changeable and inexact foreign policy, especially as it relates to the Far East, has brought this Nation to the brink of another major crisis, the outcome of which should be of great concern to all Americans.

Before proceeding further, however, let me state most insistently my fervent prayers that this country, and its allies, will not be "euchred" into a situation, the real nature and extent of which is beyond our present powers of comprehension. The word "euchred," in this context, is a deliberate choice, for by definition, the verb "euchre," in a game of chance means "the defeat of the trump-making side by winning three tricks." In my judgment, it is the one word which best describes the circuitous, almost masterful scheme, which the Communist conspirators are now attempting for the third time to perpetrate on the entire free world.

In this sense, I regard the "trump-making side," on all scores, as the community of free nations—all moral and ethical principles are inherently on the side of decency, freedom, and justice.

History already records the harassment and frustration which have accompanied the Korean Truce Conference of 1953 and the Far Eastern Conference, held in Geneva, Switzerland, in early 1954. Typically, and ingeniously, these discussions have been used as a propaganda device to facilitate the ultimate admission of Red China into the United Nations.

With complete disdain and impudence, the Red Chinese have ignored the provisions of the Korean Truce Agreement. In direct violation of this armistice and international law, they have imprisoned, without logical reason, American citizens, and the delay in the repatriation of these "forgotten men" has long since become the symbol of a betrayed trust. In addition, there is little argument that the Geneva Conference was a complete fiasco.

Now, we are importuned to sit down again at another conference. In the light of past performances, this, from our standpoint, could well be the third "losing trick." But, in any such international "game of chance," there must be some degree of risk, and I for one want to see the situation in Formosa settled quickly, if possible, as an affirmative step toward lasting peace. If a cease-fire can be negotiated with honor, if all imprisoned American citizens can thus be returned to their families, and if the Red Chinese demonstrate a heretofore nonexistent rigidity in the observance of the stipulations of all agreements, I would support the informed judgment of the President, consistent with the authority recently granted him by the Congress.

JOHN MARSHALL BUTLER,
United States Senator.

COMMUNIST INFILTRATION AND NATIONAL SECURITY

WASHINGTON, May 9, 1955.—All too frequently, we as freedom-loving people overlook the real meaning—or more aptly, the real menace—of the international Communist conspiracy. Unfortunately, we often seem to forget the creepy conquests of the Russian dictatorship, and the inhuman brutality and devious cunning of these conquests. As a dictatorship and conspiracy, world domination is the all-pervading goal. The evil operations of the Kremlin, its agents and pawns, influence practically every phase of our free society.

This penetration is ceaseless, taking many forms, and is but part of a precisely conceived plan. Responsible experts have concluded that more than 20,000 trained, hard-core Communist Party members continue to function in this country, mostly in cloak-and-dagger secrecy. Unimpeachable testimony records extensive and repeated exposures of Communist infiltration in our industrial and defense plants. In accordance with a basic Communist doctrine that "the end justifies the means," it can be accurately predicted that infiltration is a prelude to active sabotage and subversion.

With utter abhorrence of the frightening prospect of another global conflict, and with full realization of the delicate international situation, there is no alternative to preparation and security. We must be alert to any eventuality. It is in this setting that I have introduced legislation which would prevent access to all defense facilities of persons likely to commit sabotage, espionage, and other subversive acts.

As expected, the self-appointed saints of American liberalism, with neurotic denunciation, are attacking this measure on the grounds that the rights of workers will be violated. These deluded individuals endeavor to popularize such idioms that my proposal would result in "a lot less freedom but no more security." These unfounded assaults tend to cloud the true purpose of the legislation and the vital need for adequate precautions. Contrary to these assertions, this bill would protect the rights and freedoms of all Americans and simultaneously safeguard our Nation.

I would remind these self-styled liberals that: "Communism is the religion of the devil; it is a distillation of evil; it is the very anti-Christ. We will never be safe from this evil faith until it is driven back to the hell from which it came." These are the words of Adm. William H. Standley, a wartime Ambassador to Russia, who can, with authority, attest to the real meaning and foreboding of the Communist conspiracy.

JOHN MARSHALL BUTLER,
United States Senator.

A PAUSE FOR REORIENTATION

WASHINGTON, June 13, 1955.—This Nation's foreign policy respecting Yugoslavia, as a result of the recent, and much publicized, visit of Soviet officialdom in Belgrade, momentarily exists in a necessary atmosphere of indecision and imprecision. This needed pause for reorientation affords a calm, careful evaluation of the settlements reached between two countries dedicated, in varying manner, to the dogma of communism.

It will be recalled that in June of 1948 Yugoslavia severed relations with its patron benefactor when Marshal Tito refused total subservience to the Kremlin. Through this unprecedented breach, the community of free nations—in an early attempt at coexistence with totalitarianism—acquired a strange ally, an orphan of communism. Seemingly, with unusual haste, the origin and true nature of Tito's regime were ignored in a swell of economic and military aid.

In the years since World War II, the United States, as a part of its mutual security and other programs, has extended Yugoslavia grants-in-aid amounting to almost $644 million. This figure does not reflect military funds for obvious reasons. Curiously enough, while the Belgrade jamboree was in progress, the Congress was considering additional aid for Tito's Government.

Any appraisal of the effectiveness of this generosity would be shabby in the light of these late developments. The quiet and guarded renewal of diplomatic relations in 1953 should have telegraphed the intentions of these two quasi-partners to solidify again their mutual interests and problems—all stemming from the ideology of Godless communism.

While creating the illusion that the so-called neutralism of Yugoslavia will be maintained, it is interesting to note that the Belgrade conferences brought forth proposals, to which Russia and Yugoslavia affixed their approval, urging the admission of Red China into the United Nations, reunification of West and East Germany, peaceful use of nuclear energy, disarmament and the abolition of atomic weapons, the annexation of Formosa by Communist China, and others. This entire affair can best be characterized as another clever propaganda device, at which the Communists are most adept.

Much supposition surrounds the real motives of the mended Belgrade-Moscow axis, ranging from Russia's internal disorders to Tito's duplicity. In any event, the constant deceitfulness and depravity of the communist conspiracy must condition our future relations with Yugoslavia.

JOHN MARSHALL BUTLER,
United States Senator.

THE SEARCH FOR PEACE

WASHINGTON, June 20, 1955.—To suggest that our country should not participate in the forthcoming "meeting at the summit"—if it can be called that—is hardly a popular view. Public opinion has crystallized a pervading attitude, rightfully so, that every conceivable avenue of consideration in the search for lasting peace should be fully exhausted before any overt action is even contemplated.

With many of the unfortunate experiences of the Yalta and other conferences still fresh in memory, more especially as a consequence of the recent release of the Yalta papers, it can be reasonably assumed that our negotiations will reflect an enlightened understanding of rapport with the Communists. Moreover, we must never close our eyes to the real motivations, objectives, and treacheries of the international Communist conspiracy. The mistakes of the past most certainly must set the stage for any conference involving the extremely tenuous and complex problem of global peace.

At this point, it would seem timely and pertinent to observe that, in the past 25 years, the Soviet Union has been a party to 52 international agreements, 50 of which they have blithely violated. These have been the end result of some 3,400 meetings between representatives of the United States and Russia since 1933. But, in 7 or more years of discussions of more recent vintage, no semblance of accord has been reached on such major issues as the control of atomic weapons, the reunification of Germany, settlement of lease-lend, disarmament and world peace. Unproductive though this record might be, it nonetheless must be the setting for the coming four-power meeting, and we would be more than naive—if not indeed asinine—to expect that another series of discussions will cause an immediate or early abridgement of deep-seated differences between antagonistic philosophies of life and government.

Senator KNOWLAND, last week, properly summarized the sentiments of many when he said, "I do not believe we are bankrupt in our negotiating power. On the contrary, I believe we have an opportunity to cause some grave concern to the Soviet world." At Geneva, next month, the free world will be at another crossroad in history. Rather than peace at any price, the path to peace must be charted by a solid demonstration of honor and good will on the part of the Russians in conjunction with an unflinching willingness to remove from bondage the many enslaved people now trapped in the shadow of the Iron Curtain.

JOHN MARSHALL BUTLER,
United States Senator.

THE LEOPARD AND HIS SPOTS

WASHINGTON, September 12, 1955.—Are the partisans of world communism genuinely sincere in their recent grandiose efforts to create the countenance of men of good will, interested primarily in peace on earth? This question is on the lips of all God-fearing, peace-loving people everywhere.

Time, of course, will provide the answer. But the repugnant, historical pattern of world domination, conceived by Marx and Lenin, and implemented by the Bolshevik terrorists immediately following World War I and since, would seem to militate against an affirmative answer. Through constant and devious subversion and infiltration it envelops all it touches, and the free world—indolent, apathetic, and partially blind to the true nature and goal of the Red menace—often seems unable to summon the strength, the courage, and even the interest on which the very survival of freedom and liberty depend.

Let it not be forgotten that international communism has but one objective—world domination and total subservience to its philosophy and its ends—the accomplishment of which has followed a definite plan of several phases:

First, the overthrow of the Czarist regime in Russia after World War I for the purpose of obtaining a national base for international operations. Second, in the years prior to World War II, the consolidation of Russia under Communist control. Third, a program of expansion to assure support from surrounding satellite nations. Fourth, the instigation of moral, economic, and political turbulence in Europe. Fifth, the mastery of Asia by either direct or indirect means, the latter having proved most effective. Sixth, the mastery of Africa with its vast storehouse of natural resources. Seventh, the control of Latin America as a prelude to the economic strangulation of the United States. The fourth to seventh steps of this phased program have accelerated despite the recent conundrums at Geneva. None of these requires direct military intervention by Russia; on the contrary, results are obtained through the typical Kremlin-inspired tactics of subversion, subtle infiltration, and vicious propaganda. In the past year the scope of these tactics has been broadened to include a campaign of negotiated economic ties with the Communist orbit—thus the buildup of the Soviet merchant marine is no accident.

Since the meeting at the summit it would appear that there is a tendency to minimize the Red menace, and its spreading control in all corners of the globe. Rest assured the leopard has not changed its spots—our guard must not be dropped.

JOHN MARSHALL BUTLER,
United States Senator.

A MATTER OF INDIFFERENCE

WASHINGTON, October 10, 1955.—It is unfortunate that so many of our own people do not realize to this day the hazard of Communist infiltration of free institutions, that they do not recognize the footprint of the Kremlin in our Government, our labor unions, and even our schools. "What can 25,000 card-carrying Communists do?" they scoff.

Ask the people of Estonia, Latvia, Rumania, Hungary, Yugoslavia, and Czechoslovakia? Ask them how a handful of people in the right places were able to open the gates of their country and place the lackeys of Red Russia in the very seat of their governments? Ask the people of Germany what six men and a painter by the name of Adolf Hitler were able to do to their homeland? Ask the people of the Soviet what Lenin and a few faithful followers were able to do to the Russian bear and her untold millions of martyred people? Ask the Christian world what 12 simple men, filled with dedication and purpose, were able to do in transforming the spiritual face of the earth?

Dedication and purpose, those are the keys that give a single man the power and strength of an army. That is a point the scoffers might well heed. And, all the rest of us have to do to betray America is precisely nothing. Be neutral and indifferent. Continue in our complacency long enough, and all of our troubles will be over. Neither an honorable dead man nor a cringing slave worries about maintaining the strength and integrity of free institutions.

Some of our own good neighbors may be an unwitting accomplice of those who exploit the decency and the traditional tolerance of our country. Not, I say, because they do not love America, but because they do not know the evil that would enslave them. If they could clearly see the beastliness of communism and the falsity of its pretended concern for peace and human welfare they would surely be able to summon the moral courage and the necessary action to oppose this diabolical philosophy in all its many guises.

The problem of protecting and enriching the fundamental principles upon which the American faith is based may cause some differences of opinion. But the meaning of those principles, their value to the continuation of our way of life, and our firm determination to preserve them are elements on which the American people must remain united. These issues are beyond political partisanship. On this common ground we can meet any challenge, and with God's help, I know we shall.

JOHN MARSHALL BUTLER,
United States Senator.

IN THE BALANCE

WASHINGTON, November 7, 1955.—"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

It was thus that the great American tradition was begun. Here was the acknowledgment that man as a creature of God possesses a dignity which distinguishes him from the animal creation. He alone is endowed with the power of reason.

It has been upon this philosophy that our American institutions have been built. By our continued adherence to these fundamental truths, we are at the same time the envy of those who would destroy us and the hope of all men who cherish liberty.

Today we behold a world divided not merely by geographical boundaries but also by antagonistic philosophies. One is based upon man's dignity as a human being, the other upon atheistic communism. The latter, as its name discloses, denies the very existence of God. With equal fervor, it regards man as a mere slave, a pawn existing for the state. By false promises it deludes man's mind. It fosters dissention and creates turmoil. It first enslaves the mind of man and then by force and fear it destroys his liberty of action.

In an atmosphere of confusion, created by the false prophets of communism, the half-truths and the beguiling platitudes of their propaganda find so ready an acceptance by the unwary. In carrying out their program they are bound by no morality, for they recognize no moral law. Thus they lie, deceive, and by every diabolical tactic and device they penetrate, infiltrate and seek to capture and dominate man's every legitimate organization and institution.

There are many among us, however, who fail utterly to comprehend the magnitude of the menace or the proximity of the danger occasioned by the continual penetration of Communists and those who do their bidding. To them, I say it should require no extended argument, at this late date, to demonstrate that the problem of communistic infiltration and domination of our free institutions poses a constant threat to the maintenance of our hardwon liberty. The present counterfeit smiles of the Russians are but a continuing evidence of this menace, and should be dealt with accordingly.

JOHN MARSHALL BUTLER,
United States Senator.

RUSSIAN ROULETTE

WASHINGTON, November 14, 1955.—That a staccato of Russian inspired frustration and deceitful Communist propaganda has accomplished the present Big Four Conference in Geneva cannot be denied. Equally true is it that the international Communist conspiracy—its devilish purpose and method of operation—has thus been exposed and illuminated to the scrutiny of freedom-loving people everywhere.

Following President Eisenhower's dramatic proposals "at the summit" in July last, a new hope for world peace was born in the hearts of all men. An unprecedented period of seeming good will on the part of the Russians popularly called "the spirit of Geneva," has since had a far-reaching impact. This climate has been cleverly and carefully cultivated by Soviet Russia. Here, many said, were the genuine evidences that the Communists wanted to live in harmony with the balance of the world. Now, they added, tensions could be relaxed.

As a poet once wrote, "Is life, then, a dream and delusion, and where shall the dreamer awake?" Recent events in Geneva can only shake these dreamers to reality—a shuddering, stark reality which reveals, for all to see, the hocus-pocus and falsity of the Red menace. The truth of this conclusion is demonstrated by Secretary of State Dulles' statement of last Friday that the Russians have practiced "grotesque propaganda" in an "infamous" attempt to delude the world.

In the costumes of masqueraders and puppets, with a great fanfare of synthetic gentility and friendliness, the agents of the Kremlin have effectively stymied the Big Four Conference. From the outset, this has been their design. These partisans of atheistic communism have not changed. They never shall. Their hostile plan for world domination and subservience, as conceived by Marx and Lenin, drives them irrevocably. But, there is something to be learned from this recurring duplicity of the Russians. It is this:

"By the fruits shall you know them." So does the Bible warn against those who make prideful, hypocritical speeches of their high intentions but whose actions are the opposite of their words. This bibilical quotation states a principle so fundamental and obvious that it is difficult to realize how our sometimes wavering and confused allies—and occasionally ourselves—have missed its application to Soviet Russia.

JOHN MARSHALL BUTLER,
United States Senator.

THE DOPE OF COMMUNISM

WASHINGTON, November 28, 1955.—Any goal of world conquest, as envisioned by the international Communist conspiracy, must of necessity include the use of all possible military, political, and economic weapons. Among others, these include psychological warfare, espionage, subversion, sabotage, propaganda, and the promotion of internal strife—all of which have already been practiced with alarming success by the Communists. But, the minions of the Kremlin have introduced another thoroughly inhuman device—that of moral ruin—which has received little attention. To carry out such an objective the Communists have established a far-ranging system for the distribution of narcotics.

Official emphasis as to the seriousness, both present and potential, of this new threat can be found in the repeated warnings by United States Commissioner of Narcotics, Harry J. Anslinger, who has brought to light documented facts establishing that "the United States is a target of Communist China to be supplied with a flood of foreign-exchange-earning, health - and - morale - devastating heroin."

Commissioner Anslinger urged that this evidence "offers additional dramatic proof that we are not dealing with a petty adversary but rather with a formidable and far-reaching plot to gain foreign exchange (dollars) and at the same time to demoralize the people of the free world. Spreading narcotic addiction and obtaining funds for political purposes through the sale of heroin and opium is not just the policy of one man in the Communist regime. It is the policy of the entire Communist regime in mainland China."

Warfare, in the minds of the vast majority of our population, is pictured solely in terms of direct combat, and the horrible recollections of two world wars and the Korean crisis, with their vast mortality and destruction, are indelible memories. But, the all-inclusive concept of indirect, yet constant, warfare, as a doctrine of the Communist movement, is something new to most of us. The danger of this concept cannot, and must not, be taken lightly.

Communist tactics are aimed at the destruction of freedom and the will to resist. They are based on the principle that a country can be destroyed as surely and as easily from within as from without. The evil traffic in narcotics and drugs, with its demoralizing results, in combination with the other more familiar weapons of subversion and infiltration, is in accord with these objectives, and brings into clear focus another monstrous wrong which the philosophy of communism permits and promotes in its followers.

JOHN MARSHALL BUTLER,
United States Senator.

GREAT IS THE FORCE OF TRUTH

WASHINGTON, January 9, 1956.—In his message of last week to the Congress, President Eisenhower expressed the belief that the Communists have shifted their methods of operations. Instead of "violence, and the threat of violence," the President reported that the Communists are now relying upon "division, enticement and duplicity." To divide and conquer—an ancient device which, in the Communist scheme of things, knows no limits, respects no morals, observes no ethics.

Capitalizing on a mood of the times—universal hatred of war—the Soviets seek to accomplish their goal of world domination through tactics subtle and sinister. The Kremlin masters are admittedly dedicated to the overthrow of our Government, of our way of life. Yet with increasing clatter, always under the guise of so-called "liberalism," a significant minority in this country continues to attack and denounce—even pooh-pooh as ridiculous—the actions of our Government intended to safeguard our national security and freedom as we know it. Duped though these misguided, often well-intentioned, persons might be, they and all of us can take heed of President Madison's lasting words, "security against foreign danger is one of the primitive objectives of civil society."

Of late, these fanciful denouncements have been directed at the use of secret informers in matters of security, infiltration and subversion. On this point, J. Edgar Hoover, FBI Director, has warned: "The inroads that Communist propaganda has made in influencing law-abiding Americans, who fail to realize that criminal conspiracies are conceived behind closed doors under the cover of darkness, are disheartening. It is through the efforts of confidential informants that we have been able to expose the Communist conspiracy in the past and through them we must stake much of the future security of the United States."

Confidential informants are not something new. The Old Testament records their first use. Through the ages, as in our courts and law enforcement procedures, faceless informers have been the means of fortifying the absolute truth. To the press, and many of our financial institutions, the use of secret sources of information has become a custom zealously protected.

Freedom, liberty and justice are on the anvil, and it is utterly absurd to suggest that our destiny is to be shaped without urgent warnings and essential knowledge of any and all origins.

JOHN MARSHALL BUTLER,
United States Senator.

THE COMMUNIST MANIFESTO

WASHINGTON, February 20, 1956.—The full crescendo of military and political propaganda was unleashed last week by the leaders of the international Communist conspiracy. By its timing, one can only suppose that its purpose was deliberate. At the Soviet Communist congress, the remarks of party chief Nikita S. Khrushchev were pointedly phrased to dispel any wishful-thinking on the part of the free world that the Soviet empire would be torn asunder by internal disunity. More significantly, however, is the general impression that these vigorous top-level statements were intended to counteract the recent declaration of Washington, between the United States and England, which equally as vigorously accentuates the never ceasing menace of the Communist plot.

To understand the impulse of these fresh Soviet pronouncements is to understand the original battle plan of communism conceived by Karl Marx and Frederick Engels more than 100 years ago. These fundamentals, published as "The Communist Manifesto" in 1848, advocated the defeat of all enemies, not by armed force, but by a devious process of "slow-decay-from-within." It was not until 1903 that another Communist luminary by the name of Nicolai Lenin introduced the idea of the overthrow of freedom and liberty by force or violence.

In subsequent years, the Marx-Engels-Lenin dogma, in only slightly varying form, has dictated the growth of the Communist sphere of influence and control. For many years, the latter-day benefactor of world communism, Josef Stalin, firmly charted the course of eventual world domination. But now, the leaders of Red Russia, in a spasm of accusation, have attacked this atheistic idol by condemning "the cult of the individual as being alien to the spirit of Marxism-Leninism (in) making a particular leader the hero and miracle worker." With the knowledge that the seeds of the so-called practice of coexistence were planted during Stalin's regime, these latest proclamations suggest that the "slow-decay-from-within" philosophy, supplemented by armed intervention when necessary, is to be accelerated.

That this philosophy has succeeded is evidenced by the fact that the number of persons held forcibly under the Communist yoke has increased from 200 to 800 million in the last 10 years. This progress no doubt inspired Khrushchev's observation that "communism is on the march throughout the world, and will win through." The ultimate goal of communism has not changed in any respect since Marx defined it more than a century ago, and in the face of persistent activity, the free world must stand alert.

JOHN MARSHALL BUTLER,
United States Senator.

THE CHILL OF INDIFFERENCE

WASHINGTON, April 9, 1956.—"Today we stand at the crossroad. Our Christian faith is challenged—our country is on the defensive. * * * The world's spotlight is on the United States of America and China. On this stage will be resolved, either the eventual destruction of Communist domination or the complete enslavement and ultimate liquidation of the Christian world—the free world." With a depth of understanding, Bishop O'Gara, recently released by the Chinese Communists, places in focus for all to see the continuing war for the minds of men.

In the past, when the enemy was recognizable, the problem of defending our heritage—liberty, justice, and freedom—could be more easily met. Not so today, for within our borders and ofttimes in high places, the enemy has been found; and, even more frequently, we are unable to see him.

The conspiracy of international communism is the facsimile of an enemy threatening our country and Western civilization. The task of dealing with it is difficult, for at the threshold we are met with the startling fact that in the lexicon of atheistic communism there is no such thing as truth. Confusion is its greatest weapon. A thinly concealed piety of purpose is its principal tactic. For those to be destroyed are the first to be confused.

The danger lies not alone in the false doctrines which emanate from those who advocate communism, but in the apathy of our people toward the nature of this awful menace. Slogans of beauty to catch the unwary—promises to those whose desires are great but whose industry is negligible—first capture the unsuspecting mind. Then through fear, retain possession of it.

We have seen followers of communism and those who make common cause with them belittle its effect and degrade those who oppose it. We have seen its manifestations when men of large intellectual capacity but no faith in God would betray our country and subvert our free institutions. We have seen its allies spread evil over a large portion of the earth.

Some of our own good neighbors may be unwitting accomplices of those who exploit the decency and traditional tolerance of our Nation. Only because they do not know the evil that would enslave them. If they could clearly see the beastliness of communism and the falsity of its pretended concern for peace and human welfare they would surely summon the moral courage and the necessary action to oppose this diabolical philosophy in all of its many faces.

JOHN MARSHALL BUTLER,
United States Senator.

Q. E. D.—THAT WHICH WAS TO BE DEMONSTRATED

WASHINGTON, April 16, 1956.—Though not on the best-seller list, a recent report of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, of which I am privileged to be a member, has already gained wide popularity. This report is entitled "The Communist Party of the United States of America—What It Is—How It Works." To those who minimize the scope of the Communist conspiracy—to those who have been duped by the false platitudes of communism—to all Americans seeking to safeguard our bastion of freedom—this publication, reflecting as it does careful documentation, is sincerely recommended.

The opening paragraph, in terse terms, sets the theme of this very helpful booklet. It reads: "Founded in September 1919, the Communist Party of the United States of America is an organization unique in American history. It is not a true political party and differs fundamentally from all political parties in this country. It is in fact a Russian-inspired, Moscow-dominated, anti-American, quasi-military conspiracy against our Government, our ideals, and our freedoms."

Unlike the two major American political parties in which organization and discipline often leave much to be desired, the Communist Party, even within our borders, is a coordinated network of regimented agents, fully versed in the jargon, treachery, and objectives of the international Communist movement: "world conquest and more specifically the destruction of the American Government." As this Internal Security Subcommittee report states, "Since the Communist Party, USA, is in fact simply the American branch of the Russian Communist Party, it follows faithfully the conspiratorial pattern laid down by its parent body."

The report continues: "The Communist Party functions at all times of the year, every day of the week, and at all hours of the day. It is a full-time organization which is not restricted to election campaigns. It persistently seeks to permeate every phase of American life for its own subversive purpose. Communist agents may be found wherever and whenever there is an opportunity for Communist propaganda or the promotion of civil strife, whether it be the factory, the union, the church, the school, or the neighborhood. * * * Internally it thrives upon promoting clashes: between employer and employee, landlord and tenant, white and Negro, native-born and foreigner, Catholic, Protestant, and Jew; between the American people and their Government, and within every non-Communist organization."

Truly this is A Handbook for Americans for all Americans to read.

United States Senator.

HARDLY A STATUS QUO

WASHINGTON, May 28, 1956.—The ceaseless struggle between freedom and communism came closer to grips last week with the recognition of Red China by Egypt. Thereby, it is widely believed that the stage is set for another attempt to gain admission to the United Nations for Communist China. It is anticipated that out of the shadows of the Iron Curtain other countries will join in supporting this new drive to obtain a cloak of respectability for an aggressor nation.

This development poses many crucial questions, not the least important of which are these two: (1) What is the true relationship between Soviet Russia and Red China? and (2) how can this campaign in deceit be repulsed?

As to the first question, U. S. News & World Report magazine has published a condensed version of a book, titled "At Last—The True Story of Red China," written by a businessman, released only recently after more than 30 years in that country, which includes these timely statements: "The fact is, China has been conquered almost as thoroughly as if there had been a direct Soviet military invasion, followed by the establishment of a Russian-model military government that could control the cumulative power of 580 million people." Also, "Superficially it appears that the ties between the Soviet Union and Communist China are ones of partnership based on an identity of interest rather than domination of one by the other. But the evidence presented in this book demonstrates that China today is a giant slave state being exploited by the Soviet Union to conquer all of Asia as a major step toward world domination." Obviously, to admit Red China to the United Nations would be merely to extend and strengthen the tentacles of world communism.

To answer the second point, it may become necessary for the United States to exercise the much-discussed veto in the United Nations. The alacrity and frequency with which the Russians have used, or misused, this unusual power should dispel any moral or procedural reservations held by many Americans. Significant here is the incontrovertible evidence that the United States, in shouldering the burden in Korea, lost 33,000 young men with another 110,000 wounded or maimed—a costly sacrifice for the cause of freedom which Egypt and a few other countries blithely ignore in their mad haste to do the devil's bidding.

I shall continue to oppose, with all the vigor I can summon, the admission of Red China to the United Nations. The American people must face this issue squarely.

THE GREAT CONSPIRACY

WASHINGTON, June 4, 1956.—The world is today witnessing a transformation in windowdressing. With skillful propaganda and astute timing, the master puppeteers of the Kremlin are again embarked upon a campaign of duplicity, cleverly intended to lull the free world into an attitude of resignation—or an attitude of "let's get along with the fellows, they're not really scoundrels." It can safely be reasoned that the extensive travels of top Communist leaders, the announced reduction in the Russian Army, the latter-day denunciation of Joseph Stalin, plus other equally transparent gestures, are part of the same old package but with a new design and new wrapping.

Time and again, the Congress has found that there exists an international Communist conspiracy which, in its origins, its development, its persistence, and its present practice, is a worldwide revolutionary movement whose purpose it is, by treachery, deceit, infiltration into other groups, espionage, sabotage, terrorism and any other means deemed necessary, to suppress and subjugate Western civilization. In the face of incontrovertible history and mounting evidence, there can be little dispute on this point.

With an agility which can only come from decades of double dealing, it is possible for the Soviet Union to pursue a policy of "peaceful coexistence" or a policy of sympathetic support of actions to undermine the cause of freedom—whichever is momentarily profitable. It can even be said that both ends can be simultaneously served—witness the pilgrimage of Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia to Moscow while at the same time top military representatives of the community of free nations are being invited to observe the Soviet air force show in Moscow later this month.

You might ask, What can we as a Nation do to frustrate the international Communist movement? And, indeed, it should be made clear that the Soviets want us to lower our guard and that they want our attention distracted by side issues. The response to this question is contained in a more vigorous prosecution of anti-Communist legislation, increased exposure of Communist activities, and realistic warnings, widely publicized, of the dangers inherent in these new Communist tactics.

Make no mistake—the objectives of the great conspiracy have not changed. In the words of J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, "The Communist leopard frequently changes his spots, but the same blood—bad blood—continuously flows through his veins."

THE HOUNDS AND THE HARE

WASHINGTON, June 18, 1956.—Ancient history records the tale of Mithridates VI, King of Pontus and Bithynia (about 63 B. C.), who concocted a confection, composed of 72 ingredients, which he claimed gave him special immunity. Now, it would seem that Marshal Tito, of Yugoslavia, has hit upon a similar formula though the ingredients are considerably different and more in numbers. The principal ingredient would seem to be a curious blending of American dollars with the Communist teachings of Karl Marx.

Just 1 year ago, the minstrels of the Kremlin, who wander with a purpose, journeyed to Yugoslavia. By way of a return engagement, only recently, Marshal Tito, with much pomp and ceremony, made a pilgrimage to Moscow. Simultaneously, on both occasions, this Government was being importuned to send more economic and more foreign assistance to Yugoslavia.

It is interesting to note that, since the end of World War II, the community of free nations has furnished Yugoslavia nearly $2.5 billion in aid. Of this amount, the United States supplied an estimated $2 billion. In the sense that Tito has added more ingredients to his Mithridates, he has also obtained financial help from Communist-bloc nations totaling about $464 million equivalent.

Singly, and together, these events are fully consistent with the duplicity which has sparked the spread of world communism. The plan of operation never changes. Such a double and deceitful game was once described as "to hold with the hare and run with the hounds," or to run with the hounds as if to catch the hare, all the while being the secret friend of the hare. Those among us who have any doubts as to Marshal Tito's real motives might ponder the meaning of this old adage.

These two meetings have served to strengthen the Belgrade-Moscow axis. There can be little mistake about this. These two partners have again demonstrated a solidness of mutual interests, interests which fit the pattern of the international Communist conspiracy, interests which are contrary to those of the free world. Support of this point of view can certainly be found in the coming gathering of Tito, of Yugoslavia; Nehru, of India; and Nasser, of Egypt; all of which has been carefully cultivated in advance by the Foreign Minister of Soviet Russia.

The need for a reappraisal of our policy with all of these countries is now more pressing than ever.

United States Senator.

THE POLISH UPRISING

WASHINGTON, July 16, 1956.—Food, the staff of life—or, more precisely, the lack of it—was the springboard for the recent insurrection at Poznan, Poland. The inadequacy of food is a problem which has long plagued the Communist world. Until food supplies can meet the needs—something more than a meager bill of fare—of the Iron Curtain, the Kremlin manipulators face a major dilemma. The history of communism is filled with instances of agricultural innovations. The now forgotten Russian 5-year plans to the contrary, these experiments have not brought the desired measure of stability and sufficiency.

Probably the most notorious illustration of the manner in which the Soviets have in the past handled this problem of inadequacy was the manmade famine engineered in the Ukraine during 1932–33 to force collectivization (state control) on the Ukrainian farmers. It is difficult to estimate the number who starved as a result of this famine, but it was between 4.8 million and 6 million people.

A unique solution, indeed, to a difficult problem—destroy the people, and the dilemma takes care of itself. The mastermind of this diabolic famine of 1932–33 became known as the hangman of the Ukraine. He is the same Khrushchev who today masterminds the international Communist conspiracy, and who today endeavors to persuade the free world that he is a person of good will. From late reports, apparently only vast quantities of vodka will still Khrushchev's persistent nightmares of these mass murders.

It has been suggested that the Poznan uprising was similarly engineered to accomplish some devious Communist purpose. Certainly such a presumption would be in keeping with the duplicity of this foul conspiracy. But it might be more logical to assume that this was symbolic of a growing unrest among all oppressed people behind the Iron Curtain. It might conceivably trigger a renewed groundswell of hope for the liberation of these enslaved nations. To that worthy end, our Government and our allies must stand firmly with the courageous people of Poland. Anthony T. Bouscaren, director of the political science department of Marquette University, reflects public opinion on this issue when he says:

"Our foreign-policy theme must be liberation from Communist tyranny and opposition to a world half slave and half free. If the peoples behind the Iron and Bamboo Curtains know for a certainty that we stand on their side without compromise, the forces which caused Khrushchev to denounce Stalin will grow and revolts on the East German (and now Polish) pattern will become a possibility. And this time we must be prepared to act."

TWO BIRDS WITH ONE STONE

WASHINGTON, July 23, 1956.—Yesterday's newspapers, in reporting on Russian affairs, blazoned front-page headlines such as these: "Khrushchev Sees New Soviet Gains," "Bulganin Admits Unrest in Satellite Countries," "Bulganin, in Warsaw, Assails Vacillation in Soviet Ranks." Each of these articles spring from comments by the two Soviet leaders, and it would certainly seem that these mouthpieces for communism are engaged in an annoying sally of double talk. Through the years, similar contradictions have been voiced to achieve some timely objective in advancing the cause of worldwide communism. There is much reason to suspect the same devious purpose in these latest instances.

In denouncing and downgrading Stalin, a long-time Communist idol, the Kremlin masters in the judgment of many seek "to kill 2 birds with 1 stone." First, all blame for unhappiness of life behind the Iron Curtain is laid firmly at the feet of the dead Stalin. And, secondly, by carefully cultivating the illusion that the Soviet Union cherishes peace, these same dictators hope to convince the free world of the absurdity of further expenditures for armaments. When viewed in these terms, all mystery is shorn from the actions of the Communist regime during the past year.

Said another way, the Communist policy has returned to the popular-front device, fashionable during the 1932–52 period in this country, of wooing and winning the cooperation of humanitarian and democratic organizations throughout the world. People of good will are now asked to believe that communism, without Stalin, offers the only hope for a peaceful and ideal way of life. In all of this, with typical propaganda deceit and thoroughness, freedom, justice, and universal welfare are the major themes. But the lasting historical fact is that communism, with or without Stalin, is still tyranny. And this tyrannical oppression of the Soviet Union extends to 11 satellite states and some 700 million enslaved persons, with what could hardly be described as durable control—witness the recent uprisings in East Germany, Poland, Hungary, and elsewhere.

Transparency of these efforts "to kill two birds" is indicative in the reality that Khrushchev, while denouncing Stalin, has persistently refrained from attacking the doctrines of communism. The political philosophy of the Soviet Union is still, as always, based on godless communism, one of the most impelling objectives of which is the destruction of all capitalistic nations like the United States.

The 84th Congress Has Accomplished Much in the Public Interest—Obstructions Overcome Means America Will Move Forward

OF
HON. JOE L. EVINS
OF TENNESSEE
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, as we move into the closing days of the 2d session of the 84th Congress, we arrive at the moment when it is time to evaluate our labors of the past 7 months. It is time to look to the record and do a summing up of the legislative actions and accomplishments of this Congress—a Democratic Congress.

Our opinions, as Members of Congress, will differ and in some instances, will be no doubt in direct conflict. However, I personally feel that a true evaluation of our achievements and accomplishments will reflect a good record and portray a picture of great worth and merit—a record that will provide service and assistance to the citizens of this Nation and a record of great credit to the Democratic Party. The legislation which we have enacted during this session of the Congress has assisted this Nation of ours to move decisively in the direction of peace, security and prosperity.

The legislative duties and actions have been many and far-reaching, both on the domestic front and in the field of international relations. A summary review of the legislation enacted in this session will indicate the tremendous task with which this Congress—the 84th Congress—has been confronted and has overcome roadblocks and obstacles to bring about great achievements.

AGRICULTURE

The welfare of the farmers of this Nation and of American agriculture has been one of the most seriously considered problems of this Congress.

During the middle of the session, Congress decisively passed a bill to return farmers' crops to high price supports and to increase cash income of farmers through acreage reduction by authorizing a soil bank program. However, the President vetoed this bill, stating that he objected to the high price supports which the Congress has overwhelmingly approved.

Later, after several weeks of further deliberation, the Congress passed a second major agriculture bill—a watered-down version of the original farm bill. The second farm bill retained the soil bank program but called for flexible and lowered price supports instead of high and firm price supports, consequently, the increased income for American farmers will not be as great under the second bill as under the one previously passed by the Congress and vetoed by the President.

The soil bank provisions of the bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into contracts with producers for a minimum period of 3 to 10 years under which the producer would devote a designated part of his cropland to conserving uses. It further authorizes the Secretary to pay a fair share of the costs of establishing the conservation use and make an annual payment to the producer which will provide a fair and reasonable return for the land diverted to conservation uses. The cost of the program is limited to $450 million annually.

To further relieve the economic plight now being experienced by the farmers of this country, the Congress enacted legislation which exempts farmers from payment of the Federal excise taxes on gasoline and other special fuels used on the farm. This legislation is expected to give farmers about $60 million in tax relief annually.

The provisions of this bill extend to gasoline used in connection with cultivation of the soil; raising or harvesting any agricultural or farm commodity, including the raising, shearing, feeding, caring for, training, and management of livestock, poultry, and wildlife.

In the vital field of soil conservation the Congress extended for 2 years the authority of the Federal Government to make soil-conservation payments to our farmers. Individual cash payments are made by means of annual refund checks paid directly by the Federal Government to the farmer. To finance this important program the Congress appropriated $250 million for the next fiscal year and continued the maximum payment which can be made to any individual farmer participant at $2,500.

Two legislative measures pertaining to tobacco enacted by the Congress should give increased benefits to Tennessee tobacco farmers as well as to tobacco farmers of other States during the years ahead. One measure adopted by the Congress rescinded an order by the Secretary of Agriculture which would have reduced tobacco acreage allotments for 1956 by about 10 percent less than the 1955 quotas. This congressional action in effect increased the 1956 quota by about 10 percent and established the 1956 quota on the same basis as the 1955 allotments. Another bill approved by the Congress provided for the establishment of quota allotments for each year on February 1, instead of the previous date of December 1. Through this adjustment the allotment quotas will be based on more accurate and up-to-date information and consequently give farmers some time saving in their acreage allotment calculations.

Another aid to the farmers of this Nation, as well as to other interests, was the allocation of funds to establish research centers in various sections of the country for the purpose of studying the forestry program. One of these research centers will be established at the University of the South at Sewanee, Franklin County, Tenn., and a substantial appropriation has been allocated for this purpose.

Total overall appropriation provided for all agricultural purposes for the fiscal year 1957—the period of 1 year extending from June 30, 1956, through June 30, 1957—was $1,993,744,968. This is more than $1 billion more than was appropriated for agriculture during the fiscal year 1956. However, $1.2 billion of this year's appropriation is earmarked to finance the soil bank program. The remainder of the funds will go to continue the work of the Agriculture Research Service, Extension Service, Soil Conservation Service, Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention, Marketing Service, Rural Electrification Administration, Commodity Credit Corporation, Farm Credit Administration, and the other loan, credit, and assistance programs administered by the Department of Agriculture.

The farmers of this Nation would have received greater benefits under the first farm bill passed by the Congress which the President vetoed; however under provisions of the legislation approved, the farmers' plight should be somewhat relieved and American agriculture permitted to prosper.

HIGHWAYS

One of the major accomplishments of this session of the Congress was passage of a record $32.9 billion highway construction program—the biggest road-building program in this Nation's history.

This bill authorizes construction of 41,000 miles of super interstate highways which by 1969 will link most State capitals and other major cities from coast to coast. The total cost of this system will be $27.5 billion, with the Federal Government paying $24.8 billion and the States $2.7 billion. The remaining $5.4 billion will be spent on the primary and secondary highway system and on roads on Federal land.

This omnibus road bill, during the 13-year period, should put this country's roads in first-class condition, not only to facilitate traffic and commerce, but to also speed military communication in case of a national emergency.

Federal funds, under terms of the bill, will be allocated to the States on a matching basis, more liberal than the terms authorized in the 1954 Highway Act under which the Federal-State program formerly operated.

The matching formula for the Interstate System will be 90 percent Federal and 10 percent State. Allocations for primary, rural, and urban roads will be made on a 50–50 matching fund basis.

This giant bill should take care of the great overall need for improvement of the roads of our country, and particularly improvement on rural, farm-to-market routes and city streets as well as interstate highways.

The commerce and population of our country are expanding year after year, and in the main, construction of adequate highways has not kept pace with this rapid expansion. There has been little argument over the need for sound highway legislation.

This big road bill is another of the major accomplishments of this session of the Congress.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Preservation of the defensive strength of our country is the greatest guaranty of security for the free world against aggression.

With this in mind, Congress approved appropriations of more than $34 billion for the Department of Defense for the next year. This sum represents about $500 million more than was requested for defense purposes by the President. Of the total amount appropriated, more than $16 billion is for the Air Force—almost $1 billion more than the President requested. In recommending the larger amount of money for the Air Force, the Congress made an explicit demand that the extra funds be spent to expedite the production of heavy, long-range bombers for our defense.

There have been serious questions asked concerning this country's bomber construction program and it was the opinion of a majority of the Members of the Congress that acceleration of this program is necessary. This Congress felt that production of the giant B–52 bomber should be stepped up from the present light production schedule and the additional Air Force funds were appropriated for this purpose.

To bolster our national defense, greater emphasis is being placed on the application of atomic power by our Naval forces. The first nuclear-powered submarine—the Nautilus—is already in operation with our Naval Fleet, the second such submarine—the Sea Wolf—has been launched, and several others are in the process of construction and are included in the fiscal year 1957 shipbuilding program. Adequate funds were allocated by Congress to the Navy for the continued progress of this important phase of our defense program.

With the money which the Congress has appropriated for construction and research, the intercontinental missiles will be a reality in the near future. A portion of this research work is being accomplished at the guided missile center at Redstone Arsenal near Huntsville, Ala., and also at the great Arnold Engineering Development Center near Tullahoma, Tenn.

To help support our national defense effort and promote international security, the Congress has appropriated a total of $3.8 billion to be expended under provisions of the Mutual Security Act. Under this program, the United States provides economic and military aid and assistance to our overseas allies.

By cooperation with our allies in this mutual effort, the United States can obtain a far better defense program, and, according to many informed authorities, at a considerably lower cost. Military officials state that it costs $6,600 a year for our country to maintain an American soldier abroad, while it costs the United States only $789 to maintain an allied soldier in his own country.

Appropriation of this fund considerably strengthens our national defense network throughout the world. Through the cooperation of other free nations, the threat of war should be lessened and diminished and the goal of a secure peace made a reality.

EDUCATION

In the field of legislation affecting education, one of the most important measures approved by the Congress was enactment of the public library service bill which is primarily designed to assist in bringing books and library services to rural families.

This legislation authorizes the expenditure of $7,500,000 a year for a 5-year period—the funds to be allocated to States matching the grants for this educational aid and rural library service. The bill specifies that no State will receive less than $40,000 a year for library services. Control over distribution of the funds provided in this bill is left entirely to the States as is the selection of books to be distributed to libraries.

In many of the cities and towns of our Nation, there are in many instances excellent library facilities, making available to the citizens the great wealth of knowledge stored in books. This enactment should serve to improve, if not equalize, educational advantages in this regard for our rural citizens.

The adoption of an undesirable amendment, in effect killed changes during this session of Congress for legislation which would have provided States with Federal funds to aid in constructing school buildings. There is a definite need in our country for better school buildings and other facilities to improve our overall school system. As our population continues to grow, more pupils enter school and many of our institutions are now overcrowded and in need of better schoolrooms.

Notwithstanding this recognized need, there are many who fear the ultimate possibilities of Federal interference or control of our State and local school systems should any improper type of Federal aid to education bill be adopted.

During past years, the Congress has approved legislation which has provided Federal assistance to our school systems, but none of these measures have had racial or religious issues or restrictions included in the provisions.

During the debate on the Federal aid to education bill, one amendment was adopted which would have prohibited grants from the Federal Government to schools which failed to promptly integrate children of all races. Actually, the amendment would have gone further than the Supreme Court decision on the question of segregation. This amendment would have withheld Federal aid to schools unless integration was promptly completed, or within 4 years as a maximum time limitation. The Supreme Court decision placed no such time limit on integration.

Shortly after this amendment was adopted, the House voted to kill the bill—thereby removing any chance for further consideration of the measure during this session of Congress.

Of particular importance to our schools and our school children was the passage by the Congress of a bill which increases the allocation from $60 million annually to $75 million for the school milk and lunch program. This is another important and significant measure approved by this Congress affecting the health and welfare of our schoolchildren.

NATURAL RESOURCES AND DEVELOPMENT

A future power shortage in the Tennessee Valley area was probably averted through legislation affecting TVA approved by this session of the Congress. It can truly be said that this session of Congress has been a fruitful one for this agency of our Government.

Of major importance was the reaffirming by the Congress of TVA's authority to continue to use its own surplus corporate funds to install additional needed generating units at the John Sevier, New Johnsonville, and other TVA steam plants.

Under this authority, the Board of Directors of TVA can go ahead and use the agency's surplus corporate funds to add additional power capacity to these steam plants and forestall a predicted power shortage for the TVA area.

For the past 3 years there have been no new generating units added to the TVA system which would contribute to the agency's power system—and to complicate this factor, the demand for power is constantly increasing by industry, the REA's, municipalities, Government defense installations, and other consumers.

The TVA Board of Directors, recognizing that a power shortage was imminent, recommended to the Bureau of the Budget that four new generating units be started, one to be constructed in 1956 and the other three to begin in 1957.

The Bureau of the Budget adopted the board's recommendation, but then only recommended that the Congress approve sufficient funds to begin construction in 1956 for the one unit, then hinged the beginning of the other three units upon enactment of legislation of a complicated self-financing method which would have allowed TVA to issue bonds, but at the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and with other limitations and restrictions.

After many weeks of debate and long hours of hearings, the bond issue proposal was stalled and instead, the Congress reaffirmed TVA's authority to use its own corporate funds for the needed new generating units—thus giving TVA a temporary victory.

With this conclusive congressional authority, the TVA board of directors now have begun to build needed additions to the TVA power supply system.

This action can indeed be termed a signal victory for TVA and was only gained after bitter attacks by its enemies.

The TVA critics are on all sides and continually charge that this great agency of Government should stand on its own two feet. But these are empty charges because TVA is standing on its own feet—it is paying its own way and more in the many returns to the people of this Nation. It is also paying big dividends into the Treasury. Annual payments into the Treasury through 1957 will have exceeded $285 million. The navigation and flood-control programs of TVA are also paying dividends—in the form of increased river traffic and commerce and in the saving of human lives and property.

This great agency should be allowed to continue its progress—to serve the giant atomic installation at Oak Ridge and other defense installations—to continue to move forward in its navigation program—to expand its flood-control program—and to continue in every way to serve the people of our Nation.

Also of importance to the people of the Tennessee Valley area was the approval of the Congress of $1.1 million to begin construction of a new big dam on the lower Cumberland River. The lower Cumberland Dam, later renamed Barkley Dam, is one of the major dams needed for the full utilization and development of the Cumberland River. This project will greatly aid commerce and navigation, and improve flood control and also provide some 600 million kilowatts of hydro power annually when completed.

An important feature of the new dam will be the construction of a canal between the Cumberland and Tennessee Rivers just above the proposed dam, thereby connecting these two important rivers and facilitating river transportation on the Cumberland and Tennessee Rivers as well as the Ohio.

Late in this session of the Congress, the House-Senate Joint Committee on Atomic Energy recommended legislation to authorize construction of a large number of large scale and smaller atomic reactors to produce atomic electric power. These reactors would have been built, owned, and managed by the Federal Government. The purpose of the program was to further development of the art of producing electric energy from the atom and to put America ahead of other countries which are making great progress in this field. The program was to run concurrently with the atomic reactor program now exclusively conducted by private industry—which, according to many observers is bogging down and lagging behind the rest of the world.

This important measure was approved by the Senate but lost in the House by a small margin in the closing days of the Congress.

The measure will be reconsidered at the beginning of the next session of Congress.

Significant of other natural resource projects in our Nation was approval of Congress for the development of the land and water resources of the upper Colorado River Basin. This legislation authorizes a series of storage reservoirs with hydroelectric plants; irrigation projects and a comprehensive plan of development of the water resources of this great river basin.

To further help in the development and conservation of the water resources of this Nation, the Congress has initiated a number of new reclamation and irrigation projects in the West as well as furthering other important conservation projects. There was also approved legislation which authorized $500 million to assist cities and other governmental units to construct waterworks and other utility conservation systems. The Federal Government would contribute 30 percent of the cost of these installations to further control pollution of our rivers and streams.

VETERANS

In an effort to improve the various veterans programs of this grateful Nation, the Congress this year appropriated $4.7 billion for all veterans benefits, an increase of $20 million more than was appropriated for the last fiscal year and $8 million more than was recommended by the President. This Nation has the greatest veterans program of any nation in the world. This program includes education and training, insurance, housing, compensation and pensions, medical services and many other benefits for veterans and their dependents. These programs are being continued by the Congress at a level exceeding the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget.

With respect to funds for the hospital and domiciliary facilities of the Veterans' Administration, the Congress increased the appropriation by $21 million bringing the total overall cost to $51,635,000 for the next fiscal year. The veterans hospitals of this Nation represent an investment of more than $2.5 billion. Many of these buildings are the old Army cantonment-type and badly in need of repair and replacement. The additional funds appropriated by the Congress will get this work under way.

Included in this appropriation is $2,261,000 as the first installment toward an overall modernization program at the veterans hospital at Murfreesboro, Tenn. Also included is $1,500,000 for construction of a new general medical veterans hospital for Nashville and middle Tennessee to replace the old and inadequate facility of the Veterans' Administration.

Also of significance to the veterans of this Nation was the passage during this session of the Congress of legislation which will allow about 10,000 more widows of World War I veterans to be eligible for veterans pensions. These widows, because of previous legislation, had been disqualified from receiving pension benefits. This legislation will be of substantial benefit to many of the war widows who had previously been denied pension benefits.

This Congress has also approved legislation which provides educational assistance to children of veterans of World War I, II or Korea who died from service-connected disability. Monthly payments to the children range from $110 for full-time training to $80 for three-quarters and $50 for half-time training. This measure will provide educational benefits to more than 150,000 children of soldiers who died in the service of their country.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Another major accomplishment during this Democratic Congress was approval of major innovations in the social-security program which would give additional benefits to about 1,225,000 workers of this Nation.

The two major changes in the Social Security Act would, first, allow physically or mentally disabled workers to obtain cash benefits at age 50; and, second, reduce the retirement age of women workers from 65 to 62. The disability plan will take effect on January 1, 1957, and make about 250,000 persons eligible for benefits.

The lowering of the age limit for women workers will provide benefits for about 325,000 workingwomen and 275,000 wives of workingmen. The bill also will provide benefits to about 175,000 widows at age 62. The measure also extends old-age and survivors insurance coverage to about 200,000 lawyers, dentists, and other self-employed persons who have been excluded from social-security coverage.

The broadening and liberalizing of this legislation for the benefit of labor and working men and women of this Nation can be considered another major achievement of the 84th Congress.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES AND PUBLIC WORKS APPROPRIATIONS

As a member of the Independent Offices and Public Works Subcommittees on Appropriations of the House Appropriations Committee, I could not, with a true sense of value, list the accomplishments of this session of the Congress without stating briefly some of the major provisions of the two appropriations bills which I have been most closely associated.

For the fiscal year of 1957, the Congress appropriated $856,727,000 to carry on the public-works projects of the Corps of Engineers, Bureau of Reclamation, and the Department of the Interior. This was almost $10 million more than was appropriated for fiscal 1956. These projects are in all areas of our country, the New England Basin, the south Atlantic Basin, the upper and lower Mississippi River Basins, the Ohio River Basin, the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway Basin, the Missouri Basin, the Rio Grande and Southwest area, the Colorado River Basin, the Columbia River Basin, the Central Valley Basin of California—thus this ball can truly be called an all-American measure.

For Tennessee and adjacent areas, the Congress appropriated $2,900,000 to continue construction of the Cheatham lock and dam; $2,250,000 to continue construction of the Old Hickory lock and dam; and $1,100,000 to begin construction of the Barkley Dam, which I have already discussed.

It was through the work of the Public Works Appropriations Subcommittees that adequte appropriations and authority were granted to allow TVA to continue to function and to progress as earlier herein indicated.

The appropriations for the independent agencies of our Government is very important and carries great responsibility when it is considered that the appropriations are for some 18 agencies of our Federal Government.

The regulatory agencies in this group, which serve as arms of the Congress, need close attention by the Congress to assure a vigorous and effective prosecution of the law and programs administered in the public interest, health, safety, and welfare of the citizens of this Nation.

The independent agencies include our important regulatory Commissions and others.

These include the Federal Trade Commission which is an agency whose basic objective is the maintenance of free and fair competitive enterprise as the keystone of the American economic system by preventing monopoly or corrupt or unfair business practices; the General Services Administration, the housekeeping agency of our Government, which supervises Federal buildings, post offices and other building and Federal property management; the Federal Communications System which regulates interstate and foreign commerce in communication by telephone, telegraph, radio, and television; the General Accounting Office which performs an independent audit of Government financial transactions and serves as a watchdog on Federal expenditures, the Security and Exchange Commission which protects the interest of the public and investors against malpractices in the sale of securities in the financial markets and the Veterans' Administration which administers the vast veterans hospital program and extensive veterans benefit programs, among other of our important independent agencies of Government.

So Mr. Speaker the scoreboard of the record of this Congress is indeed a good one, much constructive legislation has been passed in the public interest. The Congress has moved decisively in overcoming obstructions and advancing in the direction of peace, security, and prosperity.

Unfinished Business of the 84th Congress

HON. ROBERT J. CORBETT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Speaker, the 84th Congress has acquitted itself with distinction in many respects but we must acknowledge that in some important areas we are closing the door on much unfinished business.

While the enlightened program of Dwight D. Eisenhower has been the spark and inspiration for the good legislation enacted by the 84th Congress, we have failed to set as outstanding a record as we might have done if we had followed his direction more completely. Let us take stock of those items left undone in the single field of health, education, and welfare as we prepare to "close up shop."

I refer you first to the President's state of the Union message January 5, 1956. The President said:

To fulfill the individual's aspirations in the American way of life, good education is fundamental. Good education is the outgrowth of good homes, good communities, good churches, and good schools. Today our schools face pressing problems—problems which will not yield to swift and easy solution, or to any single action. They will yield only to a continuing, active, informed effort by the people toward achieving better schools.

The need for additional classrooms was the core of the report that came out of the White House Conference on Education, which made history as the first conference on education ever called by a President of the United States. In 1955 and again this year, the President brought before Congress a sound, long-range program designed to bridge the gap between the present and projected need and the anticipated and reasonable increase of schoolbuilding by the States and local school districts.

This is the plan he offered for meeting one of the most urgent problems facing our people in the effort to achieve better schools:

So far as the Federal share of responsibility is concerned, I urge that the Congress move promptly to enact an effective program of Federal assistance to help erase the existing deficit of school classrooms. Such a program, which should be limited to a 5-year period, must operate to increase rather than decrease local and State support of schools and to give the greatest help to the States and localities with the least financial resources. Federal aid should in no way jeopardize the freedom of local school systems. There will be presented to the Congress a recommended program of Federal assistance for school construction.

Such a program should be accompanied by action to increase services to the Nation's schools by the Office of Education and by legislation to provide continuation of payments to school districts where Federal activities have impaired the ability of those districts to provide adequate schools.

The essential qualifications set down by the President were contained in S. 2905 which never saw the light of day. In the House these same essentials were embodied in the McConnell amendments which were defeated on the floor of the House. The final defeat of all legislation to relieve the critical shortage of classrooms is one of the tragic blunders for which we will be held accountable.

A vital piece of legislation which passed the Senate but became bottled up in Committee in the House is S. 3620 and its House counterparts H. R. 10620 and H. R. 11253. These bills which are identical in purpose would have authorized grants to institutions of higher learning and State educational agencies to encourage expansion of teaching and research in the education of mentally retarded children.

It is estimated that there are approximately 1.5 million school-age children and youth who are so mentally retarded as to need special help from the Nation's schools. It is known that thousands of such children who could profit by some kind of educational program are not in school; others are not provided with curricula and services suitable to their needs. The major limiting factor in providing for these children is the severe shortage of professional personnel trained in the field of the education of mentally retarded children.

The legislation I refer to would have provided $500,000 for the first year of operation, which would have supported approximately 200 persons in training to teach or conduct research in fields related to education of mentally retarded children.

In my State of Pennsylvania—and I am sure in many of the States represented by my distinguished colleagues the need for teachers for these children is both critical and distressing. How can we in good conscience go home without having done our utmost to meet this need in the face of the President's earnest request in his state of the Union message for "special attention to the problems of mentally retarded children"?

It is a matter of considerable concern to me and to other Members of the Congress that children generally did not fare very well at the hands of the majority in this session. Of course children do not vote, and particularly those children who are categorized as dependent, neglected or delinquent are sometimes forgotten in the press of the urgent business of some of our more impressive interest groups.

In spite of the Presidents' expressed concern for "increased child welfare services," and an "intensified attack on juvenile delinquency" the legislation that would have furthered both of these programs received little attention from either House.

Identical bills, S. 3297, H. R. 10283, and H. R. 10284, to amend and improve the child-welfare provisions of the Social Security Act, title V, part 3, were introduced in both the Senate and the House early in 1956.

The child welfare services program was initiated in 1935 to serve predominantly rural areas. By 1956, 21 years later, considerable progress in developing public child welfare activities in rural areas has been made. Today the number of children in the most urban State receiving child welfare services per 1,000 in the population is lower than the number of children in rural areas.

This legislation would have made it possible for States to make their own decisions as to where their need is greatest for child welfare work and allowed the use of the Federal funds in urban as well as rural areas. It also authorized the use of Federal grants to pay for foster care of children. Grants were also made available to encourage demonstration projects in special programs for children of either regional or national significance.

The Children's Bureau request for authorization for grants to the States of $12 million in 1958 and $15 million thereafter was amended to a flat $12 million.

Though hearings were held in the House no other action was taken.

The administration's legislative proposal contained in S. 894 and H. R. 3771 providing for grants to the States for the purpose of strengthening and improving State and local programs for the control and treatment of juvenile delinquency suffered a similar fate, in spite of hearings which were held by the Subcommittee on Juvenile Delinquency of both the Senate Judiciary Committee and the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Many witnesses have testified to the urgent need for grants to the States to enable them to improve the work of juvenile courts, probation services, juvenile police, and institutions for delinquent children. The need for funds to increase the opportunities for training professional and nonprofessional workers and to increase research work was repeatedly emphasized.

The most recent reports from the Children's Bureau indicate that the number of delinquent children coming before the juvenile courts in 1955 increased by 9 percent over those so reported in 1954. Since 1948 the total increase is estimated to be 70 percent.

This, unfortunately, like the weather is another problem which everyone talks about but no one does much about.

Another major item of legislation on which no action was taken is H. R. 7770.

Consolidated reporting of wages for income-tax and social security purposes was recommended by the President in his budget message, in which he stated:

> I am recommending legislation to reduce the frequency of information returns made by employers withholding income and social-security taxes and to strengthen enforcement of these taxes. These amendments will not only cut down the reporting burden on private business but will also increase budget receipts, especially in later years.

This administration proposal provides for receiving annual reports from employers of their employees earnings rather than quarterly reports as under the present law. This change would have eliminated some 200 million wage items a year. To further simplify reporting for employers, the employee-filed statements of wages and of taxes withheld would be used for both income tax and old-age and survivors insurance purposes.

Of course I am fully aware that any process that would simplify procedures, cut redtape and save the taxpayers time and money could not expect to win approval from my good friends on the majority side of the House.

In his state of the Union message to Congress President Eisenhower said, in requesting "a well-supported, well-balanced program of research":

> As an integral part of this effort, I shall recommend a new plan to aid construction of non-Federal medical research and teaching facilities and to help provide more adequate support for the training of medical research manpower.

In his budget message the President again called for "legislation to authorize Federal assistance for the construction of medical and dental research and teaching facilities," and he reiterated his request in his health message on January 26 of this year.

The administration's proposals, H. R. 9013, H. R. 9014 and S. 3252 provided for both of these programs by assisting professional schools to achieve a desirable balance between research and teaching programs. As we know, S. 849, which passed, provides for medical research construction, but not for teaching or training facilities. This is buying the cart without the horse to draw it. I ask you, of what benefit will the finest research facilities be if we have no one to teach or train those who would do the research?

The logic of this half a loaf escapes me, when we might so readily have had the whole loaf and thus met the dual need.

In 1955 and again this year President Eisenhower recommended to Congress legislation to provide mortgage insurance for the construction of health facilities. The recommendation was included in the Administration's Omnibus Health bill, S. 886 and H. R. 3458, as title II of that proposal. When the so-called baby omnibus health bill was drafted, containing the bulk of the administration's program, this important provision was omitted.

Obviously this legislation would have facilitated the financing and development of needed health facilities. It would also have stimulated on a self-sustaining basis, a continuing flow of private credit to finance the construction, expansion, modernization and conversion of privately owned and operated health facilities.

Also omitted from the health bill enacted by the 84th Congress was the provision for public health grants as contained in title V of the administration's omnibus health bill.

This title would have authorized grants for support of public health services generally and for extension and improvement of such services, as well as providing grants for special projects.

And that is not the end of our sins of omission.

In spite of the plea of the President in his health message and also in his budget message Congress failed to enact the administration's proposal for provision of sanitation facilities and services on Indian reservations and tribal lands. The administration bills, S. 3112 and H. R. 9150 and H. R. 9209, would have authorized the Public Health Service to conduct surveys as to the need for domestic and community sanitation facilities and to develop and keep current a program of projects for the construction of such facilities.

Sanitation for the Indian population has been neglected for so long that the sanitary conditions under which thousands of Indians live are nothing short of primitive. No other group of persons in the United States lives under comparable conditions. The Indian population is, in fact, about half a century in arrears with respect to the application of sanitary science to disease prevention.

Also there was the failure of this Congress to take legislative action to carry out the President's recommendation in his budget message, which I quote:

> I recommend the transfer of Freedmen's Hospital to Howard University, with provision for construction of a new teaching hospital.

The proposals contained in H. R. 11788 and S. 4132 are substantially in agreement with the recommendations made by the members of the Freedmen's Hospital Commission. This was a group of outstanding citizens with specialized experience and knowledge in the fields of hospital administration, nursing, medicine, and professional teaching, who were appointed by the Secretary of Welfare to study the complex problems affecting Freedmen's Hospital, Howard University's medical school, and the Washington community.

To have failed to enact this legislation deprives the historic and outstanding Howard University of an up-to-date and appropriate teaching facility and the citizens of Washington of a critically needed modern community hospital.

No more important nor courageous group of public servants exists in our entire Government structure than the officers and employees of the Public Health Service and the Food and Drug Administration. On May 29 a bill was introduced by one of our distinguished colleagues to furnish some protection for these devoted officers and employees. This bill, H. R. 11513, contains provisions for punishment and penalties for killing or assaulting Federal officers and employees of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare on official duty engaged in enforcing the food and drug or public health laws of the United States.

I am informed that there have been numerous cases of assault, bodily injury, and threats of harm to such employees in pursuing their course of duty. Can you imagine the reaction these people, who have dedicated themselves to the enforcement of the very laws that protect the health of ourselves and our families, must have for our callous ingratitude as we put on our hats and walk away; without so much as a concern for their safety?

Again may I refer you to the words of the President of the United States in his special health message:

> Since World War II the costs of medical care have been increasingly met through voluntary health insurance. More than 100 million persons are now enrolled in prepayment health-insurance plans of some type. But health-insurance coverage is still not available to many who need it, and the character and amount of insurance protection in important respects remains inadequate.
>
> Health-insurance protection must be made more available to older persons and those living in rural areas, to the self-employed and those working in small organizations who cannot be reached through ordinary group-enrollment methods. There is particular need for much broader coverage against the cost of long term or other especially expensive illness, which can be a financial catastrophe for many families.
> The need for more and better health-insurance coverage can best be met by building on what many of our people have already provided for themselves—the voluntary health prepayment plans. Much can be done to encourage more rapid expansion and improvement of such plans.

In line with this recommendation the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare presented for the consideration of Congress the provisions contained in S. 4172, H. R. 12140, and H. R. 12153. These bills provide for the pooling of health-insurance plans in order to extend their coverage and protection.

Although this legislation was introduced late in this session, we have had ample time to act on such a vital measure. It could now be law if our friends in the controlling majority had had as passionate a concern for the ill, the aged and the people of rural areas, who would most benefit from this legislation, as they will loudly proclaim throughout the coming campaign.

If they mean what they say they should recess this Congress until September and come back and complete much of this unfinished business of the 84th Congress before the November election.

The Democrat Party has a choice of going to the people with a horrid record of things not done, or of following the advice of our great leader Dwight D. Eisenhower whose inspired program for the health, education, and welfare of our fellow human beings should be promptly enacted. For the responsible Democrat Party to adjourn this Congress now is proof that they no longer deserve the confidence of the people.

How the Encyclopaedia Britannica Was Gobbled Up

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. B. CARROLL REECE
OF TENNESSEE
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the present study of the Ford Foundation-sponsored Fund for the Republic again points to the existence in the field of tax-exempt foundations of a number of serious problems.

The example of this fund under the management of Mr. Paul Hoffman and Mr. Robert M. Hutchins demonstrates the existence of a network of power and patronage of greatest concern to our Republic. Economic power and the power to mold public opinion rests in the hands of tax-privileged foundation managers. This power is not subject to any checks and balances.

In the American tradition of opposing concentration of power the TNEC, and before and after it, many congenial investigations and subsequent legislation have attempted to protect the public against the abuse of private control of our public life.

There has not been a comparable awareness of the dangers for our welfare that come from the concentration and the possible abuse of power in our multi-billion-dollar tax-exempt organizations. Because of the complete absence of public controls these privileged organizations can be used and have been used for political ends and as tools for the promotion of the private interests of some of their managers and their cohorts.

The purpose of a study of tax-exempt foundations is not to conduct a court trial by congressional investigation. Its objective is to explore free from any preconceived bias an existing social and economic condition. It should attempt to examine data that will give us a better understanding of the history and of the effect of tax exemption and of possible improvements of our law in the public interest. The hearings of such a congressional investigation serve the purpose of giving the parties an opportunity to present their facts, figures, and ideas. They are not meant to degenerate into a free-for-all of incriminations and offensive behavior. I had the intention of conducting the hearings of the House committee of which I was the chairman in such an impartial manner. Unfortunately, the sabotage of the committee hearings by a member of the committee minority prevented a collective and conclusive study of the subject in view of the time and available funds.

The reactions of the committee minority and of parts of a partisan effort were in themselves indications of the power of some of the tax-exempt foundations that we intended to study. If any confirmation of this power had been needed, its manifestations in connection with the history of this House committee have certainly convinced every fair-minded person.

An objective and continued study of tax-exempt organizations, of their fiscal and social, their legal and economic, as well as their subversive aspects, is as necessary today—even more so—as it was 2 years ago. We never did get around to study and to present to Congress a complete report on the concentration of economic, ideological, and political power in the hands of foundation managers.

Foundation spokesmen themselves have reportedly pointed to weakening in current foundation practices. They have criticized the practice of many foundations not to inform the public in understandable published reports about the practice of disguising business operations and fraudulent fund-raising schemes as tax-exempt institutions. Their complaints alone justify a further investigation of tax-exempt activities by Congress.

No doubt, the foundations recommending, and the ones adopting the policy of publishing detailed activity and financial reports, agree with me that tax exemption entitles the public to know what tax-exempt organizations do. All are aware of the fact that publicity of foundation tax reports is still very much a theory and that the practice of the United States Treasury does not facilitate the examination of allegedly public foundation tax returns. Even congressional committees find it most difficult to gather such data from Treasury offices.

An examination of these data is essential if we want an objective appraisal of promise or menace of tax exemption for America's future. All through history governments have fought the growing power and wealth of tax-exempt organizations in the interest of the public. Growth of tax-exempt institutions always went hand in hand with a growing burden on the remaining taxable pursuits. The dissolution of the Order of the Templars, the secularization of church property in many countries, the Reformation itself were due mainly to the withdrawal of so much taxable property from taxation that the economy could no more support the burden of reasonable public spending.

The return from tax-exempt funds quite obviously multiplies foundation capital much faster than corporate or other taxed funds will grow. The temptation to use these ever-growing funds for the political ends favored by foundation managers is ever present. Essentially under our system, they may use these funds for all, except political and nonpolitical educational activities is very difficult to define.

The Fund for the Republic is a good example of the tendency to take an active part in political propaganda and in partisan pursuits. Another well-known example is the involvement of the Carnegie Endowment for Peace in a most active and successful promotion of its peculiar type of foreign policy. The operation of the Ford Foundation in Indonesia at the present time may also constitute another example.

These are all indications of the existence of a patronage network operated by foundation managers. This network influences and sometimes controls our media of information, our schools and powerful cliques in both political parties. By strategically locating its men and by wisely using tax-exempt funds for favoring its friends it has gained a hold on many important positions, that deserves to be studied. The current concern with the Fund for the Republic and its president, Mr. Hutchins, suggests that we may look into Mr. Hutchins' activities as an example of the power structure that grows out of the control of tax-exempt organizations and results from their consistent political use.

The picture that presents itself from bits and pieces of available information is far from complete. It poses more questions than it answers. And it makes quite obvious that control of tax-exempt operations in the hands of skilled manipulators becomes control of our political and intellectual life.

The Encyclopaedia Britannica lists Robert Maynard Hutchins as chairman of its board of editors. In the Britannica Yearbook for 1955 it says that in 1950 he resigned from the presidency of the University of Chicago but continued as chairman of the editorial board after joining the Ford Foundation.

Mr. Hutchins then holds in addition to his job in the Fund for the Republic a second job equally important and spectacular, a second job that gives him a control position in American public life and public opinion. He certainly has succeeded in turning his university presidency into a steppingstone to prestige, to power, and to economic advantage.

As president of the University of Chicago, he had many opportunities for self-aggrandizement. Such is the power given to the presidency in such a major tax-exempt institution that under the guise of promoting the institution a shrewd operator can promote himself into commanding positions far beyond the objectives of the university.

Dr. Hutchins promoted himself into the control of the policies of the billion-dollar Ford Foundation. He selected many of its early personnel and beneficiaries and now, after having exhausted even the seemingly endless patience of its trustees, holds a sinecure paying an astonishingly big salary from the Fund for the Republic.

From his office as a university president, using funds of the Britannica, he launched an investigation of the American press. The Hutchins-Luce Commission on Freedom of the Press held American newspaper editors accountable—probably to the liberal friends of Mr. Hutchins—and it was therefore aptly called the Commission Against Freedom of the Press.

Mr. Hutchins, probably seeing himself a Thomas Jefferson of a future world state, launched the Committee To Frame a World Constitution. Under his direction, a preliminary draft for a world constitution was drafted. He signed that constitution. Did the trustees of the Ford Foundation and of the Fund for the Republic know that? Is it not a mockery of America if a man can become president of a fund for our Republic who, previously in a world constitution proposed by him, has ventured to abandon the Constitution of our Republic?

In a recent book on the Ford Foundation, the author, Dwight MacDonald, a man not unfriendly to the Ford Foundation, respects the well-known refusal of Hutchins to take the Communist Party as a serious menace. In earlier investigations Hutchins was asked to declare himself on communism. His answer, "I am not instructed on this subject," is characteristic of his shrewdness. The above-mentioned book attributes to Hutchins "a combination, not unusual with him, of logic and ignorance." It has been said that if Hutchins had ever studied a subject thoroughly instead of devoting his energy to the manipulation of men and of funds, he may have become a scholar; but then he would never have reached the positions of power, first in the tax-exempt university, then in the tax-exempt Ford Foundation and finally in the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

As a manipulator of men and organizations, Hutchins has refused the Machiavellian technique of using others as fronts to reach his goals.

The history of the Encyclopaedia Britannica is an excellent example of this technique of using power to get more power. The importance of the job of a chairman of the editorial board of the encyclopedia is illustrated by the policy of constant revision established in 1932. Since 1938, there have been more than 15 revised printings. In each of these more than 2 million words were changed. What an opportunity to indoctrinate the American people with one's idea on world government, freedom, the United Nations, foreign policy concepts, socialism, and so forth.

The place of the dictionary and of the encyclopedia in America is a unique one. In no other culture do dictionaries and similar reference books have such an importance in the life and learning of the people. The prestige of encyclopedias and dictionaries makes them unquestioned sources of authoritative information. The passion of the American for facts as documented by popular games and quiz programs is indicative of the nationwide occupation with the type of information offered by encyclopedic publications. The average American believes to have in his encyclopedia an arsenal for the searching mind, an objective source of reliable information, and a tool for intelligent participation in public affairs.

Because of their prestige and their impact on public opinion, encyclopedic books are a favorite target of the propagandist. Any distorted presentation of ideas and facts carried in a reference book promises to influence readers for a long time to come. Unlike the ephemeral impact of periodical and pamphlet literature, an article in an encylopedia will mold the minds of generations of students, of teachers, and of opinion leaders, the type of literate citizens who consult a reference book before making up their minds.

The propaganda experts of the Soviet Union have long ago recognized this for a fact. They have written and are rewriting history to suit their politics. At times their encyclopedia editors may find it hard to keep up with the fast changes of their official versions and interpretations of events. Similarly, when Hitler came into power, many of the German lexicons were edited, cut, rewritten to suit the new propaganda line.

The editor of an encyclopedia very often reflects the fashionable thought of its time. Sometimes, as in the often investigated case of the Encyclopedia of Social Sciences—financed by foundation funds—he becomes an instrument of factional pressure groups who exploit the grand opportunity for long-lasting propaganda, to impose their philosophies and social and political theories on the learning American public. In doing so they follow more the traditions of the French encyclopedists who were in business for propaganda, than that of the Royal Society that aimed for classification of factual controversy.

There has yet to be published a reference book that will point out to its readers the controversy in all the issues and facts presented. Such an ideal reference book will present the two or several opinions on the subjects covered. It will warn its readers of ideological traps and give them encouragement and opportunity to make up their minds for themselves. As it stands today, however, the very magnitude of the editorial job makes it possible for men with axes to grind to infiltrate the encyclopedia writing staff and to supplement the miserable word rates of 1 or 2 cents per word that they receive for their research and writing with the substantial satisfaction of imposing their partisan thought on millions and generations of more or less intelligent readers.

The importance of authorship by men with an ax to grind is not alone the impact of partisan subject matter on the reader. Because many of these articles carry the author's signature in a respected encyclopedia, the author gains added prestige and he becomes under sponsorship of his publisher an authority.

Consequently, control of a respected encyclopedia means power in the world of ideas and of the intellect. It means power over the readers and the teachers and students who turn to it for the truth. It means power over the minds of the writers who in their livelihood or in their professional prestige depend on the appearance of their contributions. It means, beyond this, power over the minds of those who prepare themselves to contribute and who will act and write so that they may remain acceptable to the mighty publisher and his editorial organs.

Unfortunately, for at least one writing generation now, this magic prestige giving effect of encyclopedia writing has been exploited nearly exclusively for the benefit of the Socialists of all hues. Consequently, the taint of interventionism and reformism in all shades and forms is prevalent in these books. The infiltration of the American mind with intellectual and political concepts of such bias is nearly complete. A whole generation of teachers, textbook authors, ministers, journalists, labor leaders, and other opinion operators has never had a chance to become acquainted with ideas and arguments other than materialistic, anticonservative, and utopian. For more than three decades now our legislation and our foreign policy and the public opinion behind them have reflected this distorted and one-sided presentation of public problems.

The great expense connected with the creation of an encyclopedia accounts for a similarity between most reference books. Ideas and factual data in one such work are often lifted from another. For instance, the Encyclopedia of Social Sciences, published in the thirties, was freely used by later reference books. In this manner ideas of Alvin Johnson, Harold Laski, Max Lerner, Bernard J. Stearn, Oskar Jaszi, Lewis Lorwin, and similar authors are reflected in other encyclopedic books. The resulting prestige produced, in addition to profitable lecture invitations, teaching and Government jobs, book articles, and textbook assignments, broadcasting programs, and so forth. The core group of editors and contributors became a powerful faction by mutual endorsement. It found easy acceptance by learned journals, professional organizations, book review sections and in the resulting mushroom growth of influence gained decisive influence on public thought.

If this can happen in a surreptitious way by mutual support of the professional writers employed to produce the text—how much more influence can result from a well-conceived strategy of a publisher using his encyclopedic publication consciously to influence public opinion?

This brings us to the main problem of the Encyclopaedia Britannica and its influence on American thought. Today, the Encyclopaedia Britannica and its affiliated and associated activities have become such a major factor in our public and intellectual life that it overshadows in importance and impact all other book publishing ventures.

In May 1942, William Lygate in the Saturday Review of Literature surveyed the history of the Encyclopaedia Britannica from its beginning in 1768 to its ownership by the house of Sears, Roebuck and Co. By 1942, this classic reference book had developed into a 32-million-word giant. Its 14th edition had cost $2 million to prepare and appeared 6 weeks before the stock market crash of 1929. In spite of losses in the publishing of the encyclopedia during the depression, Sears, Roebuck and Co. kept the famous old publication alive and in 1932 so reorganized its operations that revisions became a continuous activity. The resulting economies eliminated losses within 2 years. Three years after the editorial reorganization the publication began to make money again. The addition of the Britannica yearbooks and the establishment of a service offering answers to 50 questions free of charge to subscribers added to the popularity of the book. In 1939 as a result of radio promotion, sales and popularity of the encyclopedia continued to grow. In 1942 domestic sales alone reached $4 million. Considering this the encyclopedia was certainly one of the most important if not the most valuable reference-book publishers' property in the United States. It appeared somewhat misplaced under an ownership best known at that time for a successful operation of mail order merchandising and a growing chain of department stores, but not identified as a purveyor of scholarly publications.

The further fate of the encyclopedia may be best described by its reflections in the press. Thanks to the activities of several press agents, we have a play-by-play description of what the parties involved wanted the public to know. On January 30, 1943, Publishers Weekly blandly reported: "By outright gift from Sears, Roebuck and Co. the University of Chicago has acquired full property rights in the Encyclopaedia Britannica." The president of Sears, Roebuck in making the gift had declared: "As one of the great universities of the world, the University of Chicago is best equipped to conduct an enterprise of such educational importance as the Britannica." After acquisition of the enterprise Sears had successfully operated the publication for over 20 years. It was carried in its book at $1. The gift was in the traditions of the philanthropic Rosenwald family, a benefactor of Chicago University for many years.

As Publishers Weekly reports at the time of the donation, sales were good for the 24-volume sets and the annual supplements. At the same time Newsweek reported the gift and explained that Sears had decided that publication of the encyclopedia was scarcely a proper part of its retail business. "Had it not been for the generosity of Sears," the Britannica would have gone out of existence during the depression. It had been saved by the philanthropic efforts of Sears, Roebuck and was given to the university, a result of old cordial relationships between Sears and the institution of learning. The gift included the Junior Britannica and other connected minor publications.

The University of Chicago magazine about the same time published a version of the story accompanied with a photograph of smiling William B. Benton, then the university's part-time vice chancellor, and reported:

> There were 35 million words in the mouth of the gift horse which came to Chicago last month from Sears, Roebuck and Co.

Sears had long felt that the encyclopedia, a corporate entity, was an anomalous item on its books, and arrangements by which it was given to the university were completed in January. Gen. Robert E. Wood, the chairman of Sears, was instrumental in deciding on this donation. Vice Chancellor William Benton, instrumental in the arrangements, took over the chairmanship of the board of the Encyclopaedia Britannica, Inc., and President Hutchins also became a member of the still not completed organization. The university magazine explained:

> The encyclopedia is also anomalous as a university possession, although to a smaller extent than as the possession of a mail-order house. Only rarely have universities owned going businesses, their managements usually preferring the smaller but surer income from security holdings. The Britannica setup, however, is so arranged that the university will profit as the corporation profits but will not lose if the corporation loses.

The value of this gift was emphasized in this university publication by referring to the encyclopedia as the "oldest and most famous continuing publication in the world." However, in the university magazine, at this occasion no specific information about the legal provisions of the gift and of the succeeding arrangements between the university and any third parties was offered.

Time magazine, on February 1, 1943, apparently after interviewing officials of Chicago University, shed some light on the further development after the donation had been made by Sears. It reported:

> Sears' gift to the university was engineered by University of Chicago's kinetic vice president, William Benton. * * * He sees the Britannica as a logical adjunct to University of Chicago, which has always had a flair for combining scholarship with good publicity.

The story carries a picture of Benton captioned "He Took Stock in a Name," and explains that since the gift did not include the Britannica's—that is, Sears'—working capital and the university trustees did not want to risk endowment capital—why?—what were they told?—

> Result: Bill Benton himself agreed to put up whatever might be needed to keep it going, took an unnamed percentage of the stock from University of Chicago to back his investment. The university has an option to buy his stock (for the sum he put into it plus no interest) if the going is good, a further option on the whole works at 42-year-old Bill Benton's death. Meanwhile, Benton will devote at least part of his ample talents to making the university's gift pay.

Whatsoever the motives of the university trustees may have been, Sears, Roebuck and Co. knew nothing about this arrangement before its generous gift of an asset worth many million dollars was made. After the gift was made, Sears had no more right to interfere with university arrangements. Presumably they had meant to donate the publication to the educational nonprofit tax-exempt institution in the intention to have all its benefits accrue to the university.

In October 1955 Gen. Robert E. Wood was asked the following questions:

> 1. Did Mr. Benton who, according to Hutchins, conducted the negotiations with you, indicate that he was to become personally the owner of two-thirds of the common stock of the enterprise donated to Chicago University?

2. Did you intend to donate this asset to the university as a charitable gift?

3. Mr. Hutchins in his report on the state of the university implied that Sears approved of the arrangement with Benton personally (not in his capacity of vice president of the university). Is he correct?

General Wood answered on November 9, 1955:

1. I was not advised that Mr. Benton was to become the owner of some of their common stock prior to the gift to the university. After the gift was made I was advised of this.

2. The intention was to donate this asset to the university as a charitable gift.

3. I am not familiar with Mr. Hutchins' report. However, as the arrangement with Mr. Benton was made after Sears made the contribution to the university, Sears had no authority to either approve or disapprove the arrangement with Mr. Benton.

Chicago University under Hutchins adopted a code of educational ethics that would exclude its staff from benefits in excess of their salaries resulting from their academic office. Robert M. Hutchins himself had repeatedly made the statement "education asks no profit." In an article in the Chicago Daily News, as president of Chicago University—February 17, 1944—he announced the formal adoption in 1943 of the principle previously advocated by him that neither the university nor faculty should profit financially from research conducted at the university. All earnings of faculty members from work done outside the university, including royalties on books, lecture and consultants' fees, and similar activities should be turned back to the university. The articles of the encyclopedia at least partly written by university staff members must have been subject to this strict rule and one can only wonder how the acquisition of substantial rights in the encyclopedia property by university officials, if not in conflict with the purpose of the donation, can be reconciled with Mr. Hutchins' article, "Education Asks No Profit." He says about books of professors:

The board of trustees agrees that the only practical way in which you can make sure that professors are doing the work, making the speech, or writing the book, solely for the usefulness of the outside activity and not for the money that is in it, is to take the money away and use it for the university.

The terms of investment most likely but certainly in terms of power, William B. Benton has done well by his transaction with Chicago University. Some light on the further development of his strange partnership with this institution of learning is shed by successive presidents' reports on the state of the university.

In his annual report after acquisition of the encyclopedia, Mr. Hutchins gave only a very hazy picture of the deal with Benton. The generosity of Gen. Robert E. Wood, of the board of Sears, Roebuck and Co., was praised and correctly stated that General Wood had decided that the encyclopedia should be owned by some university and that he had finally after previous negotiations for a sale of the assets of the encyclopedia, made a still more generous offer to give it to the University of Chicago. The report goes on to say:

Mr. Benton, vice president of the university, was very active in the negotiations with Sears and in seeking for sources of working capital, and finally became so much interested that to make it possible for the university to accept the gift he offered to provide the working capital himself. The university thereupon accepted General Wood's proposal. Mr. Benton was given two-thirds of the common stock of the corporation, the university retaining the preferred stock. Mr. Benton gave the university an option to buy half his stock at cost after 18 months and a further option on the balance of his stock at his death.

Mr. Hutchins in his report claims that "that arrangement was accepted by the board of trustees and by General Wood." In no place could there be found a published record on the following obvious questions. Who owns or did own the last third of the corporate stock? What, if any, compensation did R. M. Hutchins and other university officials including Benton receive from the encyclopedia since the year 1943? Why does Chicago University not exercise the option mentioned in Time magazine of February 1, 1943?

The encyclopedia was at the time of the donation not a broken-down corporation. Hutchins expected for the first year, $150,000; royalties to be paid to the university and $45,000 in the form of fellowships, and support of the university radio program Human Action. Mr. Hutchins expressed his thanks for the donation in the following words:

The university records its gratitude to General Wood and the board of directors of Sears, Roebuck and Co. for their contribution to the university's welfare and to the cause of scholarship and popular education.

In 1944 Mr. Hutchins reported that the university had received $159,141 for the editorial advice of the faculty for the year ending January 31, 1944, and $25,780 for the support of the radio program Human Events. In addition, the Britannica supported 18 fellows with an average annual stipend of $1,500 each, a total of $27,000.

In November 1943 the Encyclopaedia Britannica Corp. acquired from Western Electric Corp. the ERPI classroom films and changed their name to Encyclopaedia Britannica Films, Inc. This placed the university, through its affiliate corporation, the Britannica, in leading position for the distribution and production of sound films. Thus, the Encyclopaedia Britannica Corp. became the preeminent producer and distributor of educational films in the United States. Shortly thereafter, the university received from Eastman Kodak the donation of its huge library of educational silent films. The Eastman Kodak Co. was led in this donation by the same philanthropic considerations as the Sears, Roebuck Co. in its gift to the university. Mr. Hutchins was already chairman of the board of the Britannica committee and also chairman of the executive committee of the film corporation. The films donated by Eastman Kodak became part of the Britannica program.

Mr. Hutchins in 1947 reported that though the university then still owned only the preferred stock of this corporation it had received in the years 1946-47 royalties of $400,000. Britannica, Inc., has rapidly expanded since its affiliation with the university. One of the projects which it undertook was the publication of a set of Great Books of the Western World which appeared in June 1948. The university had spent $10,000 for furthering the Great Book program. Then the Britannica began its publishing project and Mr. Hutchins became editor in chief of this series. For this purpose Hutchins took leave of absence from the university for 9 months from October 1, 1946.

In 1949, Hutchins reported that the university had received in cash $1,774,343 from Encyclopaedia Britannica, Inc. Britannica's sales had increased approximately fivefold from the acquisition of the property by the university. This increase created a shortage of working capital that caused the university to accept a million dollars in notes of the company in lieu of current royalties. These notes were in addition to the cash payments of $1,774,343.

In January 1951 Time magazine called the Encyclopaedia Britannica one of the most prosperous properties of the University of Chicago. William Benton had then already become Senator of Connecticut but still headed the Encyclopaedia Britannica's board of directors. Robert Hutchins, after his retirement as chancellor of the university, still presided over the encyclopedia's board of editors.

The boom in the sales of the encyclopedia succeeding the gift to Chicago University has never stopped. In 1944, Business Week pointed to the fact that wartime sales were limited only by reduced paper quotas and printing facilities. The Britannica claimed that since 1939 it had experienced an annual sales increase of nearly 35 percent.

In November 1944, William Benton reported that he really considered himself a fiduciary for the university and that the protective restrictions contained in his agreement with the university had given him full management responsibility without hope of dividends. But the fact remains that Benton and Hutchins—both now separated from Chicago University—continue to control an instrument of power by reason of their previous functions as officers of a nonprofit tax-exempt organization.

Future investigations may disclose the answers to the following questions:

What, if any, are the financial rewards collected by Hutchins, Benton, and their clique from the encyclopedia?

Who owns the one-third common stock not given to Benton originally?

Why does Chicago University leave control of this enterprise to Hutchins and Benton instead of making use of its option to repurchase the common stock held by Benton?

This example of the mixing of power politics and of private gains with the management of a tax-exempt university operation would be incompletely presented if I did not offer you additional bits and pieces of illustrative information. Though only incidental and incomplete fragments of a larger picture, they demonstrate the degree of interrelationship of business and charity in the Hutchins network of economic and intellectual patronage.

Here are some of the highlights:

Hutchins promoted the Great Book program of adult education. The encyclopedia published a high-priced edition of the Great Books under Hutchins as editor. Hutchins took 9 months' leave of absence from the university to edit the Great Books for the Encyclopaedia Britannica Corp.

There exists for the promotion of these Great Books a nonprofit, tax-exempt Great Book Foundation created by the university and the Britannica in 1943. Will you be surprised if I tell you that this Great Book Foundation received many hundred thousand dollars from one of the Ford funds? The Great Book Foundation in 1955 operated on a two million annual budget. Contributions came in 1955 from the University of Chicago, $131,000; from the Ford Fund for Adult Education, $775,000; from the Old Dominion Fund, $50,000; from Paul Hoffman—royalty of his book, Peace Can Be Won—$23,000; from the Encyclopaedia Britannica, $81,000; and from six other tax-exempt foundations, $63,000.

These funds undoubtedly helped promote the publication sales of the Great Books of the Western World and the Great Ideas—of a business venture under the editorial direction of Hutchins and under the management of Benton, a venture in which the Britannica Corp. had invested $1 million.

Another Ford fund donation of $220,000 was given to the Film Council of America. We have seen how the Encyclopaedia Britannica, a profit-making corporation, became the dominating distributor of classroom films. It gained its leading position in this field by benefiting from donations of films to the tax-free university by the Eastman Kodak Co., in 1943.

Will it surprise you that Hutchins made the head of the Britannica Films, Inc., Mr. Scott Fletcher, in 1951, head of the same Ford Fund for Adult Education that in 1955 so generously donated hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Film Council of America?

Among the directors of the Encyclopaedia Britannica listed in Poor's Register for 1956, we find the following names in addition to Hutchins and Benton.

Beardsley Ruml, another former officer of the University of Chicago, a former executive of the tax-exempt Laura Stillman-Rockefeller Foundation—a professional executive of nonprofit tax-exempt operations and now also a director of the Ford Fund Resources for the Future, Inc., thanks to Hutchins.

Walter Paepcke of the Container Corporation of America is also, due to Hutchins, a director of the Ford Fund for the Advancement of Education.

Paul Hoffman of the Studebaker Co., of the Committee for Economic Development of the Economic Cooperation Administration, etc., became with Hutchins' help first president of the Ford Foundation and is now chairman of the board of the Fund for the Republic.

Among the other directors:

Curtis H. Gager of General Foods and of the Committee for Economic Development and Robert C. Praeble with a background in Marshall Fields' empire of publishing encyclopedia books competing with Britannica.

Of the directors of the Encyclopaedia Britannica Films, Inc.:

George M. Shuster of Hunter College, New York City, made the grade as a director of the Fund for the Republic. Another director is Adlai Stevenson. The circle of influential members of the Hutchins-Benton-Hoffman network of patronage is great; it reaches into politics, into business, into foundations.

In view of the power of this network around the Encyclopaedia Britannica you can well understand the pressure in defense of R. M. Hutchins. You may have heard of a Treasury investigation of the tax-exempt status of the Fund for the Republic. The obvious political bias of the management of this fund marks it clearly as a political pressure institution for which tax exemption may not be granted. Yet it looks as if the powers supporting Hutchins and benefiting from his past and present power positions may be stronger than the law. Quite recently Victor Riesel, the labor columnist who has lost his eyesight as a result of his attacks on labor racketeers, has asked: "Why does the Fund for the Republic not study the injustices and the restraints of freedom in our labor unions?" I presume this and many other questions will have to wait for a new study of tax-exempt activities. In the meantime, all we can do is point to the existing and unexplored dangers for our Republic that rest in an unchecked and uncontrolled—if not uncontrollable—power of foundation and tax-free institutions, managements. If we have found a need for protecting the public through SEC legislation against business management conflicting with the public interest, should we not find ways to protect the public against the unbridled growth of power in the hands of the managers of tax-free funds who seek to subvert the public welfare?

SENATE

FRIDAY, JULY 27, 1956

The Senate met at 10:30 o'clock a. m.

Rev. Campion Clifford, C. P., professor of history and political science, Passionist Seminary, Normandy, Mo., offered the following prayer:

O God come to our aid. O Lord make haste to help us.

Let us pray: O incomprehensible Creator, true fountain of life, and only author of all knowledge, vouchsafe we beseech Thee to enlighten our understandings and to remove from us all darkness of sin and ignorance. Thou who makest eloquent the tongues of those who want utterance, direct our tongues and pour on our lips the grace of Thy blessing. Give us a diligent and obedient spirit, quickness of apprehension, and the powerful assistance of Thy holy grace that what we do here may be to Thy honor and glory, the good of our own souls, and the best interest and welfare of our fellow countrymen and our great Nation.

O Holy Spirit of God, grant us the grace to be humbly grateful for all the blessings You bestow upon our land, and make us realize that the continuation of these blessings depends upon our fidelity in seeking Your guidance in all our endeavors and in all our ways.

O Seat of Wisdom, pray for us. Amen.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Government Operations be authorized to file reports of investigations conducted by its Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations with the Secretary of the Senate during the adjournment sine die of the Senate, 84th Congress, 2d session, and that they be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection is it so ordered.

CIVIL-RIGHTS LEGISLATION

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I recognize that on this last day of the session the obstacles to the Senate's considering any civil-rights bill are insurmountable.

At the same time I trust our colleagues in this body will not begrudge the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], the junior Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN], and me this final opportunity to record again our earnest desire that the Senate act upon H. R. 627 and to take the one step now at last open to us to advance toward that objective, the filing of a motion to discharge the Judiciary Committee from further consideration of that bill.

I therefore submit a resolution for that purpose on behalf of the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], the junior Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN], and myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received and will lie over under the rule.

The resolution (S. Res. 325) submitted by Mr. DOUGLAS, for himself, Mr. HENNINGS, and Mr. LEHMAN, is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Judiciary be, and it is hereby, discharged from the further consideration of the bill, H. R. 627, to provide means of further securing and protecting the civil rights of persons within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, as this legislative waif is at last permitted to enter the parliamentary halls when it is too late for it to have any future, its dying eyes can perhaps look up at the walls of the Senate and see the otherwise invisible but no less real inscription which men have placed there for all civil-right measures: "Abandon hope all ye who enter here."

For how much longer will the Senate and the country permit man made rules to prevent us from even considering measures which the vast majority of the people desire?

PRINTING AS A SENATE DOCUMENT OF COMPILATION OF SOCIAL SECURITY LAWS

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I submit and send to the desk a resolution for which I request immediate consideration. It merely provides for the printing of the social-security laws prepared by the Social Security Administration as a Senate document, for the use of the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 326) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the compilation of social security laws, prepared by the Social Security Administration for the use of the Senate Committee on Finance, be printed as a Senate document; and 4,000 additional copies be printed, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate Committee on Finance and 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the House Committee on Ways and Means.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF INDEX AND SUMMARY ENTITLED "CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATIONS OF COMMUNISM AND SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES"

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I submit an original resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

Under date of July 23, 1956, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN], chairman of the Committee on Government Operations, obtained unanimous consent of the Senate to have printed as a Senate document an index and summary entitled, "Congressional Investigations of Communism and Subversive Activities," covering a period from 1918 to 1956. At that time he also obtained permission to have printed 2,750 additional copies of the document for the use of the Committee on Government Operations, which would entitle the committee to a total of 5,250 copies, including 1,000 normally allocated for committee use, 1,500 which may be supplied by the Joint Committee on Printing under its standing authority and cost limitations.

The present resolution would authorize the printing of 2,750 additional copies as agreed to under the unanimous-consent request which, I am now informed, requires the adoption of a Senate resolution. The printing of these 2,750 copies comes within the $1,200 limitation authority of the Senate, and has been certified to the Committee on Rules and Administration, which latter committee indicated it had no objection to this procedure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 327) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Government Operations 2,750 additional copies of the index and summary entitled "Congressional Investigations of Communism and Subversive Activities," 1918 to 1956, prepared by the staff of the Senate Committee on Government Operations, the printing of which as a Senate document was authorized on July 23, 1956.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

CONFERRING APPROPRIATE DEGREES BY DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TEACHERS COLLEGE

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BEALL] and myself, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to clarify the language in the District of Columbia Code authorizing the District of Columbia Teachers College to grant degrees.

The code authorizes that appropriate degrees be given at the completion of 4 years' work. As we interpret this provision in the code, it was not to have Congress determine the number of years that it may take for a student to complete the work for any particular degree, but rather to authorize the college to give the degrees which will qualify trained personnel to serve in the public schools of this city. Today any teacher, at any level in the school system, must have the master's degree to qualify for the highest entrance salary which the present law contains.

This bill does not alter the present organization of the public schools.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 4299) authorizing the conferring of appropriate degrees by the District of Columbia Teachers College on those persons who have met the requirements for such degrees, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. BIBLE (for himself and Mr. BEALL), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AREA VOCATIONAL-TECHNICAL EDUCATIONAL BILL

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, and Senators GEORGE, FULBRIGHT, SPARKMAN, ERVIN, SCOTT, CLEMENTS, AIKEN, MONRONEY, YOUNG, SYMINGTON, HENNINGS, THYE, KERR, MCNAMARA, PAYNE, KENNEDY, MANSFIELD, WILEY, LANGER, LEHMAN, MURRAY, IVES, HUMPHREY of Minnesota, MAGNUSON, and CARLSON, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to provide for the extension of vocational education to persons in areas where programs are not fully developed or available and for the development of vocational and technical education, including training and retraining, made necessary by scientific and technological developments, by encouraging States to establish area vocational schools and programs for the training and retraining of technicians and skilled workers in industry and agriculture and for training in other occupations essential to the Nation's security and economy.

I ask unanimous consent that a statement, prepared by me, relating to the bill, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 4301) to provide for the extension of vocational education to persons in areas where programs are not now fully developed or available and for the development of vocational and technical education, including training and retraining, made necessary by scientific and technological developments, by encouraging States to establish area vocational schools and programs for the training and retraining of technicians and skilled workers in industry and agriculture and for training in other occupations essential to the Nation's security and economy, introduced by Mr. HILL (for himself and other Senators), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The statement presented by Mr. HILL is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HILL

I have introduced for appropriate reference a bill to be known as the Area Vocational-Technical Education Act. I am introducing the bill for myself and the following Senators: Mr. GEORGE, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. ERVIN, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. CLEMENTS, Mr. AIKEN, Mr. MONRONEY, Mr. YOUNG, Mr. SYMINGTON, Mr. HENNINGS, Mr. THYE, Mr. KERR, Mr. MCNAMARA, Mr. PAYNE, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. WILEY, Mr. LANGER, Mr. LEHMAN, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. IVES, Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota, Mr. MAGNUSON, and Mr. CARLSON.

The bill is, as described in its title, a measure to "provide for the extension of vocational education to persons in areas where programs are not now fully developed or available and for the development of vocational and technical education, including training and retraining, made necessary by scientific and technological developments, by encouraging States to establish area vocational schools and programs for the training and retraining of technicians and skilled workers in industry and agriculture and for training in other occupations essential to the Nation's security and economy."

The economic picture in the United States and the world situation have changed markedly since 1917 when Congress passed the Smith-Hughes Act, recognizing the importance of vocational training to the national welfare and national security. Just as the Smith-Hughes Act stimulated the growth of vocational education programs 40 years ago, the area vocational-technical school bill, drawing upon the tested and proven experience under the Smith-Hughes Act and related acts, will bring needed training opportunities to people in sparsely settled areas, to people in small towns that cannot afford to maintain the expensive equipment required in a sound vocational program, to people who need training or retraining to compete in the changing labor scene.

The bill will make possible the establishment of training programs, in keeping with the special needs of the several States and Territories, in rural areas where secondary schools are unable to operate comprehensive vocational-technical programs. A great contribution to our national strength and prosperity will result from the prevention of the waste of manpower which follows when large numbers of our people enter the labor market without skills or technical knowledge.

The vocational programs developed throughout the Nation under the Smith-Hughes and George-Barden Vocational Education Acts have proven highly successful. We are familiar with their excellent record of training efficient and productive workers in a wide range of occupations. We have seen the rich dividends which the programs have returned to the Nation—their contributions to the national welfare and national security through increased productive capacity of thousands of workers—on farms, in factories and offices, and in homes.

Yet many who need and can profit by vocational training are not reached by the present programs. There are three major reasons for this: First, our rapidly increasing population is placing ever-increasing demands upon present programs and facilities. Second, there are many communities, particularly those outside the metropolitan areas, which have no vocational programs at all or have programs in only a few vocational fields. Third, advancing technology is creating a demand for more specialized skills and more technical knowledge on the part of workers. These factors call for greatly expanded programs of training and retraining.

One of the most serious manpower problems confronting the Nation is the shortage of trained technicians. A look at the want ads in the Sunday papers, or the daily papers for that matter, shows the great demand for skilled workers and technically trained personnel. Department of Labor reports show the trend toward higher skills in jobs, in business and industry. For many years the proportion of the labor force in the higher brackets of skill and training has been increasing, and at an ever-faster rate. In January 1956, over 6 million more craftsmen and technical operatives were employed than before World War II. The trend is moving sharply downward for the unskilled, who constituted 36 percent of the labor force in 1910 and only 20 percent in 1950.

Hearings before the Subcommittee on Economic Stabilization of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, relating to automation and technological change, made it clear that jobs in the future—in all phases of our economy—will demand a higher degree of technical knowledge. Every industrial worker will not, of course, need to be a professional engineer, but there will be a sharply increasing demand for skilled technicians. At the present time, for every university trained, professional engineer there is required, on the average, a supporting crew of five technicians. Yet these workers are not now being trained in sufficient numbers to meet even the demands of today.

The shortage of technicians is making more critical our present severe shortage of engineers and scientists. Many of these professional workers are now being drawn into positions for which they are more than adequately trained, because supporting technicians are not available. The training of more technicians would constitute a major step toward relieving the serious shortage of engineers and scientists.

Vocational-technical schools, operating on a regional basis to provide training in the most economical manner, can provide much of the answer. Vocational educators know how to provide this training. They proved this under fire during World War II when they speedily produced the trained workers needed for war production. They need only the funds to stimulate the expansion of present vocational-technical programs.

Skilled workers are as important to the security of our country as material weapons of defense. During recent hearings before the Subcommittee on the Air Force of the Senate Committee on Armed Services, Gen. Curtis E. LeMay, Commander in Chief of the Strategic Air Command, declared: "I consider the lack of skilled manpower to be my most critical deficiency." General LeMay made it clear that the overall quality of airplane maintenance is below what it should be because of the lack of technically trained personnel. Our potential military strength is weakened by the shortages.

The complex weapons of today and those programed for the future cannot be properly maintained or operated by inexperienced and inadequately trained personnel. The best machines in the world are ineffective unless qualified men are available to maintain and operate them. The capability of our Air Force rests in large measure upon its ability to attract and retain skilled personnel.

One is the big items in the Air Force budget is the cost of training aviation technicians. It takes the Air Force 4 years to bring a man to the skilled technician level. During this time the Air Force has invested $22,500 in him and has received approximately 1½ years of productive effort from him. At the end of the 4-year enlistment, 90 percent of such men leave the service and return to civilian life.

A major reason for leaving the service is the competition of private industry for skilled technicians. In other words, the Air Force is training skilled technicians for private industry, at a terrifically high cost to the taxpayer. If more technicians were being trained through the economical facilities of the public schools, it would relieve this disturbing situation in a number of ways. If enlistees had some previous basic training in mechanics and technology, it would not cost the Air Force (and other branches of the armed services) so much (in time or dollars) to train its skilled technicians. A more adequate supply of skilled technicians would relieve industry's needs. Enlisted men would be encouraged to stay in the service and the wasteful expense of training a new mechanic every 4 years would be largely eliminated.

Information from behind the Iron Curtain reveals that the educational revolution in Russia poses as serious a threat to our Nation as their achievement in airpower or hydrogen weapons. The Communists have recognized the essentiality of highly skilled training in this technological age and have surrounded education with a new aura of prestige and importance. The Communists have established special schools for the training of technicians.

According to William Benton, publisher of the Encyclopedia Britannica, who recently made a trip behind the Iron Curtain, there are at least 2,000 of these training schools, called "technicums." Life magazine, in its March 5, 1956, article on Russia stated there were 3,796 such schools. These schools have an estimated enrollment of approximately two and one-half million. Through them, Russia is turning out workers with highly specialized skills and advanced technical knowledge for industrial, agricultural, and many other occupations. Russia is reported to be training these technicians in foreign languages and exporting many of them to the underdeveloped nations of the world, where they not only teach work skills but the Communist doctrine as well.

We in the United States, not training enough technicians to take care of our own immediate needs, find it difficult to spare trained workers to go abroad and fight the Soviet propagandists with the example of the rewards of our own democratic way of life. As Mr. Benton says, we are entering into a struggle of a new type with Russia, a new cold war fought in the economic arena. And while we are fighting with, as Mr. Benton declares, "the blunted weapons of the old war," the Soviet Union is "schooling for export tens of thousands of capable engineers, scientists, schoolmasters, and technicians who will be used to win the confidence of the uncommitted billion men and women in Asia, Africa, and the Middle East who hold the world balance of power."

Let no one think for a moment that we can become complacement about our position of leadership in the world. The Soviets have made tremendous advances in the last decades and are now waging economic war upon the free world.

Allen W. Dulles, Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, reports that the Soviet Union has become the second greatest industrial power in the world, and that while we still have a great lead, the Soviet rate of progress is faster than ours. One of the reasons for this, says, Mr. Dulles, is that a prodigious effort has been expended on scientific and technical education. In 1955, some 60 percent of graduating full-time Soviet students were in scientific and technical fields, compared with some 25 percent in the United States. And the conclusion Dulles draws is that "in technical, engineering, and industrial fields the Soviets can achieve any particular objective we can achieve." To counter Soviet advances in education, the United States must immediately focus more attention and emphasis on technical training. This is exactly what the measure we have introduced today is intended to accomplish.

Another serious problem of concern to the Nation relates to rural people, particularly the low-income farm family. Increased mechanization in agriculture and improved farming methods have increased productivity per man to such a level that it is no longer feasible for all farm children to remain on the farm. Many are forced to leave the land they love to seek jobs in the cities and towns. In general, they enter the labor market with little or no useful training because the small high schools they attended cannot afford a broad, diversified vocational program.

This measure, when enacted, will be of tremendous value to the farm youth of the Nation, because it offers a way to bring vocational education to far greater numbers of them. It will help both those who expect to remain on the farm and who need superior training to take advantage of the scientific and mechanical developments in farming methods and those who leave the land and seek other employment in the industrial, distributive, and business fields.

Congress in this session, as in the last session, has recognized the urgent need for providing vocational and technical training for greater numbers of our people by voting substantial increases in the appropriations for vocational educational under our existing programs. This year Congress, for the first time, voted the full funds authorized for vocational education under existing legislation. I am confident that the use of the funds will prove the wisdom of this action.

The bill which we have introduced today is a logical companion to the acts passed in earlier years. The bill will not duplicate the programs now being carried on under those acts, but on the other hand it will stimulate programs which will supplement and complement existing programs. The training programs which the bill will inspire will fill a clear gap in our educational process by reaching large numbers of our people who are now unable to pursue vocational and technical training in high school or to pursue training in college.

Passage of the bill will contribute importantly to strengthening the self-reliance of our people, to their economic welfare and that of the Nation and to building the strength and providing for the security of our country. I commend the bill to the earnest consideration of every Member of Congress.

JURISDICTION OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION TO PREVENT CERTAIN PRACTICES BY PERSONS ENGAGED IN COMMERCE IN MEAT AND MEAT PRODUCTS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to confer upon the Federal Trade Commission jurisdiction to prevent unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce by certain persons engaged in commerce in meat and meat products, and for other purposes.

As a result of many complaints from cattle growers, small meat packers, and other groups in the meat industry, the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly on June 21 began a series of hearings on monopoly problems in the meatpacking industry. The subcommittee has already heard enough testimony to convince it that changes are necessary in the administration of the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, which gives the Secretary of Agriculture jurisdiction over unfair trade practices in this very important industry. Typical of the industry leaders who appeared before the subcommittee was E. F. Forbes, president of the Western States Meat Packers Association. He testified that the members of his association have been unsuccessful in obtaining any action on complaints of unfair trade practices. He said such complaints were being pigeonholed in the Department of Agriculture, and therefore urged that jurisdiction be transferred to the Federal Trade Commission, which has jurisdiction over similar antitrust matters in other industries. Mr. Forbes was one of several witnesses who called attention to the extension of chain food store operations from the field of retailing to meat packing and even operating feed lots. Another witness, Louis F. Bein, of Denver, Colo., pointed out how this growing chainstore practice resulted in the decline of livestock prices to the producers.

The bill I am introducing today gives the Federal Trade Commission jurisdiction to proceed against persons engaged in commerce in meat and meat products where such persons engage in certain defined unfair trade practices. Through its sections containing definitions, its terms are made clearly applicable to packers, chain food stores also operating as packers, and to other persons engaged in the business of buying livestock for slaughter, manufacturing or preparing meats or meat food products for sale in commerce, or marketing meats, meat food products, livestock, dairy, or poultry products or eggs. In defining the unfair trade practices at which it is aimed, this bill uses the same broad language which was used in the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921. This broad terminology was approved by Congress years ago and is needed by any Government agency wishing to proceed against persons who violate the prohibitions of the act. If the Department of Agriculture had enforced the act as written in 1921, we would not need to introduce this bill today. The bill also sets out the procedures to be followed by the Federal Trade Commission in proceeding against such violators and contains the proper safeguards for the protection of persons so charged. It also provides for appeals procedures to be followed by either party to an action filed under the authority of the bill. The subcommittee is planning to continue its hearings into additional problems which have been brought to its attention from within the industry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 4308) to confer upon the Federal Trade Commission jurisdiction to prevent unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce by certain persons engaged in commerce in meat and meat products, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. O'MAHONEY, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRINTING AS A SENATE DOCUMENT ADDENDUM TO SENATE DOCUMENT 120, 84TH CONGRESS, ENTITLED "LAWS CONTROLLING ILLICIT NARCOTICS TRAFFIC" (S. DOC. NO. 145)

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document an addendum to Senate Document No. 120, 84th Congress, of this session on "Laws Controlling the Illicit Narcotics Traffic."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADDRESSES, EDITORIALS, ARTICLES, ETC., PRINTED IN THE RECORD

On request, and by unanimous consent, addresses, editorials, articles, etc., were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. WILEY:

Article prepared by him on expanding American engineering resource published in Wisconsin Professional Engineer.

A supplementary statement prepared by him on the need for support schools for the mentally retarded.

By Mr. IVES:

Statement concerning the approaching 30th anniversary of network broadcasting by the National Broadcasting Co.

By Mr. KEFAUVER:

Statement and editorial concerning Fund for the Republic.

THE MAJORITY AND MINORITY LEADERS

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, as we appear to be near the end of the 2d session of the 84th Congress, I wish to express my personal appreciation to our distinguished majority leader [Mr. JOHNSON of Texas] and our distinguished minority leader [Mr. KNOWLAND] for the wonderful job they have done this year in guiding the destinies of the Senate. They have had untold difficulties, but they have shown patience, understanding, and high intelligence, and I think we all owe them a debt of sincere gratitude.

THOMAS A. WOFFORD, OF SOUTH CAROLINA

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, the distinguished junior Senator from South Carolina, Mr. THOMAS WOFFORD, will not return to the Senate next year, for his duty has been one of representing his people for an unexpired term.

I wish to say here that I have enjoyed serving with my distinguished colleague, and I, like every Member of the Senate, and the people of my State and Nation, have benefited from his short but effective presence in the United States Senate.

Mr. President, THOMAS A. WOFFORD is a courageous man of conviction, who never hesitates to vote and speak in the way he thinks best for his country and his people. On several occasions he has spoken to the Nation for his people in a most capable and convincing manner that has won the respect and admiration of thousands who did not know him before he came to the Senate.

He knows, too, my colleagues, how to respect the convictions of others and to approach legislative problems with realism and understanding.

Mr. President, when TOM WOFFORD came to the United States Senate, there was no doubt as to which side of the aisle he belonged. TOM WOFFORD is a stanch and loyal Democrat who, for years prior to his service in this honorable body, had rendered distinguished service to the Democratic Party.

He is a young man and while he may be leaving us this year in the sense of vacating his seat in the Senate, I am sure we will all be hearing from and about him in the years to come.

We like and admire TOM WOFFORD and we shall miss him next session. He has been a good Senator for the people and for the Nation and as he leaves us he can return to the people of South Carolina knowing that he has done his duty well. He has the respect, confidence, and well wishes of us all.

Mr. President, I wish Godspeed to him, to his lovely wife, and to his wonderful family.

THE CONTRIBUTIONS OF ONE MAN TOWARD PEACE

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I have before me an article by Arthur Krock, carried in the New York Times for Friday, February 27, entitled "The Contributions of One Man Toward Peace." In this article Mr. Krock discusses the Fulbright program and the great significance of the originator of the program and also of the Fulbright resolution in 1943.

Mr. President, I had the honor of coming to the Congress in the same year with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and I think Arthur Krock's reference to him as an extraordinary public servant is well taken. The Senator from Arkansas has made a great contribution to the cause of international peace and international understanding, and the United States and the free world are better off because of the contributions of this one man. He is a man of great ability, great coverage, and great integrity. He has been a tower of strength to many of us with his wise counsel, steadiness, and understanding. The foreign policy of the United States is better because of his inspirational leadership and will become better still if we heed his advice and counsel.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article by Arthur Krock concerning the Senator from Arkansas may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota subsequently said: Mr. President, I had intended to ask that the very splendid article appearing in this morning's New York Times, an article written by Arthur Krock, and relating to the outstanding work of one of our colleagues, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], be printed in the RECORD. Since the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] has had the article printed, I shall not duplicate the request, but I highly approve of the article.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN THE NATION—THE CONTRIBUTIONS OF ONE MAN TOWARD PEACE

(By Arthur Krock)

WASHINGTON, July 26.—In his report to this Congress of the operations of Public Law 584 that was passed by the 79th 10 years ago, the Secretary of State made the following comment:

In terms of lessening the likelihood of another war by promoting greater people-to-people understanding, the program has been described as the most fabulously profitable investment ever authorized by the Congress of the United States. Altogether, nearly 22,000 persons have been exchanged with 28 countries at a lower cost to the American taxpayers than 5 hours of fighting World War II.

AID PROGRAM'S COUNTERPART

Public Law 584, informally known as the Fulbright Act, is the legislation by which teachers and students are exchanged between this and many other nations—today Israel was added. It was the cultural counterpart to our economic and military programs, all designed to promote through collective security a permanent and durable world peace. Secretary Dulles' report of its effectiveness to that end is not only an impressive documentation of the soundness of the concept. It is a reminder of the extraordinary service to the cause of international peace that has been rendered by one legislator—Senator J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT of Arkansas.

This service began September 21, 1943, with the passage by the House (of which the Senator was then a Member) of the Fulbright resolution, a cornerstone of bipartisan foreign policy and of the United Nations. The resolution committed the House to "the creation of appropriate international machinery with power adequate to establish and to maintain a just and lasting peace, among the nations of the world, and as favoring participation by the United States therein." At a subsequent Republican conference at Mackinac Island, Mich., members of that party who had assisted FULBRIGHT in his project—among them the late Representative James W. Wadsworth and the late Wendell L. Willkie—put through a similar resolution. And, under the sponsorship of Senator Connally of Texas, the other branch of Congress approved the Fulbright resolution.

HULL'S DEBT ACKNOWLEDGED

In his memoirs—published by Macmillan, 1948—Cordell Hull, who as Secretary of State labored ceaselessly for the creation of the United Nations, made a number of appreciative references to the pioneering of FULBRIGHT. "My discouragement at the Soviet Government's rejection of the Four-Nation Declaration," he wrote, "was counterbalanced by the encouragement I received" by the House action. "* * * I felt that the passage of the Fulbright resolution * * * would give me a real advantage in Moscow because it would show Molotov and Eden that the people of the United States * * * wanted their country to take its full share in an international organization."

Three years after FULBRIGHT's first epochal contribution, Congress passed the Exchange Students Act which was the subject of Dulles' glowing report on its decennial. The gist of the legislation was this:

At the end of the Second World War American military equipment that cost many millions was stored in warehouses all over the world—bulldozers, machine tools, locomotives, food, clothing, etc. But the countries which badly needed these supplies lacked the dollars with which to buy them.

The Fulbright Act provided that these surpluses be sold to such governments for their own foreign currencies and credits. Part of these funds were set aside, through special agreements, for educational purposes only, a precedent having been established with enormous success in Belgium by Herbert Hoover in 1920.

EFFECTS OF THE ACT

By the time the Fulbright Act was 10 years old, over 12,000 foreign students, teachers, lecturers, and scholars had entered American life in cities and towns in all the States, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, and Alaska. Over 9,000 Americans had gone abroad in exchange. Of these two groups Dulles said to Congress:

"Systematic evaluation studies indicate that these people—from abroad—not only return home with a better understanding of the United States, but share that understanding with their fellow countrymen. * * * Many of them are becoming leaders in the national life of their countries: in India, at least half * * * have a voice in policymaking on an all-India level.

"Through their studies—Americans who were sent abroad—are adding continually to our store of knowledge about these countries * * * by example as well as by words explaining our way of life * * * and gaining new insights into America."

The details of the report bear out the claims by the Secretary that the program is "bringing about a new kind of chain reaction which may eventually work more powerfully for peace than nuclear weapons."

Senator FULBRIGHT's renomination by the Democrats of Arkansas, a one-party State, fortunately assures his reelection to continue his constructive labors for peace with freedom.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to join in the commendation of the Senator from Arkansas for the contribution he has made to the exchange program.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I think the Senate should know that the Senator from New Jersey himself played a great part in the success of the program.

GEOMETRIC DESIGN STANDARDS FOR THE NATIONAL SYSTEM OF INTERSTATE AND DEFENSE HIGHWAYS

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the law providing for the construction of the Interstate and Defense Highway System should have the continued consideration of Congress.

The American Association of State Highway Officials recently met and adopted geometric design standards for the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways. This design supersedes that adopted August 1, 1945. At the meeting adopting the present design, 46 out of 48 States were represented. In addition, there was representation from the Bureau of Roads of the Department of Commerce.

In order that these standards may be understood by all of us, I ask unanimous consent that the same be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the standards were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF STATE HIGHWAY OFFICIALS—COMMITTEE ON PLANNING AND DESIGN POLICIES—GEOMETRIC DESIGN STANDARDS FOR THE NATIONAL SYSTEM OF INTERSTATE AND DEFENSE HIGHWAYS,[1] ADOPTED JULY 12, 1956

GENERAL

The National System of Interstate and Defense Highways is the most important in the United States. It carries more traffic per mile than any other comparable national system and includes the roads of greatest significance to the economic welfare and defense of the Nation. The highways of this system must be designed in keeping with their importance as the backbone of the Nation's highway systems. To this end they must be designed with control of access to insure their safety, permanence, and utility and with flexibility to provide for possible future expansion. Two-lane highways should be designed so that passing of slower moving vehicles can be accomplished with ease and safety at practically all times. Divided highways should be designed as two separate one-way roads to take advantage of terrain and other conditions for safe and relaxed driving, economy, and pleasing appearance. All known features of safety and utility should be incorporated in each design to result in a National System of Interstate and Defense Highways which will be a credit to the Nation.

These objectives can be realized by conscious attention in design to their attainment. All interstate highways shall meet the following minimum standards. Higher values which represent desirable minimum values, a device used in previous interstate standards, are not shown because it is expected that designs will generally be made to values as high as are commensurate with conditions, and values near the minimums herein will be used in design only where the use of higher values will result in excessive cost. In determination of all geometric features, including right of way, a generous factor of safety should be employed and unquestioned adequacy should be the criterion. All design features required to accommodate the traffic of the year 1975 shall be provided in the initial design; however, where justifiable, the construction may be accomplished in stages.

The association policy on geometric design of rural highways, the policy on arterial highways in urban areas, when adopted, and the standard specifications for highway bridges shall be used as design guides where they do not conflict with these standards.

TRAFFIC BASIS

Interstate highways shall be designed to serve safely and efficiently the volumes of passenger vehicles, buses, and trucks, including tractor-trailer and semitrailer combinations and corresponding military equipment, estimated to be that which will exist in 1975, including attracted, generated, and development traffic on the basis that the entire system is completed.

The peak-hour traffic used as a basis for design shall be as high as the 30th highest hourly volume of the year 1975, hereafter referred to as the design hourly volume, "DHV(1975)." Unless otherwise specified, DHV is the total, two-direction volume of mixed traffic.

CONTROL OF ACCESS

On all sections of the Interstate System, access shall be controlled by acquiring access rights outright prior to construction or by the construction of frontage roads, or both. Control of access is required for all sections of the Interstate System. Under all of the following conditions, intersections at grade may be permitted in sparsely settled rural areas which are a sufficient distance from municipalities or other traffic-generating areas to be outside their influence, and where no appreciable hazard is created thereby.

(a) The interstate highway is a two-lane highway having a DHV (1975) of less than 500.

(b) Each intersection at grade is with a public road or private driveway with little potential for traffic increase and on which the current ADT does not exceed 50 vehicles.

(c) Such intersections do not exceed two per side of the interstate highway per mile.

(d) Sufficient additional corner right of way at each intersection at grade is acquired to insure that access connections on the crossroad are sufficiently removed to minimize interference with the interstate highway.

(e) The right to eliminate, terminate, or reroute each such public road or private driveway is vested in the appropriate public authority at the time of initial construction.

Where a grade separation is called for under these standards and extraordinary conditions exist under which a grade separation would not be in the public interest, an intersection at grade may be permitted through agreement between the State highway department and the Secretary of Commerce.

RAILROAD CROSSINGS

Railroad grade crossings shall be eliminated for all through traffic lanes.

INTERSECTIONS

All at-grade intersections of public highways and private driveways shall be eliminated, or the connecting road terminated, rerouted, or intercepted by frontage roads, except as otherwise provided under control of access.

DESIGN SPEED

The design speed of all highways on the system shall be at least 70, 60, and 50 miles per hour for flat, rolling, and mountainous topography, respectively, and depending upon the nature of terrain and development. The design speed in urban areas should be at least 50 miles per hour.

[1] To supersede the design standards for the National System of Interstate Highways, adopted August 1, 1945.

CURVATURE, SUPERELEVATION, AND SIGHT DISTANCES

These elements and allied features, such as transition curves, should be correlated with the design speed in accordance with a policy on geometric design of rural highways.

On two-lane highways, sections with sufficient sight distance for safe passing should be frequent enough and the total length of such sections be a sufficient percentage of the highway length to accommodate the DHV. Where it is not feasible to provide enough passing opportunities, a divided highway should be provided instead.

GRADIENTS

For design speeds of 70, 60, and 50 miles per hour, gradients generally shall be not steeper than 3, 4, and 5 percent, respectively. Gradients 2 percent steeper may be provided in rugged terrain.

WIDTH AND NUMBER OF LANES

Traffic lanes shall not be less than 12 feet wide.

Where the DHV (1975) exceeds 700 or exceeds a lower two-lane design capacity applicable for the conditions on a particular section, the highway shall be a divided highway. For lower volumes, the highway shall be a two-lane highway so designed and located on the right-of-way that an additional two-lane pavement can be added in the future to form a divided highway.

Efficiency and capacity of two-lane highways may be increased by providing added climbing lanes on upgrades where critical lengths of grade are exceeded or by providing more frequent and longer sections safe for passing.

MEDIANS

Medians in rural areas in flat and rolling topography shall be at least 36 feet wide. Medians in urban and mountainous areas shall be at least 16 feet wide. Narrower medians may be provided in urban areas of high right-of-way cost, on long and costly bridges, and in rugged mountainous terrain, but no median shall be less than four feet wide.

Curbs or other devices may be used where necessary to prevent traffic from crossing the median.

Where continuous barrier curbs are used on narrow medians, such curbs shall be offset at least one foot from the edge of the through-traffic lane. Where vertical elements more than 12 inches high, other than abutments, piers, or walls, are located in a median, there shall be a lateral clearance of at least 3½ feet from the edge of through traffic lane to the face of such element.

SHOULDERS

Shoulders usable by all classes of vehicles in all weather shall be provided on the right of traffic. The usable width of shoulder shall be not less than 10 feet. In mountainous terrain involving high cost for additional width, the usable width of shoulder may be less but at least six feet. Usable width of shoulder is measured from edge of through-traffic lane to intersection of shoulder and fill or ditch slope except where such slope is steeper than 4:1 where it is measured to beginning of rounding.

SLOPES

Side slopes should be 4:1 or flatter where feasible and not steeper than 2:1 except in rock excavation or other special conditions.

RIGHT OF WAY

Fixed minimum widths of right of way are not given because wide widths are desirable, conditions may make narrow widths necessary, and right of way need not be of constant width. The following minimum widths are given as guides.

In rural areas right-of-way widths should be not less than the following, plus additional widths needed for heavy cuts and fills:

Type of highway	Minimum width (in feet)
	Without frontage roads	With frontage roads
2 lane	150	250
4 lane divided	150	250
6 lane divided	175	275
8 lane divided	200	300

In urban areas right-of-way width shall be not less than that required for the necessary cross-section elements, including median, pavements, shoulders, outer separations, ramps, frontage roads, slopes, walls, border areas, and other requisite appurtenances.

CULVERTS

All culverts shall be of sufficient length to accommodate the pavements, median, and shoulders.

BRIDGES AND OTHER STRUCTURES

The following standards apply to interstate highway bridges, overpasses, and underpasses. Standards for crossroad overpasses and underpasses are to be those for the crossroad.

Bridges and overpasses, preferably of deck construction, should be located to fit the over-all alinement and profile of the highway.

The clear height of structures shall be not less than 14 feet over the entire roadway width, including the usable width of shoulders. Allowance should be made for any contemplated resurfacing.

The width of all bridges, including grade separation structures, of a length of 150 feet or less between abutments or end-supporting piers shall equal the full roadway width on the approaches, including the usable width of shoulders.

Barrier curbs on bridges longer than 150 feet between abutments or end-supporting piers and curbs on approach highways if used shall be offset at least 2 feet. Offsets to face of parapet or rail shall be at least 3½ feet measured from edge of through-traffic lane and apply on right and left.

The lateral clearance from the edge of through-traffic lanes to the face of walls or abutments and piers at underpasses shall be the usable shoulder width but not less than 8 feet on the right and 4½ feet on the left.

A safety walk shall be provided in tunnels and on long-span structures on which the full approach roadway width, including shoulders, is not continued.

HELLS CANYON PROJECT

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, the bill for the great Federal project at Hells Canyon may be gone, but it is not forgotten. It will not be forgotten for a long time.

What has been lost with the abandonment of Hells Canyon to the Idaho Power Co. has been brought out by some of the press comments following the Senate vote on last Thursday, July 19. The responsibility for this loss has been squarely fixed on the pressure brought to bear by the Eisenhower administration, on behalf of the private utilities, on Senators on the other side of the aisle, all but two of whom voted for the destruction of this priceless national asset.

In view of the direct administration pressure to clear all obstacles for the Idaho Power Co., it will be interesting to see what action now will follow on Idaho Power's applications for $65,206,094 of quick tax write-offs for its Oxbow and Brownlee Dams. The Department of the Interior already has recommended to the Office of Defense Mobilization the granting of rapid tax amortization certificates which would, in effect, give Idaho Power an interest-free loan of more than $65 million. Such a financial windfall for the company contradicts the claims of Idaho Power Co. spokesmen that its dams will be built without expense to American taxpayers. It now appears that the American people will not only suffer the loss of power and flood control at Hells Canyon, but may also contribute tax dollars for the privilege of sacrificing those benefits to the less-than-full development resulting from the Idaho Power dams.

I will watch with interest the future action on the quick tax writeoffs sought by the Idaho Power Co. for its Brownlee and Oxbow Dams.

I ask unanimous consent to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a column by Mr. Thomas L. Stokes on The Defeat of the Hells Canyon Bill in the Evening Star of July 21, 1956, an editorial in the Washington Post and Times Herald of July 21, 1956, and a letter which I have written to the Washington Post in response to this editorial, and editorials from the Pendleton East Oregonian of July 20, 1956, and the Coos Bay Times of July 20, 1956.

There being no objection, the letter and editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
July 21, 1956.

To the EDITOR OF THE WASHINGTON POST AND TIMES HERALD:

Your editorial of July 21 on Hells Canyon correctly states that among the issues in the Senate debate "the first and most important was whether the choicest power site on the North American Continent should be safeguarded for maximum development."

You are so right that the deliberate sacrifice of this maximum development is "an altogether proper issue for debate in the political campaign."

For the opposing side, you state the question whether it would be proper to deny the alternative, smaller, private development "when the chance for approval of a Federal undertaking is all but gone."

The Eisenhower administration and other Republican spokesmen for the Idaho Power Co.'s smaller project can hardly make use of this argument. The administration had no difficulty winning congressional approval this year of over $1 billion in Federal projects in the Rocky Mountain area, and it could effortlessly have won authorization of the Hells Canyon project. Far from having no chance of approval, Hells Canyon showed its unequalled merit by winning approval of both Senate and House Interior Committees and gaining 41 votes in the Senate, in the face of what the Post itself has recognized as extreme adverse pressure from the administration.

The administration's studied and calculated give-away of the irreplaceable Hells Canyon site will haunt the Republican Party, not as a regional, but as a national issue for years to come.

RICHARD L. NEUBERGER,
United States Senator.

[From the Washington Post and Times Herald of July 21, 1956]

IN A CANYON

Underneath all the frothy rhetoric, there were two principal issues in the Hells Canyon debate in the Senate. The first and most important was whether the choicest power site on the North American Continent should be safeguarded for maximum development. The second was whether, since Congress has consistently failed to approve a high-level federally constructed dam at Hells Canyon, the lower-level private development proposed by the Idaho Power Co. and endorsed by the Eisenhower administration should be allowed to proceed as sanctioned by the Federal Power Commission.

It would be unbecoming of the Democrats to allow their irritation at administration pressure against the Hells Canyon project to preclude a vote on the confirmation of Assistant Secretary of the Interior D'Ewart. Mr. D'Ewart is entitled to a decision, irrespective of objections to his stand or charges that he displayed high-level indifference to smear tactics used in his behalf in the 1954 Montana senatorial campaign. But the deeper questions of the Hells Canyon controversy will continue to ring. This newspaper, which has no doctrinaire belief in public power as such, thinks that at a unique site such as Hells Canyon, Federal development is the only way to bring maximum utilization of resources. But when the chance for approval of a Federal undertaking is all but gone, would it be proper to deny the power-hungry Northwest an alternate if smaller source of energy through private development? The issue is an altogether proper one for debate in the political campaign.

[From the Washington Evening Star of July 21, 1956]

DEFEAT OF THE HELLS CANYON BILL—EISENHOWER IS BLAMED AS SENATE REJECTS PUBLIC POWER PROPOSAL

(By Thomas L. Stokes)

The showdown on the Hells Canyon bill in the Senate this week should open the eyes of the public, at least that part of the public which is interested in proper conservation of our natural resources, including our water resources.

For it fixed responsibility upon President Eisenhower himself for the administration's conservation policy which has been severely criticized—and properly—because it permits exploitation of our natural resources by privileged private interests for their profit to the detriment of the public interest.

This was exposed in the personal pressure brought by the White House upon Senators, on a scale not heretofore seen in this administration, in the effort, ultimately successful, to swing enough votes to defeat the Democratic-sponsored bill. The measure provided for a Government-constructed high dam across the Snake River gorge along the Idaho-Oregon border to develop the river for production of hydroelectric power, flood control, navigation, and reclamation.

The effect of this administration maneuver goes far beyond Hells Canyon, in which the whole Pacific Northwest is interested, in its implications. It should finally awaken people all over the country to the administration's determination, as stressed here frequently, to turn over all still-undeveloped water resources to the private power monopoly to develop as it pleases, without proper consideration of the public interest, and at high rates to yield a handsome profit.

Once again the private power barons are back in the saddle in Government, from where they had been driven during the Roosevelt-Truman era. They realized the significant test inherent in what is done about development of the biggest yet undeveloped site—at Hells Canyon. Coordinating with the White House campaign of pressure upon the Senate, electric utilities conducted a high-powered drive themselves in personal contacts with Senators by telephone, wire and letter, beseeching defeat of the bill for public development of Hells Canyon.

They rallied behind the corporation known as the Idaho Power Co., though it is almost entirely Eastern-owned, which already has started to work on the Snake River under a license granted by the Federal Power Commission some months ago which Democrats and conservationists were seeking to annul by the bill which the Senate defeated, 51 to 41. The Idaho Power Co. plan calls ultimately for three small dams. Its plan, according to best expert evidence, will not realize the full potentials of the Snake River and will foreclose forever the proper development of the whole Columbia River system as projected by the United States Army Engineers.

In the most tense and dramatic scene in the Senate this session the Senators were reminded in closing debate of the inadequacies of the Idaho Power Co.'s plan; of how the people and industries in the developing region will be deprived of the full benefit of their water resources; of how they must pay 6.29 mills per kilowatt hour for electricity generated there by the Idaho Power Co. as compared with 3 mills if it were developed publicly. It was pointed out also how public development would be self-liquidating as are all such water resource enterprises, and would return a nice profit to the United States Treasury.

But in vain.

Senator LYNDON JOHNSON, of Texas, Democratic leader who directed the fight for public development, was foiled when Senator FREAR, Democrat of Delaware, and seven of JOHNSON'S own Southern Democratic colleagues deserted him—Senators BYRD and ROBERTSON, of Virginia; ERVIN, of North Carolina; LONG, of Louisiana; EASTLAND, of Mississippi; SMATHERS, of Florida, and RUSSELL, of Georgia. Two Republicans deserted the administration and joined Senator JOHNSON'S cohorts—Senators WILEY, of Wisconsin, and LANGER, of North Dakota. Otherwise the vote was along strict party lines, with Democrats supporting public development and Republicans opposing it.

The administration's position revealed in the Hells Canyon battle is well known to anyone who has followed the course of events here; but never before had White House responsibility been so graphically revealed to the public.

Hitherto others were blamed, chiefly former Secretary of Interior Douglas McKay, who was, of course, only following White House orders. Democrats had made such a target of Secretary McKay that he finally became too heavy a political liability and was yanked by President Eisenhower and sent into the race for the Senate in Oregon against Senator WAYNE MORSE. It was said then that it would hamper Democrats to have their target thus pulled away on the eve of the campaign. But the removal of the administration scapegoat and shield also seems to have worked to the disadvantage of the administration by leaving the President and his White House operatives exposed and in line of fire. At least, that was the effect in the Hells Canyon fight.

Now the blame can be laid where it belonged all the time—on the President himself.

[From the East Oregonian of July 20, 1956]

THE HELLS CANYON DECISION

The effect of the Senate's decision on the bill that would have authorized Hells Canyon dam cannot be fully measured today or tomorrow. As of the present it is a great victory for the Republican party and the Eisenhower admiinstration. The New York Times reported that the White House exerted more pressure to defeat the bill than it has placed upon any piece of legislation since Mr. Eisenhower took office. Was it a victory that the party will want to point to with pride for all time or will it prove in time to be a very costly victory? Only time can tell.

Future generations will not ask who built what dams in the Columbia Basin. They will measure the effectiveness of those dams. Were they constructed to achieve best possible use of the water resources of the basin? That will be the test.

We know what the answer would be had little Kettle Falls Dam been constructed instead of big Grand Coulee. We expect the answer will be the same when future generations look at the "substitute" that was accepted for big Hells Canyon Dam.

The people who won the Hells Canyon fight made their case on an issue that seems to us as phony as a wooden nickel. They said it was private enterprise (Idaho Power Co.'s little dams) versus creeping socialism (the big Hells Canyon Dam). This removed for them the necessity of arguing which project would achieve best use of water resources and they could avoid any discussion of the findings of the Federal Power Commission's examiner, which were that the high dam was preferable. The saddest side of this sham was hearing men from the Northwest who hadn't spouted any such nonsense about Bonneville, Grand Coulee, McNary, and the Dalles Dams talking it about Hells Canyon.

This victory will encourage them, of course, to fight every proposed Federal dam in the Columbia basin henceforth. There are many projects that should be built to assure comprehensive development of the water resources of the region—projects that private utilities cannot build. But they won't be built as long as men in the region are dedicated to fighting Federal development without regard for the welfare of the region.

Hells Canyon has been lost. It is, for us, a bitter defeat. We must prepare ourselves to swallow some more. Other projects that would accomplish full development of the region's water resources will be sacrificed on the altar of politics.

The victory of those who opposed Hells Canyon is made of some heady stuff. If the recommendations of the Corps of Engineers, Bureau of Reclamation and the 308 report, bible for basin development, can be rejected by merely crying "socialism," it is entirely possible we may have seen the end of Federal development in the basin.

[From the Coos Bay (Oreg.) Times of July 20, 1956]

POLITICS KILLED HELLS CANYON

The lineup of votes in the defeat of the Federal Hells Canyon Dam bill in the Senate, Thursday, indicates conclusively that the 51 Senators who voted against it did so from political motivation. Either they heeded the Eisenhower call or, more likely, gave private power and other industry campaign fund sources what they wanted.

All but 3 Republicans—LANGER and YOUNG, of North Dakota, and WILEY, of Wisconsin—voted against the bill and 9 Democrats joined the majority. The interesting fact of the Democratic opposition was that 8 of the 9 Senators were from the deep South and the other was from New England— both areas which oppose development of the Northwest as an industrial competitor.

We must assume that because this bill was such an important one all or most of the 96 Senators were familiar with the pros and cons of the issue. This being so it would be impossible for them to vote against the bill without outside influence.

Everything points to the superiority of the high dam. Even assuming that all three low dams—Brownlee, Oxbow, and low Hells Canyon—were built, and there is much doubt that they will be, they could come nowhere near providing the advantages of the high dam.

The whole core of the private dam advocates' argument is that we must have power now in the Northwest power pool. This argument is utterly destroyed by the strong probability that the power from the low dams never will go into the power pool. The estimated rate which Idaho Power will have to charge is between 2½ and 3 times as high as Bonneville Power's rate. Power from the low dams couldn't be marketed in the BPA area because of this huge rate discrepancy, unless the whole Northwest rate structure were boosted tremendously to accommodate Idaho Power.

By stretching the imagination to believe that the three dams will contribute to the pool, one still has to write them off in comparison with the potential power output of the high dam. Private power advocates quote misleading figures about the capacities of the high and low dams which indicate that they are nearly equal. But the figures which count are those showing what firm power would be—power available at all times, including periods of lowest water. These are the figures in which 12-month industries are interested.

They show that the high dam would have, counting downstream benefits to other dams, a firm output of 1,124,000 kilowatts compared with the low dams' output, under the same conditions, of 680,000 kilowatts. The difference between them is equal to the whole firm capacity of Bonneville Dam. The Northwest loses the equivalent of Bonneville by the defeat of the high dam bill. The limitation to industrial growth here because of this loss is immeasurable, but it could mean the difference between mediocrity and superiority for the Northwest.

Add the loss of storage water, 2.8 million feet of it, by construction of the low dams. Private power people glibly say that other dams in the area will make up the difference. They refer to such proposed dams as the Bruces Eddy and Penny Cliffs, which would choke off one of the finest salmon runs in the world and flood a vast forest land and winter range for elk and deer. The high dam would not have required such destruction of fish and wildlife to provide flood control.

Finally, take the item of cost to the taxpayers, an item which private power people have exploited to the hilt by quoting highly questionable construction figures and ignoring others.

Construction costs of $430 million for a high dam and $133 million for the three low dams are cited by these people. But a Bureau of Reclamation engineering report listed the costs at $331.6 million for the high dam and $311.2 for the low. The Federal Power Commission, packed by the administration, released respective figures of $388.6 million and $191.4 million.

What figures are we to believe? We don't have to believe any of them because we don't have to consider them. These two factors, deliberately ignored by private-power people, make the initial construction cost irrelevant—Federal receipts for sale of power and fast tax writeoff for Idaho Power Co.

Just as Bonneville Dam is doing, high Hells Canyon would have paid for itself over the years. When its cost had been fully amortized, the dam would have belonged to the people of the United States and all receipts thereafter would have been money added to the Treasury.

Idaho Power Co. will finance the dam with its own funds, yes, but with the added boost of $338 million in fast tax writeoffs, money that the Treasury will lose, as an incentive to private business. That $338 million is greater than some estimates for the whole cost of construction for the high dam. And when the dam is paid for, who will own it? Why, Idaho Power Co., of course.

At this point the high-sounding philosophy of good old American free enterprise enters the picture. Federal monopolies are wiping out free enterprise, ex-Secretary of the Interior Douglas McKay tells us. He does not mention that private utilities now control 80 percent of the Nation's power resources. He says that "I hope I shall never live to see the day when the Nation's businessmen and farmers have to come, hat in hand, to the bureaucracy in Washington to get permission to use electric power to establish themselves or to expand their enterprises." He does not mention that those same businessmen and farmers will have to come, hand in hand, to Idaho Power Co. or to Electric Bond & Share Co. or to whomever (heaven only knows) really controls private power facilities in this country, and who can wield tremendous power over industry by favoring one or another select corporation.

Fifty-one United States Senators folded under the greatest political pressure that has ever been on many of them, and the Northwest and the country lost one of the finest dam sites in the world. This tragedy will stunt development of the country for decades to come. Right-thinking people should remember that when they get an opportunity to answer to this crime in November's elections.

SENATOR MORSE, OF OREGON

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, the outstanding record in the Senate of the senior Senator from the State of Oregon [Mr. MORSE] is well known to Members of this body. It is also well known to citizens throughout the country, many of whom are showing an interest in informing the people of my home State of Oregon of the necessity of keeping the senior Senator from Oregon on duty in the Senate. An example of this sort of expression of support was printed recently in the letters column of an Oregon newspaper. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the editor in chief of one of America's leading publishing houses which appeared in the Medford (Oreg.) Main-Tribune of June 28, 1956.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FROM AN EX-OREGONIAN

TO THE EDITOR: As an ex-Oregonian I look with interest and affection on everything Oregon does and stands for. One of the things that pleases me most is to observe the activities of WAYNE MORSE in the Senate. He is a great rugged individualist from the same political stockpile that contributed Senator Borah, of Idaho, and Senator George Norris, of Nebraska. I hope Oregonians will keep this dedicated man at the business of representing a great State in our Senate.

KEN MCCORMICK,
Editor in Chief, Doubleday & Co.

OFFICIAL REPORTER OF DEBATES

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, last evening I was absent from the Chamber when the tributes were paid to the dean of the reporters, my friend, Jim Murphy.

I remember well in my first few weeks as Senator meeting Mr. Murphy and reminiscing with him about our mutual friends and relatives in Boston. His eldest son was living in Brookline, Massachusetts, and Mr. Murphy's grandchildren and my children played together at times at my home in Chestnut Hill.

He has helped me in my work in the Senate. He has clarified, by his able editing, many of my remarks and made clearer and more forceful by his editing what I was trying to say.

Always pleasant, always patient, never rattled, seemingly with time for all, he has been one of the forces in the background that has made the Senate function successfully as the greatest deliberative body in the world.

I join in congratulating him upon his fine record of service and thank him for his friendship.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I happened to be absent from the Senate yesterday when tributes were being paid to Mr. Murphy. When I returned I congratulated him personally. I wish to pay my tribute to his great service and to associate myself with the fine remarks which have been made concerning him.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber yesterday when tributes were made to James W. Murphy, that great gentleman and accomplished official reporter of debates who helps us all so much. It would not be possible for me to operate without the assistance of Mr. Murphy. He tells me he must make considerably more changes in my remarks in the RECORD than he did in those of my father-in-law, the distinguished former Senator from New York, James W. Wadsworth, Jr.

I am very glad and proud at this time to express my deep appreciation to him for all his help.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, last evening I stepped out of the Senate Chamber when nice things were said about James W. Murphy, our official reporter. I could not let this occasion go without expressing my appreciation for the life that is lived among us. From the first day I came into the Senate, 17½ years ago, he has had a smile and a gracious greeting for me, a Republican. In those days Republicans were scant articles.

There is a saying that men are rich only as they give. He who gives great service gets great returns. I was particularly impressed with the remarks of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] about Mr. Murphy, when he spoke of the dignity of the gentleman and how much individual Senators owed him for the errors of grammar he found in their remarks and corrected. I know he aided me in that way. However, I found James W. Murphy a philosopher and a wit. He not only enjoyed right ideas, but I found also that he liked good Wisconsin cheese which, of course, is another indication that he is a wise man of good taste. I know of no one who has served individual Senators, including myself, more helpfully than he has. A great public servant he has been and never missed an opportunity to aid and assist.

The desire for friendship is strong in every human heart. We all crave the companionship of those who have understanding. James W. Murphy has understanding, that is why he has been a friend to so many of us. I too join with my associates in hoping that he will be with the Senate many more years and continue to render the wonderful service he has given in the past.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, much to my regret, I was not available on the floor of the Senate yesterday evening when the fine resolution submitted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] drew a rising vote of thanks from the Members of the Senate for the excellent and long service rendered to this body by James W. Murphy, our Official Reporter.

I, too, wish to join my colleagues in congratulating Mr. Murphy on his 60th year of reporting in the United States Senate. It is of personal interest to me that Mr. Murphy began reporting debates in the United States Senate 11 days before I was born. At that time the Senators from South Carolina were the late Benjamin R. "Pitchfork" Tillman and John L. M. Irby. Were they here today I know that they would certainly wish to join us in thanking Mr. Murphy.

Since that day in 1896 when he began reporting and until today he has probably seen at first hand more history made than any other living American. I was delighted to see in the remarks of my distinguished colleague from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] the fact that the great South Carolina son, Senator John C. Calhoun, in 1848, engaged the services of the first member of the Murphy family to begin the first official reporting of Senate debates and that this fine family since that time has continuously reported the Senate debates.

In my few years of service in the Senate Mr. Murphy has rendered invaluable service to me, and I wish to take this opportunity to pay tribute to him.

ROCK CREEK PARK

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, early in the life of this, the 84th Congress, I introduced a resolution which had as its purpose the prevention of the use of the length of Rock Creek Park for an expressway, thus depriving the Washington community of a considerable part of that magnificent park and recreation area available to this growing National Capital area.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs, of which I have the honor to be chairman. Extended hearings were held on the proposal, but no committee action has been taken or urged.

I rise to say that the fact that the committee has taken no action is in nowise an indication of willingness on the part of the committee or the Congress to let Rock Creek Park become the location of such highway development as has been proposed. There were sufficient reasons why no action seemed needed by the committee on the resolution.

In the first place, while there was a real threat to a use other than that intended under law for Rock Creek Park, there developed evidence that the plan for a highway in Rock Creek Park in Maryland down to the District portion of the park was being abandoned. This apparent abandonment would seem to indicate that there was recognition that perhaps existing law clearly forbid the use of the park for such superhighways as were contemplated, and that further legislation was not necessary to insure preservation of the park to its intended purposes.

The National Park Service has clearly indicated an uncompromising opposition to the loss of Rock Creek Park to accommodate expressways or highways other than of the nature that now exist therein. I doubt that there is need for legislation beyond what is now on the statute books to guard this great park and preserve it. But should there be continuing threat to its loss to highways I will be found reintroducing my resolution next January and pressing for whatever steps seem to be required to make certain that Rock Creek Park will not be lost to the people and the Nation in order to satisfy roadbuilding appetites.

HOW SAFE IS THE POULTRY YOU EAT?

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, yesterday's Washington Daily News carried an item which said:

> Health officials in Ypsilanti, Mich., said the sudden fever and nausea that hospitalized 40 eastern Michigan college students was "Salmonella murium," caused by infected poultry, and is very distressing, but almost never fatal.

Poultry dishes are responsible for from one-fourth to one-third of nonmilk, food-borne illnesses in the United States. Occurrences such as the Michigan affair are frequent. Tragically, some poultry-borne disease outbreaks, such as psittacosis, result in fatalities. Such an outbreak only recently took three lives in Oregon.

One of the things that this Congress has failed to do is enact a compulsory poultry inspection bill which would require poultry and poultry products moving in interstate commerce to meet the same sort of standards for wholesomeness and purity that red meats and other foods and drugs are required to meet. Consumers and poultry workers must still wait a while for protection against the flow of filth and disease which some poultry plants are sending to market.

This is a matter that must have early attention of the new Congress. A bill must be passed which will provide real protection—not a bill watered down by processor pressure to the point that inspection becomes only an aid to marketing for the processors.

Eventually the poultry processing industry is going to accept inspection comparable to red meat inspection, with decent standards of wholesomeness and an enforcible penalties provision. It is unfortunate for reputable processors, for consumers, for workers in the processing plants, and for poultry producers, that an adequate bill was not passed this year.

One of the results of the delay is inevitably going to be increasing publicity about salmonella outbreaks, psittacosis outbreaks, and the unreliability of the wholesomeness and fitness of poultry and poultry products in the market place.

I ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD, at the close of my remarks, an article which appears in the August issue of Redbook magazine entitled "How Safe Is the Poultry You Eat?" Besides appearing in the magazine, I learn the article is being distributed by thousands in pamphlet form.

I want to commend the authors of the story, Ruth and Edward Brecher, a distinguished team of science writers, and the publisher and editors of Redbook for the article's excellence and forthrightness. I believe they have done a distinct public service in writing and publishing How Safe Is the Poultry You Eat? The public is entitled to the facts.

I regret that such articles need to be printed. They will undoubtedly continue in the months just ahead, and they will do undeserved harm to poultry producers and reputable processors, the great majority, because a minority of unprogressive processors succeeded in blocking a bill in this Congress.

It is my sincere hope that it will not take another book like Upton Sinclair's The Jungle, which brought on red meat inspection in 1906, to get adequate poultry inspection, but that a proper bill can be passed quickly when the 85th Congress convenes.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an article which appeared in the August issue of Red Book.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOW SAFE IS THE POULTRY YOU EAT?

(By Ruth and Edward Brecher)

(This article is the result of months of painstaking investigation. The facts are not pleasant. But to protect your family's health, you must know them and what to do about them.)

It happens in many families. No doubt it happens occasionally in yours.

For company dinner you serve roast chicken complete with stuffing, and everyone remarks how delicious it tastes. But a few hours later, one of the children complains of feeling sick at his stomach. He runs a fever, develops stomach cramps and suffers from diarrhea—perhaps also headache and vomiting. Soon another member of your family falls ill, and then another.

According to reports forwarded each week by State health officials to the United States Public Health Service: Somewhere between one-fourth and one-third of all foodborne disease outbreaks investigated in the United States during the past few years have been associated with poultry or poultry dishes.

Sworn affidavits from poultry-plant employees—members of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, an AFL-CIO union—have been collected as part of the union's drive to clean up poultry processing throughout the country. They describe conditions so revolting that we wouldn't ask you to read about them if your own health did not depend on learning the facts and if your support were not needed for local, State and Federal cleanup efforts. Here is a typical affidavit:

"My name is Ruth V——— and I am a resident of ———. A large percentage of the chickens processed at this plant during the past year were sick. * * * I also processed many chickens that were full of worms. * * * They were very much alive. * * * When I asked the supervisors what to do about these chickens, I was told to scrape them out and send them on down the line."

Another affidavit describes chickens with scabs or sores on their bodies and then adds: "After taking the skin or cutting the sores off, I would pack them in boxes and see them loaded on trucks to be taken to market. Others would have different parts that had turned green and would have the green parts cut off and the rest of the carcass would be packed and loaded for market."

Perhaps you think that this doesn't concern you, since the poultry you buy is obviously in fine condition. But don't be too sure. Even a chicken or turkey in the prime of health at the moment of slaughter may be seriously—and invisibly—contaminated by the time it leaves the slaughtering plant.

"In far too many plants," says Dr. Oscar Sussman, chief veterinarian of the New Jersey State Department of Public Health, "sick poultry and well poultry are handled by the same employees, scalded in the same pots, cut open on the same tables and chilled in the same vats, so that even though only 1 chicken in a hundred is infected to begin with, the whole hundred may be shipped to market carrying any one of some 26 diseases which are shared by man and bird.

MODERN METHODS DO NOT INSURE SOUND POULTRY

The story behind this national poultry scandal should interest all housewives—but particularly the younger generation. Older women can still remember, of course, the days when they purchased poultry alive, or at least with the head and insides still intact. Housewives in those days used to examine a bird carefully before buying it and knew how to make their selection on the basis of external good health. Later, at home, they inspected the liver, gizzard and other internal organs. If they saw signs of disease, the bird went back to the butcher. But the young housewife today has no such safeguard. Most of the poultry she buys is "ready to cook." Although this is an excellent way of buying if the poultry is healthy originally and is processed under sanitary conditions, it permits and even encourages the marketing of infected carcasses.

Fortunately, there are methods by which you can protect your family from poultry-borne infections—simple methods which you can apply in your own kitchen, but which are known to few young housewives today. We want to tell you about these methods and also about proposals for assuring that poultry is clean and safe to eat before it reaches your kitchen.

For 50 years now it has been illegal to ship beef, pork, lamb, or other red-meat products in interstate commerce unless they have been slaughtered under sanitary conditions and inspected by Government veterinarians. Many States also have compulsory meat-inspection laws. The results have been excellent; housewives throughout the country buy meat with confidence.

But when the meat-inspection laws were being passed, the poultry business was still relatively small, and poultry was not included under the laws.

True, there is a Government inspection service. But this inspection is voluntary rather than compulsory, and must be paid for by the poultry processor. Only those conscientious companies that are willing to pay the costs have Government inspectors on duty.

The result is that reliable companies use the voluntary inspection service, but the unscrupulous and unsanitary companies—the ones most in need of inspection—ship their poultry uninspected. Less than one-fourth of the poultry marketed in the United States today has been subjected to Federal inspection.

Even 20 years ago the problem was not too serious since poultry was for the most part slaughtered and processed on a relatively small scale. Then, during World War II, shortages of beef and pork tremendously expanded the market for ready-to-cook poultry. As compared with 143 million broilers marketed in 1940, more than 1 billion were marketed last year. We now eat nearly 7 billion pounds of poultry a year for which we pay about $4 billion.

For a closer look at the conditions under which some of our poultry is processed today, consider this description of one large poultry plant visited in 1955 by inspectors from the veterinary meat inspection division of the city of Newark, N. J.:

"Receiving platform—accumulation of manure and dead chickens * * * weighing scales unsanitary with accumulation of rust and cobwebs. * * * Wooden feeding troughs have accumulation of dirt, cobwebs and rusted pipes. * * * Sewer gutters contain an accumulation of stagnant waters and waste materials. * * * Accumulation of feathers strewn over floor. * * * Undigested food from chicken crops allowed to contaminate poultry. * * * Poultry not cleaned and washed prior to chilling. * * * No sterilizing facilities. * * * No suitable outer garments worn by most employees." Into such plants as these come sick chickens as well as healthy ones—and these are the very plants that lack Government inspection services.

The plants of reputable poultry processors, on the other hands, are marvels of efficiency, as well as sanitation. A farmer knows better than to ship sick poultry to these well-managed plants, for visibly unhealthy birds may be rejected at the doors. Each step in the processing is carried out under scrupulously sanitary conditions designed to prevent cross-contamination from one bird to another.

Before plucking, for example, the birds are scalded in a tank through which flows an adequate supply of fresh hot water. Better yet, hot water is sprayed on each bird individually. The birds are not cut open and drawn on a common table, but rather each bird is drawn on an individual tray which is cleaned and disinfected before reuse; or else the birds are hung on hooks and opened while hanging. A vacuum cleaner may be used to clean out the abdominal cavity, and the birds are washed inside and out with clean running water after evisceration. The final chilling, too, is performed by individual spraying rather than by immersion in a common vat.

Most important of all, a trained United States Department of Agriculture inspector stands over the processing line to inspect each bird and its internal organs as it passes by. Guided by Federal inspection standards, he occasionally reaches down and confiscates a bird whose liver looks suspicious or whose lungs show signs of disease. When the processing is completed, the birds that have passed inspection are packed in a sanitary manner, stamped with an emblem reading "Inspected for Wholesomeness—U. S." and safely transported to your butcher shop.

"At its best," says New Jersey's Dr. Sussman, "this system of preparing ready-to-cook poultry and canned poultry products is as safe as human ingenuity can devise. Poultry is a wonderful food. I eat lots of it myself. The only problem is that the average housewife, shopping in the average butcher shop, has less than one chance in four of getting an inspected bird prepared in this sanitary way."

The safest products of all, health officials agree, are canned poultry, canned poultry soups and other canned products generally. The large canners exercise many precautions to maintain the safety and quality of their products and, if one infected chicken should slip through their safeguards, the canning process assures that no harm will result. Safe also are various precooked "chicken dinner" products sold in frozen form. With these, too, the heat used in processing before the food reaches you assures safety when you buy. Fresh or frozen poultry, if healthy in the first place and if processed, stored and transported under sanitary conditions, is an excellent foodstuff and one which need cause no concern. In contrast to all such properly processed chickens are the so-called "New York-dressed" chickens, a type of poultry which most public health officials agree should long ago have been banned. To "New York-dress" a bird, you simply slit its throat and pluck the feathers. There is no way of telling whether the internal organs of the bird are healthy or not, since the carcass remains unopened. In this unsanitary condition the birds may be stored for considerable periods, or shipped from place to place, at varying temperatures, until they reach your meat market.

It's true that New York-dressed chickens are often chilled or frozen before transportation, but cooling procedures may actually add to the hazard.

"Perhaps the most objectionable of these procedures," says Dr. Joe W. Atkinson of the United States Public Health Service, "is that of cooling a large number of uneviscerated carcasses together in a tank or vat of water or ice-water slush. So far no satisfactory means have been devised for preventing leakage of fecal matter (bowel contents) from the vents of the carcasses during cooling, which usually requires from 2 to 6 hours. The water thus becomes contaminated by any diseased birds which are in the tank."

Don't assume you can avoid this hazard merely by refusing to buy poultry which is obviously New York dressed when you see it at your butcher's. Some butchers buy New York-dressed birds, process them in the back room and then display them as "ready to cook." Worse yet, many chickens are New York dressed initially and are then shipped to another processing plant where they are thawed, eviscerated, inspected, awarded the "Inspected for Wholesomeness—U. S." label and sent on to your butcher.

Several reputable poultry firms refuse to handle New York-dressed birds. The top level conference of State and Territorial health officers recommended last November that the interstate shipment of New York dressed poultry be banned.

Would such a law be practical? The answer is clearly "yes." Some 70 percent of our chickens are eviscerated immediately after slaughter today; there is no good reason why the remaining 30 percent should not be similary processed.

What are the diseases most likely to be transmitted from infected poultry to man?

A form of intestinal infection called salmonellosis is by far the most common. The American Public Health Association describes salmonellosis as "an acute diarrheal disorder with abdominal cramps a familiar symptom. Fever, nausea, and vomiting are frequently present. * * * Epidemics are usually traced to improperly prepared foodstuffs, particularly roast fowl."

Food poisoning caused by two kinds of germs known as staphylococci and streptococci comes next in frequency. Food poisoning often occurs even though no germs enter the human body alive, for these germs can produce a highly potent toxin which remains in the food. When you eat the food, you suffer symptoms which the American Public Health Association describes as "sometimes violent, with severe nausea, vomiting, and prostration; severe diarrhea in some cases." Even cooking the food thoroughly does not always prevent this type of food poisoning, for unlike the germs themselves, the toxins produced by the germs are very resistant to heat.

In addition to salmonellosis and food poisoning, some two dozen other diseases are shared in common by man and poultry. Several of these constitute a considerable risk for the workers who slaughter, process, and handle poultry. Fortunately, however, these diseases are not ordinarily carried to the consumer who buys eviscerated poultry.

The United States Department of Agriculture has two programs designed to improve the poultry situation—a sanitation program and an inspection program. Both are voluntary, which means that only companies wanting the services and willing to pay for them are covered. The sanitation program involves the placement in a processing plant of a so-called sanitarian, who is in theory a representative of the Government.

The sanitation program was not established, however, under laws designed to protect the consumer. Rather, this is a service to aid the marketing of farm products. Public health officials cite many reasons why the presence of a sanitarian in a plant is no substitute for actual poultry inspection.

In the first place, the sanitarian is concerned only with the cleanliness of the plant in which the birds are slaughtered. The birds themselves may have been dying of any one of a number of diseases at the time of slaughter; that is no business of his.

Moreover, although the sanitarians are in theory representatives of the United States Government, many of them are not Government officials at all, but rather employees of the company they are supposed to regulate. Worse yet, the "Government sanitarian" responsible for policing a plant may actually be one of the owners of that plant.

The shortcomings of the Department of Agriculture sanitation program are well illustrated by the case of a large New Jersey poultry company we'll call X company, which is equipped to slaughter as many as 13,000 chickens daily.

On May 2, 1955, X company and the 2 brothers who owned it pleaded guilty to a charge of shipping unfit poultry from New Jersey to Pennsylvania. Before the court passed sentence on them, a Government official informed the judge of the company's past record.

Back in June 1952, 3 crates of poultry shipped by the company into New York City had been seized. "That shipment," the Government official declared, "contained a considerable number of birds decomposed and diseased, so much so that the shipment was classed as garbage."

Three months later, there was "another instance of unfit poultry having left the defendants' plant. * * *"

On September 29, 1953, moreover, 2 inspectors visited the X company plant, "and there again they found poultry in the defendants' plant that was unfit for use, for human consumption."

Yet another 866 pounds of X company poultry was seized in June 1954, and on June 10 the company plant was once again inspected. "At the time of that inspection," the official testified, both brothers "were present and were warned again, and evidence of sick and diseased birds was found on the premises.

"At that time it was suggested that they not accept into their plant birds obviously sick and unfit * * * but they indicated their desire to secure a greater amount of poundage in their killing operation through allowing many such birds to go through."

Yet throughout this period X company was supposedly operating under the United States Department of Agriculture sanitation program, with a Government sanitarian on duty. Who was he? None other than the vice president of the company—one of the brothers who pleaded guilty on May 2, 1955, to the charge of shipping unfit poultry.

The X Company case was initiated by the United States Food and Drug Administration, which might be called our last line of defense against unfit poultry. The FDA has a general responsibility for policing food, drug and cosmetic products in interstate commerce, and its field staff checks poultry along with thousands of other items. This agency is seriously undermanned; the total time it can devote to poultry policing from coast to coast is approximately the equivalent of six full-time inspectors. Just to visit each poultry plant in the country once, the FDA estimates, would take the available staff 3 or 4 years.

The understaffing of the Food and Drug Administration makes another poultry hazard more prevalent. Many farmers in recent years have been "caponizing" their male chickens, turkeys and ducks by implanting a pellet of a sex hormone called stilbestrol in the necks of the birds while they are still young. This hormone temporarily converts the male birds into eunuchs, so that they put on weight more rapidly and reach the market in a plumper condition.

The hazards of this process were first publicized when the owners of a mink farm reported that their mink had stopped producing young mink as expected. Investigation showed that the male mink on the farm had become sterile after eating poultry heads and necks in which stilbestrol tablets had been implanted. Stilbestrol is a highly potent hormone which causes sex changes in humans as well as animals and birds.

The Food and Drug Administration, after studying the problem, concluded that poultry caponized by stilbestrol pellets is safe for human consumption if the pellet is placed high upon the bird's neck so that it will be cut off with the head. Unfortunately, however, farmers are not veterinarians. It's easy to slip the pellet into some other part of the bird.

To minimize the danger of stilbestrol in the poultry we eat, FDA insectors examined poultry shipments and seized birds that were improperly caponized. These seizures were publicized in an effort to warn farmers of the risks. No human illness traceable to stilbestrol in poultry has yet been reported. Even so, it is unfortunate, to say the least, that the Government agency responsible for safeguarding the public from this hazard is so seriously handicapped.

Your most reliable guide to safe poultry today, unquestionably, is the "Inspected for Wholesomeness—U. S." label on each bird you buy. Much of the poultry bearing this label is as lean and safe as any housewife could expect. Even so, the standards used in inspecting this poultry fall considerably short of what public health officials recommend.

In the first place, under current standards the United States Department of Agriculture inspector seldom gets to see the birds until after they have been slaughtered, scalded, and plucked. By then any infection brough in by sick birds may have contaminated the processing line. Moreover, there are some sick birds that can be easily spotted while they are still alive, but whose carcasses may look normal after slaughtering. A reliable inspection system must provide for examination of the birds before as well as after death.

Next, the present standards do not take sufficient account of possible cross-contamination of healthy birds by infected birds. Companies that fail to take adequate precautions may still get the "Inspected for Wholesomeness—U.S." label.

Equally dangerous is the willingness of the Department of Agriculture to permit a plant to operate under inspection on some days or during certain hours, but to operate without inspection at other times. Thus unfit poultry can be killed, processed, and shipped during the hours when the inspector is not on duty.

In the past, Government inspectors have been expected to check as many as 1,200 birds per hour, or 1 every 3 seconds. That seems like a rapid enough rate for inspecting a bird and its internal organs. Yet, within the past few years, Department of Agriculture procedures have been changed to permit an even more rapid flow of birds past the inspector.

Despite such glaring faults, there is no doubt that the present inspection system does some good and that you're wise to insist on poultry bearing the "Inspected for Wholesomeness—U.S." stamp. During a recent year for example, Federal inspectors condemned almost 2 million birds weighing almost 7 million pounds.

Eliminating these birds was obviously a worthwhile effort. But, remember, less than one-quarter of the poultry actually marked is inspected at all. The unfit chickens processed each year by uninspected plants may well add up to tens of millions of pounds.

What must be done to clean up this poultry mess?

Four major reforms are currently under consideration.

First of all, it is proposed that all poultry shipped in interstate commerce must be inspected. In other words, poultry should be raised to the status of other meat products.

Compulsory inspection is supported by representatives of the reputable poultry processors themselves, such as the Institute of American Poultry Industries. It is also supported by such consumer-minded organizations as the General Federation of Women's Clubs and the American Association of University Women. The principle of compulsory inspection has recently been accepted also by such farmer groups as the American Farm Bureau Federation and the Farmers' Union. Indeed, during Senate committee hearings held in May 1956 compulsory inspection was even approved by the United States Department of Agriculture. Compulsory poultry inspection may be described as the minimum reform on which almost everybody is agreed except the less reputable poultry processors.

The Amalgamated Meat Cutters Union and many public health officials believe, however, that compulsory inspection alone is not enough. These groups are urging three additional changes:

1. Transferring the inspection service from the Department of Agriculture to the United States Food and Drug Administration. The Department of Agriculture is—and should be—the farmer's and marketer's friend, not the consumer's watchdog. The FDA, in contrast, is there to safeguard the public's health.

2. Requiring antemortem as well as postmortem inspection of all poultry.

3. Charging the cost of inspection to the Government rather than to the individual processing plants. This is simple justice as well as good sense. When the company pays for the inspector, it may well expect a voice in the way his services are performed. Many of the current flaws can be traced to the fact that, if an inspector really gets tough, the company can discontinue the service.

Several bills designed to make inspection compulsory, both antemortem and postmortem, and to place poultry inspection under the Food and Drug Administration, have come up recently before Congress. These bills are supported by the AFL–CIO, the Association of State and Territorial Health Officers, the Association of Food and Drug Officials, and the General Federation of Women's Clubs. If you agree that these changes are essential to safeguard the public health, write your Senators and Congressman in support of this legislation.

The Federal Government, of course, can regulate only poultry that crosses State lines, and approximately half of all poultry is eaten within the State in which it is raised and slaughtered. Yet compulsory Federal inspection, most authorities agree, is the most important step in solving the problem, for two reasons.

In the first place, Federal inspection can be made applicable to all poultry processed in a plant that ships any of its poultry from State to State. Thus, much intrastate poultry would benefit from compulsory Federal inspection.

Second, regulation of the purely intrastate plants by State action would be relatively simple once the big problem of interstate poultry plants was solved. Today, a State health department is greatly handicapped in efforts to clean up its small intrastate plants because plants in neighboring States continue to ship uninspected poultry into the State in competition with local poultry.

A few States and cities have already established inspection services. To help others, the United States Public Health Service has recently published a model ordinance describing poultry sanitation standards that can be enforced by any State or city, and it is currently working on a similar model poultry inspection ordinance. If you want this kind of protection for your community, urge your State and city officials to adopt these two ordinances.

Poultry is a nutritious food that deserves a frequent place on your family menu. For that very reason, it is especially important that all poultry reaching the market be processed under sanitary conditions and competently inspected for wholesomeness and safety.

Although the poultry situation is shockingly bad today, there are ways of protecting yourself and your family from the conditions we have described. You can press for better inspection and control of poultry on the national, State, and local levels. And, by following the rules outlined on page 33, you can play safe in your kitchen even while unsafe poultry is being sold in the stores.

CONFLICTING ADMINISTRATION STATEMENTS

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, there are many Republicans these days who can sympathize with our would-be foreign friends who find it difficult to determine our position out of conflicting administration statements.

Mr. Nehru and others have had the riddle of whether Stassen or Dulles correctly stated the United States position on neutralism.

Republicans now have the problem of whether President Eisenhower's personal assistant, Harold Stassen, or Republican Chairman Len Hall has correctly stated the White House position on the Republican vice presidential nominee.

Both situations illustrate the confusion and the vacuum of positive leadership characteristic of the present administration of which former Governor Adlai Stevenson of Illinois spoke at the Democratic State convention in Denver, Colo., on July 20.

Governor Stevenson's address is an excellent analysis of this leadership vacuum and of the circus techniques now being put into motion to conceal the absence of real leadership from the voters during the coming campaign. I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Stevenson's address be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF ADLAI E. STEVENSON TO THE COLORADO STATE CONVENTION, BOULDER, COLO., JULY 20, 1956

It is always a pleasure for me to come to Colorado—partly because of the fresh, clear air and the beautiful mountains, and partly too because I always find so many lively and alert Democrats. This year you have even been spared the Republican invasion of recent summers.

When you took over the governorship 2 years ago, I said it was just the beginning of a Democratic renaissance in Colorado. I welcome the opportunity today to salute the man who blazed the trail—your great Governor, Ed Johnson.

And this year you are going to take over the first of your two seats in the United States Senate. I find it hard to think of two better men than your leading candidates for the senatorial nomination—Charles Brannan and John Carroll. (How useful it would be if some way could be worked out for Colorado to lend-lease its surplus political talent to one of our more underdeveloped States.)

The whole country needs a strong Colorado Democrat in the Senate next year. I can't imagine what better gift you could make—to the Democratic administration in Washington next January.

I make this confident prediction in full realization of the difficulties we face this year as a political party. Of course, there are difficulties. There always are. And I want to talk with you today about some of them.

The first is complacency, the national mood of complacency which has been created so skillfully by the present administration. Instead of informing us about our grim realities and our great opportunities, we get soothing lullabies about peace, prosperity, and progress. Instead of information we get propaganda. Even the Presidency has been used to reassure rather than educate. And a sugar diet leads to fatty degeneration.

And we haven't seen anything yet. Indeed, the heaviest barrage in political history is in the making to obscure a little longer—to the election if possible—a continuing failure of leadership in Washington that can prove disastrous. For if we continue to mark time in the face of historic change, if we remain stalled in the middle of the road, we may well wake up a generation hence to discover that the great social and political revolution of our times has passed us by, that we have lost the great struggle of the 20th century, that we have lost the cold war without firing a shot, that we are indeed no longer a dynamic, creative force in the world—a great Nation.

This, as I see it, is the great hazard of this election year. And the Republicans have the means of obscuring the leadership vacuum. They have the money. They will have the newspaper ads, and of course, the editorials. They will have the billboards, the leaflets, the radio and TV time and the big advertising agencies. With the aid of highly paid professional experts, the GOP appeal to relax and be thankful is being script-written like a sales campaign.

Did you read in the papers out here about the unveiling in Madison Square Garden last week of the Eisenhower 30-ton bandwagons—6 of them—and the dress rehearsal of how they will appear up and down the streets of America from September 1 to election day—with barrage balloons, searchlights, horses, and girls.

It's small wonder that Ringling Bros. and all the circuses have had to fold their tents this year, in the face of that kind of competition.

But bread and circuses are not enough. They couldn't save the Romans that way, and they can't save the Republicans. Money talks, but the allegiance of the American people is not for sale. Besides, it has become apparent for all to see that the Republicans are hopelessly divided, and that the President they all cynically call upon to lead the country, even the world, does not even lead his own party. In the last few days we have seen his party reject his views on school aid, foreign trade, and foreign aid, the keystone of his foreign policy.

The fact is that we have peace today because of our policy of strength and because President Truman and Secretary Acheson had the courage to do the unpopular thing and stand and fight in Korea. And insofar as peace is endangered today it is because the firm, purposeful, and sensible Voice of America is confused, contradictory, and an object of indifference, ridicule, and even contempt in many parts of the non-Communist world. Witness the recent absurd contradictions between the President, the Vice President, and the Secretary of State about neutralism and the morality of uncommitted nations—only the last of a long, humiliating series. The coalition of non-Communists was based on consent (unlike the Soviet-satellite coalition) and that consent is being withdrawn as confidence decreases. Peace is the great American aim, and the voters are asked to decide which party is best qualified to serve that aim. They are not going to decide on the basis of bandwagons and ballyhoo if they understand what's happened to America's world position in a few short years.

And if we are to restore a people's Government to the people we must also make it a lot clearer what we mean by "single interest government," by "big business government." There is nothing immoral about business, even big business. In one sense the business of America is business—that is, enterprise and efficiency and creating more comforts for more people.

What we mean is that the Eisenhower administration has granted opportunities for the few to profit at the expense of the many. I don't suppose we can any longer mention the Dixon-Yates contract which Mr. Eisenhower thought so well of not long ago and his Department of Justice now says was quite illegal.

But the examples are numerous—taxation policy, the use and the misuse of our natural resources, the use and misuse of our power potentials—electric or atomic. Likewise, the reluctance of this big business-minded Government to invest in public welfare—in homes we can afford to buy and keep; in medical services to keep us well and save us from financial disaster; in schools and teachers numerous enough and good enough; in farms we can afford to work, etc.

We can put it this way: the Eisenhower administration has wasted our opportunities for consolidating and expanding America's humanitarian and peaceful influence abroad, and for expanding the opportunities of the American people at home. Abroad the reservoir of good will once so full has sprung dangerous leaks. At home the reservoir of opportunity is at low watermark.

It is not only farmers who suffer from droughts; it is not only the small businessman who is withering. There is a drought in Washington—a drying up of the vision of our national capabilities.

Think of the opportunities that lie before us—for spiritual independence, for cultural growth, for freedom of thought and expression, for the use of our resources, for collaboration for peace with other nations. Instead we mark time and drift—and with an election coming on our Republican friends tell us "All is well; there are no issues."

Well, we won't quarrel with them for converting to their own use the principles or policies which were worked out under the bold leadership of Roosevelt and Truman. After all, imitation is the sincerest form of flattery and an administration that has no ideas of its own has the right, even the duty, to adopt those of a party that does. And after nearly 4 years of stumbling and fumbling we know those policies are not only good, but nearly foolproof.

I say that the issues are whether this country is going to go to sleep or go to work to meet its dark perils and bright prospects; whether we expect leadership or showmanship from our Government; whether we want talk or action; and whether we the people are going to decide for ourselves—or leave up to a board of directors—what is good for us.

I say that there is a vacuum of executive direction in Washington; that this administration is living on borrowed time and on borrowed policies which are wearing out; that the Republican Party is hopelessly divided on domestic policy and even more so on foreign policy; that our Government is leaderless in fact and in principle in a time of acute peril. I say that there is no substitute for a President. I say that the ship of state badly needs vision on the bridge and a hand on the rudder.

In short, I say that to arrest this deadly drift the country sorely needs new executive management—and that means a Democratic victory in November.

Then we can resume once more the long journey to the Democratic goal of equal justice under the law in a nation in which free men should manage their own lives, each as he sees fit, free from fear of the secret police and free from fear of the lords of the money market. And it was not for ourselves that we sought this goal. It was also that this Nation may continue to stand, as it has stood for so long, as a "beacon to mankind."

It is this purpose that our opponents do not understand. Their materialism, their complacency, their blindness, have so shaken the confidence of the rest of the world in American leadership that our friends are anxious and our defenses against communism are crumbling. At home they have ignored the farmer, ignored the worker, ignored the small-business man.

Some of you, I am told, are farmers. Two weeks ago today I was in the dry areas of the Corn Belt in Iowa, Missouri, and Nebraska. Everywhere were the evidences of the new farm depression. Many a livestock man told me that with prices falling and costs inflexible or rising they were worse off than in the depression of the thirties. And the saddest thing of all was the spreading failure among the young farmers who started after the war and whose slender resources are now exhausted.

And President Eisenhower and Secretary Benson have watched the farm depression expand during the past few years with a philosophic calm. But now they have adopted the Democratic idea of a soil bank. I don't know whether it was the word "bank" or the coming election that softened them up. They have even left off their preaching about the moral depravity of fixed price supports. It wasn't long ago that Democratic proposals of 90-percent supports were denounced as demogoguery and worse. But when the President proclaimed some price supports at 86 percent of parity—in an election year—that was principle. Evidently the difference between principle and demagoguery is 4 percent in this hound's-tooth administration, and the President who was applauded as a man of firm principles and flexible prices when he started has got around to flexible principles and firm prices—in an election year.

Actually, I used to wonder if Mr. Eisenhower didn't get parity and par mixed up—86 sounds so much better than 90 as a golf score.

To summarize my views on the farm situation would tax your patience, but I must add that in the recent book on the Eisenhower administration it says that at a Cabinet meeting last October that great agricultural expert, George Humphrey, Secretary of the Treasury, said that he questioned whether much could be done about the farm problem, "except," as he put it, "to let natural processes do their work."

It was such unctuous words—let natural processes do their work—in another Republican administration that condemned the farmers to years of bleak and grinding poverty back in the twenties after the first war.

Well, I believe sometimes in letting natural processes do their work too. And I believe that natural processes will soon restore to Washington those of us who believe in the farmer—and believe in helping the farmer to help himself.

The vacuum of leadership is not confined to economic matters—on which President Eisenhower has said he is "conservative." This vacuum has proved even more ominous in the area of human freedom—where the President lays verbal claim to being "liberal."

If America is about anything, it is about the liberty of the individual. How has the Eisenhower-Nixon administration handled this precious responsibility?

First the President sat passively by while Senator McCARTHY conducted his campaign against freedom, terrorizing the Government, assailing the Foreign Service and the Army, and doing his general best to shoot up the town.

Then the President sat passively by while NIXON and other prominent colleagues shouted about all the Communists, fellow travelers and security risks they had cleaned out of the Government. But it turned out that there were no Communists and that they themselves had hired half the so-called security risks.

Then the President sat passively by while his Vice President tried by innuendo to cast a veil of disloyalty over the opposition party in the 1954 campaign. You in Colorado have good reason to remember Mr. NIXON'S contributions to that campaign, his vicious assaults on John Carroll and the unspeakable full-page ads that this self-righteous bunch published all over Colorado. But did I say that the President sat passively by? I am wrong; he sent the Vice President a letter of commendation at the very height of NIXON'S ill-will tour.

In the same way, the President has sat passively by while America has wrestled with the anguished problem of racial segregation and civil rights. Here, I said last February, is an area where prestige of the Presidential office could put to active, positive use—to help restore communication between the reasonable people of both sides, and to further our full understanding that the current of freedom and equality sweeping across the world is inexorable and irreversible, and that what is right is also law. Yet, while this great test of our moral maturity shakes the Nation, no word, no guidance has come from the White House.

Inertia is the rule across the board. But there is no executive pressure, no party coherence, no Presidential leadership.

Indecision is passed off as wisdom, postponement as statesmanship, stagnation as progress in this cynical attempt to conceal the vacuum of leadership behind a barrage of propaganda, deception, and ballyhoo.

The Republican formula is simple—it is pabulum on the Potomac.

And against the Republican cult of showmanship there stands the calm and traditional confidence of the Democratic Party that the American people can be trusted to act intelligently when they are told the truth.

This was the real secret of our 20 years' tenure of power. Against the massed power of nearly all the money in the country, nearly all the agencies of propaganda in the country, and all the disaffected and disgruntled people in the country, we won 5 successive elections. The string of victories was not broken until the Republican Party masked its purposes behind a great national hero in whom that party leadership did not believe and whom it had no intention of supporting.

To explain our success, the Republicans have built up one of the most curious myths in political history. Ignoring the obvious, they have evolved a theory that it was some sort of diabolical magic, all done with mirrors and sleight of hand. They will not, they cannot accept the truth that all the magic lay in having the courage to tell the people the plain truth. That courage, and that alone, comprised the witchcraft of Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman.

But to have the courage to tell the people the truth you must believe in the people. You must believe that, if they are given the facts, they will make an intelligent decision. The party of privilege has never believed this—from Alexander Hamilton to Charles E. Wilson, George Humphrey, and the Eisenhower Cabinet—men so rich we are supposed to conclude they must be wise.

If you believe that you can manage the people better than they can manage themselves, you never can understand men like Roosevelt and Truman.

More than that, you can never understand America.

How ridiculous it all is—that our Nation, on the verge of its greatest and most exciting future, should stand uncertain and hesitant, mired in the materialism and complacency of its leadership.

Woodrow Wilson once stated the whole program of the Democratic Party in a phrase. Its destiny, he said, was to release the generous energies of our people.

This is our challenge. We must break the logjam. We must end the stagnation. We must cut the bonds that tie us to the ground.

There is work to be done. There is a chance for youth and vigor and imagination to provide the leadership which America and the world so desperately need. The slogans of yesterday, whether the slogans of liberalism or the slogans of conservatism, are not adequate to the crisis of today. In the spirit of this great convention, we must strike out on new roads, moving forward together toward freedom, toward abundance, and toward peace.

America was not born to stand still. It was born to move steadily ahead—to demonstrate to all the world the power of freemen and the meaning of freedom.

Let us start today. We have no time to waste. And the first milestone will be a Democratic victory in November.

FINAL TESTIMONY BEFORE SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE AIR FORCE OF THE SENATE ARMED SERVICES COMMITTEE

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, only last week final testimony was taken by the Senate Subcommittee on the Air Force of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

All that testimony has not yet been finally cleared by the Department of Defense; and therefore cannot be printed for some time.

For these and other reasons it would seem inadvisable for the committee now to submit a report to the full committee and the Congress.

In a sense the published testimony itself can be considered an interim report.

I desire to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to the four other members of the subcommittee for their courtesy and cooperation in conjunction with the conduct of these hearings.

At this time also, for myself and all other members of the subcommittee, I especially want to thank its distinguished counsel, Mr. Fowler Hamilton, of New York.

Prior to the close of the hearings the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] stated:

I think our counsel, Mr. Fowler Hamilton, the counsel of the committee, has done a fine job in giving us all the facts. * * * Mr.

Chairman, may I just add, as I stated about the counsel a while ago, I believe the chairman chose his counsel and assistant counsel wisely and I commend the chairman in that.

Likewise, the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUFF] stated:

I would like to join in the commendation of the counsel. I think he has conducted himself with great fairness and ability and impartiality all through these hearings and I think he deserves the highest praise for the way he has conducted himself.

Mr. President, in the years I have been in Washington I have never seen a more outstanding job than that done by the able lawyer in question; and I am sure the American people will ever be grateful for his wise guidance throughout these hearings.

The record itself constitutes a permanent monument to his tolerance, his tact, his energy, and his extraordinary ability.

Both his bearing and conduct, as well as that of his fine assistant counsel, Mr. Ramsay Potts, were in the best tradition of the Senate.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. SYMINGTON. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I wish to join with the Senator from Missouri in his expressions concerning the counsel of the subcommittee, and I might add the name of Mr. Fred Rhodes who has helped the minority in their work concerning Air Force problems.

With what the Senator has said in relation to writing a report at this time I am heartily in accord. It cannot be done. I hope that we shall ultimately write a report which will be as nearly unanimous as we can make it. Whether that can be done as yet remains to be seen. I am glad the hearings have closed. I appreciate the courtesy of the chairman in connection with the hearings, although I might say, very frankly, that he and I did not always agree on the conclusions to be drawn from the testimony. But we did agree that Mr. Fowler Hamilton and his associate helped the subcommittee enormously and did a fine factual job. I am in hearty agreement with the Senator from Missouri in his commendation of those gentlemen, and I should like to add the name of Fred Rhodes.

Mr. SYMINGTON. I thank the Senator. I mentioned the fine work of Mr. Fred Rhodes at the time of the last public hearing.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. SYMINGTON. I yield.

Mr. JACKSON. I should like, Mr. President, to associate myself with the remarks of the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SYMINGTON], and of the ranking minority member, the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL].

I wish to compliment the chairman on the fair and earnest way in which he conducted the hearings. The hearings could not have been carried on successfully without the able support of an outstanding staff headed and directed by an able and distinguished lawyer, Fowler Hamilton. He lived up to all the expectations of those of us who served on the subcommittee. He always confronts problems in a lawyer-like manner. He is fair and objective. His objective at all times was to ferret out the truth in the interest of the security of the country.

We who sat through the long hearings know and appreciate the assistance which Fowler Hamilton gave to members of the subcommittee on both sides of the aisle. He was ably assisted by Ramsey D. Potts, Edward C. Welsh, of the chairman's office, Wallace Engle, and other members of the Preparedness Subcommittee.

Mr. Fred Rhodes also, in his role as a representative of the minority, was helpful on any matter in which he could be of help or could make a contribution to the work of the subcommittee.

It is a compliment to the distinguished junior Senator from Missouri that he was able to get together such an excellent staff for both sides of the aisle in this all-important undertaking.

Mr. SYMINGTON. I thank the distinguished Senator from Washington for his kind words, and know every member of the staff will appreciate them.

On the last day of public hearings I also complimented the entire staff, including the incomparable work of Mr. Welsh from my office.

Mr. DUFF. Mr. President, as a member of the Subcommittee on Preparedness, I associate myself with the remarks made by the chairman and other members of the subcommittee. I forget exactly how many meetings we had. I think it was 66, of which I had the pleasure of attending 65.

To show the magnitude of the work, I believe I am correct in saying that there were about a million words of testimony taken before the committee. If my Biblical knowledge is correct, that is about as many words as are in the Bible, in both the Old and the New Testaments. That indicates very definitely the magnitude of the undertaking.

I never saw anyone show greater assiduity in the performance of an obligation than the chairman of the subcommittee showed. The relationships throughout the hearings were wonderful. The vast number of witnesses who were examined, the information which was gathered, and the reports which I hope will be made with unanimity to the Senate will make a most valuable contribution to the knowledge of the Senate and the whole country with respect to the posture of the military affairs of the Nation.

It was a real pleasure and privilege to have been a member of this subcommittee. I consider it to be a great honor to be associated with all members of the subcommittee, and I join heartily in all the expressions which have been made on the floor of the Senate this morning.

Mr. SYMINGTON. In turn it has been a privilege to be associated with the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania, whose wise counsel and cooperation were so heartily given.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I associate myself with the remarks which have been made concerning the work of the Subcommittee on Preparedness. It has been a rare privilege to serve with the other members of the subcommittee, who, I think, have given priority to this assignment, so far as possible, over all their other undertakings. I commend each member of the subcommittee for the devotion to duty which he has manifested; and I pay tribute to our chairman, the distinguished junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SYMINGTON]. He has brought to the discharge of his duties a comprehensive knowledge of the problem, a knowledge which, in my judgment, is second to none in America. He has shown complete devotion to the task assigned to the subcommittee, and has done a magnificent piece of work.

I also commend the work of the staff, particularly that of Mr. Fowler Hamilton, who, to use an expression which is frequently quoted in the decisions of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, brought to the discharge of his duties as chief counsel of the subcommittee the neutrality of an impartial judge in assembling and presenting the testimony. He deserves the thanks of the Nation for what he has done.

Mr. SYMINGTON. I thank the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, and am very grateful for what he said.

I close by thanking the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Armed Services [Mr. RUSSELL] for enabling us to set up this subcommittee to look into the problem of relative airpower which now confronts the Nation. I thank also the distinguished majority leader [Mr. JOHNSON of Texas] for lending from the Subcommittee on Military Preparedness, of which he is chairman, many members of his staff.

PRINTING OF MATERIAL IN FINAL ISSUES OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon will state it.

Mr. MORSE. I desire to ascertain whether it is planned, following the final adjournment of Congress, to permit Senators to have printed in the final issues of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD speeches and other material which they will not be able to have ready for insertion in the final issue of the RECORD before adjournment, either today or tomorrow, whenever it will be.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I will say to the Senator that that request is usually made, along with other requests, prior to adjournment, and we shall follow that course this year.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, before I make my unanimous consent request, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as soon as I can complete its preparation, within the next 2 or 3 days, a reply to the statement which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD some days ago, purporting to answer my criticisms of the National Labor Relations Board. I am in the midst of preparing a reply to the Senator from New Jersey as to what I consider to be gross inaccuracies and distortions that honeycomb the statement the Senator from New Jersey placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent that I may insert my statement, when I complete it, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, of course I have no objection to the Senator's doing that, but for the purpose of any further replies we may want to make, I believe we should like to have the same privilege.

Mr. MORSE. I did not hear the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I say, I have no objection to what the Senator from Oregon has requested, but I think we should have the same privilege.

Mr. MORSE. I take it for granted that the Senator from New Jersey would have that privilege, and I may say that I shall carry the fight all through the campaign this fall.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. That is all right with me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEHMAN in the chair). Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

INCREASED AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS TO ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2859, Senate bill 4288.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 4288) to increase the authorization for appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission for acquisition of real property.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, under the present law the Atomic Energy Commission cannot proceed with a certain project without the Congress enacting a law giving the Commission authority to proceed. The project involved happens to be a defense project, for which an authorization of about $15 million is desired by the Atomic Energy Commission for the construction of a prototype reactor. There should be no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 4288) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, the bill just passed is a Senate bill. I believe it would be preferable to act on a similar House bill, H. R. 11709, strike out everything after the enacting clause of the House bill and substitute the text of the Senate bill, as passed, in order to have proper legislative action.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I was wondering if the Senator from New Mexico has had an opportunity to compare the two bills, and ascertain whether the language of the Senate bill is precisely the same as that of the House bill, and that there is no difference, even in a comma or anything else. If so I wonder if it would not be better procedure for the Senate to pass the House bill. Otherwise, the House would have to act on what technically would be a Senate amendment to a House bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. I appreciate the suggestion of the Senator from California. I was informed that the papers on the House bill had not reached the Senate floor.

If the procedure suggested by the Senator from California is agreeable, Mr. President, I move that the vote by which Senate bill 4288 was passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House bill 11709.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a bill (H. R. 11709) to amend Public Law 506, 84th Congress, 2d session, to increase the authorization for appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission for acquisition or condemnation of real property or any facilities, or for plant or facility acquisition, construction, or expansion, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 11709.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 11709) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I ask that Senate bill 4288 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4288 is indefinitely postponed.

MR. AND MRS. RANDALL McMAHON

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2865, House bill 10898.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10898) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Randall McMahon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, this bill merely corrects an accounting error on behalf of the parents of the deceased veteran. On the veteran's death, the Veterans' Administration made awards to Mr. and Mrs. McMahon out of the wrong veterans' fund.

This bill will permit a correction of the error to be made, relieving the McMahons of liability to the one fund and eliminates their rights to receive payments out of the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEGOTIATIONS RELATIVE TO A COMPACT BETWEEN ARIZONA AND CALIFORNIA

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2861, House bill 11911.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 11911) to authorize negotiations with respect to a compact to provide for a definition or relocation of the common boundary between Arizona and California, and for the appointment by the President of a Federal representative to the compact negotiations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the original boundary between Arizona and California was the Colorado River as it existed at the time of the creation of the Territory of Arizona in 1864. The river has meandered a great many degrees in many places. It was determined that it would be necessary for the two States to come to an agreement with reference to determining the present boundary. The two States appointed commissions authorized by their State legislatures. The commissions made certain findings which have been ratified by the legislatures; but to make the findings effective the Constitution requires approval by Congress. The bill provides approval of the formal action taken by the two States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANSFIELD in the chair). The bill is open to amendment.

If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 11911) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERCORPORATE RELATIONS BETWEEN GENERAL PUBLIC UTILITIES CORP. AND MANILA ELECTRIC CO.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2841, House bill 10624.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10624) relating to intercorporate relations between the General Public Utilities Corp., a corporation organized and operating in the United States, and the Manila Electric Co.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. DUFF. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill, H. R. 10624, is to permit the General Public Utilities Corp., a corporation organized and operating in the United States, to continue to operate and manage the Manila Electric Co., its subsidiary. The latter company has been continuously operated as a subsidiary prior to 1935, when the Public Utility Holding Company Act was enacted.

The Philippine Government, itself supports this bill. The Department of State supports the bill. The International Cooperation Administration supports the bill.

In supporting this proposed legislation, the Philippine Government has taken the position that a sale of the Manila Electric Co. would be detrimental to the Philippine economy.

The Department of State supports this proposal on the grounds that the very creditable performance of the Manila Electric Co. under its present ownership "advances the foreign economic policy of the United States by giving practical demonstration to foreign countries of the advantages which accrue to such countries through the investment of American capital."

The International Cooperation Administration is of the belief that the enactment of this bill would be in conformity with the objectives of the Mutual Security Act of 1954, as amended.

The Bureau of the Budget has no objection to the passage of this legislation.

The Securities and Exchange Commission alone has indicated its opposition to this legislation, merely on the ground that this bill, if enacted, would represent a deviation from a present technical provision of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935. The deviation, it is charged, springs from the fact that the additional integrated public-utility system here sought to be retained by General Public Utilities Corp., is located in the Philippines, a country not contiguous to our own. Otherwise, there is neither deviation nor objection.

The substance of the Commission's objection is predicated, not upon any inherent possible considerations arising out of the simultaneous operation of more than one integrated public utility system, but merely upon the fact that one of the systems is located in the Philippines, and hence not contiguous to our own country, where a domestic integrated public-utility system is being operated by the General Public Utilities Corp.

Considering the technical objection of the Securities and Exchange Commission, on the one hand, as against the substantive considerations advanced in support of the legislation, on the other, it is my opinion, Mr. President, that this bill is meritorious, deserves support, and should be enacted. The bill was passed unanimously in the House, and was reported from our committee without dissent.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I recommend the passage of this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 10624) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF CERTAIN RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 2862, House bill 6586.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6586) to amend section 7 of the War Claims Act of 1948, with respect to claims of certain religious organizations functioning in the Philippine Islands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 1, line 3, after the word "section", to insert "7".

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the purpose of the proposed legislation is to add a new subsection to the War Claims Act of 1948 (50 App. U. S. C., sec. 2006) to broaden the act to make cognizable claims by any religious organization functioning in the Philippines which is of the same denomination as a religious organization functioning in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2863, House bill 10468.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10468) creating the city of Lawrenceburg Bridge Commission, and authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, House bill 10468, as amended, would create the city of Lawrenceburg Bridge Commission and authorize it to construct and operate a bridge, and to acquire and operate the existing ferry operating between Lawrenceburg, Ind., and Boone County, Ky. The Commission may fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Army under the General Bridge Act of 1946, and may fix such rates of toll for the use of the ferry as it may deem proper with due regard to rates of toll for use of the bridge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 10468) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO AT CANNELTON, IND.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2864, House bill 10662.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10662) creating the city of Cannelton Bridge Commission and authorizing a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cannelton, Ind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas for the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, House bill 10662 would create the City of Cannelton Bridge Commission and authorize it to construct and operate a bridge, and to acquire and operate the existing ferry operating between Cannelton, Ind., and Hawesville, Ky. The commission may fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge and ferry, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Army under the General Bridge Act of 1946.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 10662) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ORGANIC ACT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2860, House bill 11682.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 11682) to facilitate the control and eradication of certain animal diseases, to facilitate the carrying out of agricultural and related programs, to facilitate the agricultural attaché program, to facilitate the operations of the Farmers' Home Administration, the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, and the Forest Service, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for the immediate consideration of the bill

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a general statement concerning the bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

This bill provides permanent authorizing legislation for many activities heretofore authorized by appropriation act, thereby removing a ground for parliamentary objection to future appropriation acts. In addition, sections 4 and 5 extend to all agencies of the Department of Agriculture provisions heretofore applied only to the Forest Service and the Soil Conservation Service; section 8 provides authority for expenditures to extend courtesies to representatives of foreign governments, section 12 provides for travel expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence in certain cases for temporary and seasonal classes and graders of agricultural commodities, and section 16 provides a working capital fund for the Forest Service.

GENERAL STATEMENT

The Ogranic Act of the Department of Agriculture, enacted May 15, 1862 (sec. 520 Rev. Stat.; 5 U. S. C. 511), provides that the general design and duties of the Department of Agriculture shall be to acquire and diffuse among the people useful information on subjects connected with agriculture "in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word." Many of the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture are supported by this organic law. However, from time to time there have been included in the appropriation acts a number of provisions legislative in character, some of which have been substantive and others, perhaps the majority, have been of a facilitating or incidental nature.

In 1944 this committee reviewed the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act and proposed, and there was enacted into law, the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944 (58 Stat. 734), to provide basic authority for the provisions concerned. Since that time a number of facilitating provisions important to the effective operation of the Department's programs have been inserted in the annual appropriation acts. Recognizing that these additional legislative provisions may be necessary, the committee has scrutinized the appropriation acts for the Department of Agriculture with a view to providing such permanent legislative authorities as are needed, adopting for this purpose the approach taken when the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944 was enacted. Most of the provisions in the bill H. R. 11682 relate to authorities which appear in the Department of Agriculture and Farm Credit Appropriation Act, 1957, and will provide legislative authority without change for provisions which have appeared in the appropriation act. Three of the items proposed—sections 8, 12, and 13—do not appear in the 1957 Appropriation Act. However, they fall within the general scope of the subject matter of the bill and have therefore been included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 11682) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIMINUTION, CONTROL, AND TREATMENT OF JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2813, Senate bill 4267.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 4267) to provide for assistance to and cooperation with States in strengthening and improving State and local programs for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I have been requested to ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3914) to amend sections 801, 802, and 1102 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended.

IMPORTATION OF SWISS 17-JEWEL WATCHES

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS] desires to make a brief statement. I yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, there is one item of proposed legislation that I had hoped to see passed at the current session. Both the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN] have recently discussed this measure at meetings of the Senate Finance Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member; but for reasons to which I shall refer in a moment, it now seems unlikely that this measure can be enacted in the closing days of the current session.

I had hoped to see this measure passed, not only because of its own substantive importance, and not only because of the strong support of this measure by the Senator from Georgia, but also because of the interest that was taken in this matter by our beloved colleague, the late Alben W. Barkley.

The measure to which I refer has been introduced in the Senate by our colleague, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN] as S. 4157. At the request of the administration, a companion bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives on a bipartisan basis by Representative MILLS and Representative REED.

These bills are similar to, and designed to accomplish the same purpose as, a measure which was discussed on the floor of the Senate just a year ago by Senator Barkley. Speaking on the floor of the Senate on this same subject on July 30, 1955, Senator Barkley gave the following explanation of the proposed legislation which then was pending:

In recent years—in the past 2 or 3 years—a practice has developed in the Swiss watch industry, in cooperation with certain American importers, to bring into this country 17-jewel watches which have been so manufactured as to contain 4 concealed components into which jewels can be inserted—so that the watches come in as 17-jewel watches, on which there has to be paid only $3.15 tariff.

After those watches come into this country, the little plugs or metal pieces are removed, 4 jewels are inserted, and the watches then become 21-jewel watches. The tariff duty paid on such watches was only $3.15 instead of the $10.75 which would have to be paid on a watch which contained 21 jewels. * * * (This is) a practice which on its face seems to be designed to cheat the Treasury of the United States out of tariffs to which it is entitled.

That ends the quotation from Senator Barkley's remarks of July 30, 1955, concerning the legislation which he so cogently explained last year.

I deeply regret, however, that, apparently owing to the press of other business, the House Ways and Means Committee, which last year voted favorably on the predecessor legislation, as Senator Barkley pointed out in the remarks from which I have just quoted, has not yet called up this legislation for action. Accordingly, even though the Senate Finance Committee unanimously approved the principle of this legislation a year ago, as Senator Barkley advised the Senate at that time, and even though the Senate Finance Committee continues to be favorable to the principle of this legislation and intends to see it enacted once it reaches this body, nevertheless, since the legislation is essentially a revenue measure, the Senate Finance Committee has thus far refrained from taking any specific action prior to House action on the measure.

It may be that the Senate Finance Committee will want to take the initiative on this matter in the early days of the next Congress, without waiting any longer for House action, but I did not want to let the current session close without adding my views to those which Senator Barkley expressed last year. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] who is not on the floor at this moment, has asked me to state that he is in full agreement with the views I am now expressing.

I should like to add, also, that the need for this legislation is even more urgent now than it was in July of 1955. In the interim, the Swiss watch cartel has devised new schemes and techniques for upjeweling watches; and these new schemes and techniques threaten the very existence of our domestic watch manufacturing industry.

The revised bill which has been requested by the administration and which, as I have already mentioned, has been introduced in both the Senate and the House, is designed to stop these new techniques. This legislation, moreover, is necessary in order to prevent a serious threat to domestic production of watches in coming years, namely, a flood of imports which, taking advantage of the existing loophole in the customs law, may lead to the elimination of the remaining vestige of the American watch manufacturing industry. It is my earnest hope that the new Congress, at the earliest possible date in the session beginning in January, will put an end to the smuggling and tariff evasion that is going on in this area by enacting the legislation to which I have just referred.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. Am I correct in understanding that no amendment will be offered?

Mr. SMATHERS. No amendment will be offered. I am merely stating that it is my hope that next year the Senate Committee on Finance will consider this measure, and that some action will be taken on it.

Mr. LEHMAN. I thank the Senator.

FISH AND WILDLIFE ACT OF 1956—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3275) to establish a sound and comprehensive national policy with respect to the fisheries segment of the national economy; to establish within the Department of the Interior a Fisheries Division; to create and prescribe the functions of the United States Fisheries Commission; and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report. (For conference report, see House proceedings of July 26, 1956.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I should like to give a brief summary of the bill as agreed to by the conferees.

The main provisions of S. 3275, which the conferees agreed to unanimously, are as follows:

An Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife is provided for in the Department of the Interior. He is to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

There is also to be a Commissioner of Fish and Wildlife, to be appointed in the same manner and confirmed by the Senate, and a new United States Fish and Wildlife Service under the supervision of the Commissioner, which is to take the place of the present Fish and Wildlife Service.

Under the new Service there are to be two Bureaus—a Bureau of Commercial Fisheries, to which is to be distributed the functions of the former Fish and Wildlife Service relating primarily to commercial fisheries, whales, seals, and sea lions; and a Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife with responsibility for those matters relating primarily to migratory birds, game management, wildlife refuges, sport fisheries, and sea mammals, except whales, seals, and sea lions.

However, the funds and allocations, appropriated or otherwise, relating to the matters within the jurisdiction of the two Bureaus are to be distributed between them as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine.

The $10 million revolving fund in the House amendment for loans for financing and refinancing maintenance repair and equipment of fishing gear and vessels is retained, as well as the provision of the House amendment making the Saltonstall-Kennedy funds permanent and removing the limitation of $3 million on the annual expenditure of such funds.

The reorganization of the Fish and Wildlife functions within the Department of the Interior is to be accomplished not later than 90 days after the approval of the act.

The investigations, reports and other functions which were the responsibility of the United States Fisheries Commission under S. 3275 as passed by the Senate are now to be made and exercised by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I wish to commend the Senator, as chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, for his interest in legislation with regard to fisheries. I believe the bill represented by the conference report will be of great assistance. As I understand, the bill comes from the conference substantially as it passed the Senate.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

I appreciate the help which both Senators from Massachusetts have given in this matter. The bill is the result of a year's work. I think we have a good fisheries bill for the first time in our Nation's history.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. This is the first time commercial fisheries have been properly recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6709) for the relief of Harry M. Caudill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$335" and insert "$330.90."

The amendment was agreed to.

"(a) Any alien admitted to the United States as a nonimmigrant under the provisions of either section 101 (a) (15) (A) or 101 (a) (15) (G) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, who has failed to maintain a status under either of those provisions, and who has not been required to depart from the United States under the authority of section 241 (e) of said act, may apply to the Attorney General for adjustment of his status to that of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence.

"(b) If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that the alien is a person of good moral character, and that such action would not be contrary to the national welfare, safety, or security, the Attorney General, in his discretion, may record the alien's lawful admission for permanent residence as of the date of the order of the Attorney General approving the application for adjustment of status is made.

"(c) A complete and detailed statement of the facts and pertinent provisions of law in the case shall be reported to the Congress with the reasons for such adjustment of status. If neither the Senate nor the House of Representatives passes such a resolution within the time above specified, the Secretary of State shall, if the alien was classified as a quota immigrant at the time of his entry, reduce by one the quota of the quota area to which the alien is chargeable under section 202 of the Immigration and Nationality Act for the fiscal year then current or the next following year in which a quota is available. No quota shall be so reduced by more than 50 percent in any fiscal year.

"SEC. 313. Travel control of aliens and citizens in time of war or national emergency. (a) When the United States is at war or during the existence of any national emergency proclaimed by the President, or, as to aliens, whenever there exists a state of war between or among two or more nations, and the President shall find that the interests of the United States require that restrictions and prohibitions in addition to those provided otherwise than by this section be imposed upon the departure of persons from and their entry into the United States, and shall make public proclamation thereof, it shall, until otherwise ordered by the President or the Congress, be unlawful—

"(1) for any alien to depart from or enter or attempt to depart from or enter the United States except under such reasonable rules, regulations, and orders, and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe;

"(2) for any person to transport or attempt to transport from or into the United States another person, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the departure or entry of such person is forbidden by this section;

"(3) for any person knowingly to make any false statement in an application for permission to depart from or enter the United States with intent to induce or secure the granting of such permission either for himself or for another;

"(4) for any person knowingly to furnish or attempt to furnish or assist in furnishing to another a permit or evidence of permission to depart or enter not issued and designed for such other person's use;

"(5) for any person knowingly to use or attempt to use any permit or evidence of permission to depart or enter not issued and designed for his use;

"(6) for any person to forge, counterfeit, mutilate, or alter, or cause or procure to be forged, counterfeited, mutilated, or altered, any permit or evidence of permission to depart from or enter the United States; and

"(7) for any person knowingly to use or attempt to use or furnish to another for use any false, forged, counterfeited, mutilated, or altered permit, or evidence of permission, or any permit or evidence of permission which, though originally valid, has become or been made void or invalid.

"(b) After such proclamation as is provided for in subsection (a) has been made and published and while such proclamation is in force, it shall be unlawful, except as otherwise provided by the President, for any citizen of the United States to depart from or enter, or attempt to depart from or enter, the United States unless he bears a valid passport.

"(c) Any person who shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this section, or of any order or proclamation of the President promulgated, or of any permit, rule, or regulation issued thereunder, may, upon conviction, be fined not more than $5,000, or, if a natural person, imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both; and the officer, director, or agent of any corporation who knowingly participates in such violation shall be punished by like fine or imprisonment, or both; and any vehicle, vessel, or aircraft together with its appurtenances, equipment, tackle, apparel, and furniture, concerned in any such violation, shall be forfeited to the United States.

"(d) The term 'United States' as used in this section includes the Canal Zone, and all territory and waters, continental or insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. Such exclusion or denial of departure shall be made only upon a record adduced at such hearing. Evidence the disclosure of which the Attorney General personally certifies would seriously impair the usefulness of reliable and important sources of confidential information or would adversely affect the safety or security of the United States need not be revealed at such hearing. In all such cases the alien shall be informed as fully of the nature of the charges against him as is consistent with the safety or security of the United States.

"CHAPTER 3—ISSUANCE OF ENTRY DOCUMENTS

"SEC. 321. Visa requirements: (a) The Commission shall, after public hearing, issue rules and regulations to govern the issuance of visas to aliens. In the case of—

"(2) a nonquota immigrant, the visa shall state the particular nonquota category in which the immigrant is included;

"(3) a nonimmigrant, the visa shall state the nonimmigrant category in which the alien is included; and

"(4) in the case of any alien, the visa shall state the date on which it shall expire, and such additional information as may be required.

"(b) Each alien who applies for a visa shall be registered and fingerprinted in connection with his application, and shall furnish copies of his photograph signed by him for such use as may by regulations be required. "(c) An immigrant visa shall be valid for such period, not exceeding 120 days, as the Commission shall prescribe by regulations. A nonimmigrant visa shall be valid for such periods as the Commission shall prescribe by regulations; in the case of nationals of any foreign country who are eligible for such visas, the Commission shall, insofar as practicable, accord to such nationals the same treatment upon a reciprocal basis as such foreign country accords to citizens of the United States who are within a similar class. If prior to the expiration date of his visa an alien has departed from the jurisdiction of the Commission officer who has granted the visa, on a substantially continuous trip to the United States, then as prescribed by regulations of the Commission the expiration date of such visa shall be extended so as to include the date of such arrival in the United States. If an alien for a good cause was unable to use a visa issued to him, and applies for a new visa within 1 year from the issuance of his original visa, his application shall be given priority in the appropriate group as of the date of his original application. Such application may be made at the place of his original application or elsewhere.

"(d) Prior to the issuance of an immigrant visa to any alien, the Commission officer shall require the alien to submit to a physical and mental examination in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission. "(e) Each immigrant shall surrender his immigrant visa to the Commission officer at the port of entry, who shall endorse on the visa the date and the port of arrival, the identity of the vessel or other means of transportation by which the immigrant arrived, and such other endorsements as may by regulations be required. Each nonimmigrant shall present or surrender to the Commission officer at the port of entry such documents as may be required by the rules and regulations of the Commission.

"(f) Subject to chapter 6 and other relevant provisions, any alien crewman may be temporarily admitted to the United States without a visa if his name appears in the crew list of the vessel or aircraft upon which he arrives and the crew list is visaed by a Commission officer pursuant to rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission.

"(b) Every alien applying for an immigrant visa shall present a valid unexpired passport or affidivit in lieu thereof or other suitable travel document, or document of identity and nationality, if such document is required under regulations of the Commission. The alien shall furnish with his application two copies of a certification by the appropriate police authorities stating what their records show concerning the immigrant; two certified copies of any existing prison record, and record of his birth, and two certified copies of all other records or documents concerning him or his case which may be required by the Commission. One copy of each document so furnished shall be permanently attached to each copy of the application and become a part thereof. In the event that the alien establishes that any document or record required by this subsection is unobtainable, the alien may be permitted to submit in lieu of such document or record other satisfactory evidence of the facts to which such document or record would, if obtainable, pertain.

"(c) Every alien applying for a nonimmigrant visa shall make application therefor in such form and manner as may be prescribed by rules and regulations of the Commission. In the application the aliens shall state his full name, the date and place of birth, his citizenship, the purpose and length of his intended stay in the United States; personal description (including height, complexion, color of hair and eyes, and marks of identification); his marital status; and such additional documents and information necessary to the identification of applicant and the administration of the immigration laws as may be required.

"(d) Except as may be otherwise prescribed by regulations, each copy of an application required by this section shall be signed by the applicant in the presence of the Commission officer, and verified by the oath of the applicant administered by the officer. One copy of the application for an immigrant visa shall become the immigrant visa, and the other copy shall be disposed of as may be prescribed by regulation. The application for a nonimmigrant visa or other documentation as a nonimmigrant shall be disposed of as may be prescribed by regulation. The issuance of a nonimmigrant visa shall, except as may be otherwise prescribed by regulation, be evidenced by a stamp placed by the Commission officer in the alien's passport, affidavit in lieu thereof or other travel document.

"SEC. 323. Reentry Permits: (a) Any alien who has been lawfully admitted to the United States and who intends to depart temporarily from the United States may make application to the Commission for a permit to reenter the United States stating the length of his intended absence or absences, and the reasons therefor. Such applications shall be made under oath, and shall be in such form, contain such information, and be accompanied by such photographs of the applicant as the Commission may prescribe by rules and regulations.

"(b) If the Commission finds (1) that the applicant under subsection (a) has been lawfully admitted to the United States and since admission has maintained the status required of him and such applicant desires to visit abroad and to return to the United States to resume the status existing at the time of his departure for such visit, (2) that the application is made in good faith, and (3) that the alien's proposed departure from the United States is not for a purpose contrary to the interests of the United States, the Commission may issue the permit which shall be valid for not more than 1 year from the date of issuance. For good cause and under such conditions as it may prescribe under rules and regulations, the Commission may extend the validity of such a permit for a period or periods not to exceed 6 months each.

"(c) During the period of validity such permit may be used by the alien to return to the United States on any number of occasions and upon the expiration of its validity, shall be surrender to the Commission.

Such lists or manifests shall be prepared at such time, be in such form, and contain such information as the Commission shall prescribe by rules and regulations as being necessary for the identification of the persons transported and for the enforcement of the immigration laws. This subsection shall not require the master or commanding officer, or authorized agent, owner, or consignee of a vessel or aircraft to furnish a list or manifest relating (1) to an alien crewman or (2) to any other person arriving by air on a trip originating in foreign contiguous territory, except (with respect to such arrivals by air) as may be required by rules and regulations issued pursuant to section 338.

"(b) It shall be the duty of the master or commanding officer or authorized agent of every vessel or aircraft taking passengers on board at any port of the United States, who are destined to any place outside the United States, to file with the Commission officer before departure from such port a list of all such persons taken on board. Such list shall be in such form, contain such information, and be accompanied by such documents, as the Commission shall prescribe by rules and regulations as necessary for the identification of the persons so transported and for the enforcement of the immigration laws. No master or commanding officer of any such vessel or aircraft shall be granted clearance papers for his vessel or aircraft until he or the authorized agent has deposited such list or lists and accompanying documents with the Commission officer at such port and made oath that they are full and complete as to the information required to be contained therein, except that in the case of vessels or aircraft which the Commission determines are making regular trips to ports of the United States, the Commission may, when expedient, arrange for the delivery of lists of outgoing persons at a later date. This subsection shall not require the master or commanding officer, or authorized agent, owner, or consignee of a vessel or aircraft to furnish a list or manifest relating (1) to an alien crewman or (2) to any other person departing by air on a trip originating in the United States who is destined to foreign contiguous territory.

"(c) The Commission may order recorded the following information regarding every resident person leaving the United States by way of the Canadian or Mexican borders for permanent residence in a foreign country: Name, age, and sex; whether married or single; calling or occupation; whether able to read or write; citizenship; country of birth; country of which citizen or subject; last permanent residence in the United States; intended future permanent residence; and time and port of last arrival in the United States; and if a United States citizen or national the facts on which claim to that status is based.

"(d) If the Commission shall find that the master or commanding officer, owner, or consignee of any vessel or aircraft, or the agent of any transportation line, as the case may be, has refused or failed to deliver any list or manifest required by subsection (a) or (b), or that the list or manifest delivered is not accurate and full, such master or commanding officer, owner, or consignee, or agent, as the case may be, shall pay to the Commission the sum of $10 for each person concerning whom such accurate and full list or manifest is not furnished, or concerning whom the manifest or list is not prepared and sworn to as prescribed by this section or by regulations issued pursuant thereto.

"(e) The Commission is authorized to prescribe the circumstances and conditions under which the list or manifest requirements of subsections (a) and (b) may be waived.

"SEC. 332. Detention of aliens for observation and examination; expense: (a) For the purpose of determining whether aliens, other than those who are nonexcludable under section 303. arriving at ports of the United States belong to any of the classes excluded by this act, by reason of being afflicted with any of the diseases or mental or physical defects or disabilities set forth in subsection (a) of section 301, or whenever the Commission has received information showing that such aliens are coming from a country or have embarked at a place where any of such diseases are prevalent or epidemic, such aliens shall be detained either aboard the vessel or at the airport of arrival of the aircraft, or at such other suitable place as the Commission may designate. Such detention shall, as the circumstances may require or justify, be for a sufficient time to enable the Commission to subject such aliens to observation and an examination sufficient to determine whether or not they belong to the excluded classes.

"(b) Pursuant to subsection (c) of section 333 of this act, such detention may be at the expense of the vesssel or aircraft on which such aliens arrive.

"SEC. 333. Temporary removal for examination upon arrival: (a) Upon the arrival at a port of the United States of any vessel or aircraft bringing aliens, the Commission officer at each port may order a temporary removal of such aliens other than those who are nonexcludable under section 303, for examination and inspection at a designated time and place, but such temporary removal shall not be considered a landing, nor shall it relieve vessels or aircraft, the transportation lines, or the masters, commanding officers, agents, owners, or consignees of the vessel or aircraft upon which such aliens are brought to any port of the United States from any of the obligations which, in case such aliens remain on board, would, under the provisions of this act, bind such vessels or aircraft, transportation lines, masters, commanding officers, agents, owners, or consignees. A temporary removal of such aliens from such vessels or aircraft ordered pursuant to this subsection shall be made by the Commission at the expense of the vessels or aircraft or transportation lines, or the masters, commanding officers, agents, owners, or consignees of such vessels, aircraft, or transportation lines, as provided in subsection (b) of this section and such vessels, aircraft, transportation lines, masters, commanding officers, agents, owners, or consignees, shall, so long as such removal lasts, be relieved of responsibility for the safekeeping of such aliens. Such vessels, aircraft, transportation lines, masters, commanding officers, agents, owners, or consignees, may with the approval of the Commission assume responsibility for the safekeeping of such aliens during their removal to a designated place for examination and inspection, in which event such removal need not be made by the Commission.

"(b) Whenever a temporary removal of such aliens is made under this section, the vessels or aircraft or transportation lines which brought them, and the masters, commanding officers, owners, agents, and consignees of the vessels, aircraft, or transportation lines upon which they arrived shall pay all expenses of such removal to a designated place for examination and inspection or other place of detention and all expenses arising during subsequent detention, pending a decision on such aliens' eligibility to enter the United States and until they are either allowed to land or returned to the care of the transportation lines or to the vessels or aircraft which brought them. Such expenses shall include maintenance, medical treatment in hospital or elsewhere, burial in the event of death, and transfer to the vessels, aircraft, or transportation lines in event of deportation, except where such expenses arise under section 336 (d) or in such cases as the Commission may prescribe in the case of aliens paroled into the United States temporarily under the provisions of section 311.

"(c) Any detention expenses and expenses incident to detention incurred (but not including expenses of removal to the place of detention) pursuant to section 332 and this section shall not be assessed against the vessel or aircraft or transportation line or the master, commanding officer, owner, agent, or consignee of the vessel, aircraft or transportation line if he or it did not know or could not have ascertained by exercise of reasonable diligence prior to the embarkation of the person transported that he was an alien; or that being an alien his visa or other documents authorizing entry were invalid or had expired; or that he was excludable under section 302 (b) (2) or (5).

"(d) Any refusal or failure to comply with the provisions of this section shall be punished in the manner specified in section 336 (b).

"SEC. 334. Physical and mental examination: The physical and mental examination of arriving aliens, other than aliens who are nonexcludable under section 303 of this act, shall be made by medical officers of the United States Public Health Service, who shall conduct all medical examinations and shall certify any physical and mental disease observed by them in any such alien. If medical officers of the United States Public Health Service are not available, physicians of not less than 4 years' professional experience may be employed for such service upon such terms as may be prescribed by the Commission. Such physical and mental examinations shall be conducted under administrative regulations prescribed by the Commission, and under medical regulations prescribed by the Surgeon General of the United State Public Health Service. Medical officers of the United States Public Health Service who have had special training in the diagnosis of mental disease shall be detained for duty or employed at such ports of entry as the Commission may designate and such medical officers shall be provided with suitable facilities for the detention and examination of all such arriving aliens who it is suspected may be excludable under section 302 (b) (2) and the services of interpreters shall be provided for such examination. Any alien determined excludable under this section may appeal to a board of medical officers of the United States Public Health Service, and such alien may introduce before such board expert medical testimony at his own cost and expense.

"SEC. 335. Inspection: The inspection, other than the physical and mental examination, of aliens, seeking admission or reentry to, or the privilege of passing through, the United States shall be conducted by Commission officers, under such regulations as the Commission may prescribe. Any person coming into the United States may be required by an authorized Commission officer to give under oath such information as will aid in determining whether he is a citizen of the United States or an alien; and, if an alien, to state under oath the purpose or purposes for which he comes, the length of time he intends to remain in the United States, whether or not he intends to remain in the United States permanently and such other items of information as will aid in determining whether he is excludable from the United States.

"SEC. 336. Immediate deportation of aliens excluded from admission or entering in violation of law: (a) Any alien (other than an alien crewman) arriving in the United States who is excluded under this act, shall be immediately deported to the country whence he came, on the vessel, aircraft, or transportation line bringing him, unless the Commission, in its discretion, concludes that immediate transportation is not practicable or proper. The cost of the maintenance including detention expenses and expenses incident to detention, as well as the transportation expense of the alien's deportation from the United States, shall be borne by the owner or owners of the vessel, aircraft, or transportation line on which he arrived, except that such maintenance cost and such transportation expense shall not be assessed against the owner or owners of such vessel or aircraft if he or they did not know and could not have ascertained by exercise of reasonable diligence, prior to the embarkation of the person transported, that he was an alien; or being an alien his visa or other documents authorizing entry were invalid or that he was excludable under section 302 (b) (2) or (5). Such expenses when paid by the owner or owners, or by the United States, may be recovered from such an alien who is both excluded and deported on grounds other than those contained in section 302 (b) (2).

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any person (1) to refuse to receive any alien ordered deported under this section back on board such vessel or aircraft or another vessel or aircraft owned or operated by the same interests; (2) to fail to detain any alien (other than an alien crewman) on board any such vessel or at the airport of arrival of the aircraft when required by this act or if so ordered by the Commission, or to fail or refuse to deliver him for medical or other inspection, or for further medical or other inspection, as and when so ordered by the Commission; (3) to refuse or fail to remove him from the United States to the country whence he came; (4) to fail to pay the cost of his maintenance while being detained as required by this section or section 333; (5) to take any fee, deposit, or consideration on a contingent basis to be kept in case the alien is admitted or returned in case he is excluded; or (6) knowingly to bring to the United States any alien (other than an alien crewman) excluded or deported under any provision of law unless such alien is in possession of unexpired visa or other documents issued to him, authorizing him to enter the United States. If the Commission shall determine that any person has violated any of the provisions of this section or of section 333 of this act, such person may be required by the Commission to pay a sum not to exceed $300 for each violation.

"(c) If the vessel or aircraft, which brought the alien who has been ordered deported, has left the United States and it is impracticable to deport the alien within a reasonable time by another vessel or aircraft owned by the same person, the cost of deportation may be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act and recovered from the owner.
